And now we have, we believe, answered all the questions put to us by "a Master Mason;" and can only in conclusion advise him, in case he wants any further information, to go to the books on the subject, which are, we presume, as accessible to him as they are to ourselves. A regular course of reading would probably do him some service, for, as far as we can make out, he is one of those "weak minds," those "superstitious and credulous spirits," to whom, according to the Freemasons themselves, it would be dangerous "precipitately to reveal the real aim of the craft," or to discover at once the full glare of the "brilliant and dazzling" light of the Masonic dispensation.

Men Wanted.

Permit me to call attention to the above as one of the especial wants of this time. Yes, we want men, true men; men of principle, men of integrity and uprightness of heart. Men of firmness of purpose, and promptness in action. Men who are always found on the side of justice and humanity, and who are not afraid or ashamed to defend the right and oppose the wrong, but will stand up boldly and denounce moral evil in whatever form it may be developed, men whose faith and works always agree.

Such men are safe counselors, and earnest workers. They may always be counted and relied on in any emergency. They will stand at their post in time of danger, or go straight forward in the discharge of duty whatever and whoever may oppose them. They are the men we want just now. Not cowards, not the faint-hearted, who cry out, "There's a lion in the way; I shall be slain in the streets!" Nor yet those miserable, selfish, deceitful, time-serving creatures, who are often loud in their professions of friendship and yet are found giving aid and comfort to the enemy. They want to be counted on the side of right, but cannot be depended on. Their conduct belies their professions; they hinder the work of reform; they strengthen the hands of the evil doer; they are a curse to society. Many of them "love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." They will not come to the light lest their deeds should be reproved. Away with them, and give us good and true men. Some, indeed there are. They have been tried and found faithful. They are a power for good in the land, a blessing to their race. But we want more of them. The cause of moral reform needs them. The friends of suffering humanity need their counsel and aid in the great work in which they are engaged. There is room for them in the ranks of the noble army of men and women, who are battling for the right, and earnestly laboring to dispel darkness and scatter light and truth throughout on our own and other lands. Tedrow, O.

The Judgment of the Great Whore.

BY DONALD CAMPBELL MCLAREN, D. D.

One of the seven angels having the seven vials of the wrath of God, said unto John, as recorded in Revelation xvii. chapter, "I will show to thee the judgment of the great whore . . . with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication." It is essential, and of course requisite, to a determination of the equity of a judicial sentence of condemnation to have a right understanding of the crime or guilt of the condemned. John had not before seen or heard of the woman. But the angel showed not only that she then was near to her overthrow and ruin in the judgment of God, but also that she, the woman, or those whom that personal name emblamatically represents, had been for ages in their iniquities, and in their baleful, powerful influence over the inhabitants and kings of the earth. The angel carrying John in spirit into a wilderness, there presented and portrayed to his view the woman, not as she would be in her own view, or in the view of the world, wondering after the beast, but as she would be in the omnisicent, just judgment of God. All this John accurately recorded, and his inspired record is a condensed, yet a complete, true and prophetical biography of the great whore in her degeneracy, from the first to the last of her existence on the earth. What John by divine inspiration wrote in Greek I will translate in English, as I am sure it ought to have been:—

3d v. And he carried me into a wilderness in spirit; and I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

4th. And the woman was having been arrayed in purple and scarlet, and having been decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication.

5th. And upon the forehead of her a name having been written, MYSTERY, Babylon the great, the mother of the harlots and of the abomination of the earth.

6th. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, and seeing her I wondered with great wonder:" (not with admiration; the noun in Greek is derived from the verb to wonder.

Now read what John heard as affirmed by "another voice from heaven," a call, a command. "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues; for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." Did not the voice from heaven certify that the woman emblemized a visible organized apostate church. Chap. xviii. 56. Now read what John heard from heaven by the same voice, of her felicitous, confident self-estimation. "How she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously—for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow and shall see no sorrow," verse 7th. She said nothing of the beast that carried her, when she was sitting, ruling "over peoples and multitudes and nations and tongues." Now any one who reads with due thought what the voice from heaven said descriptive of the woman as to her confident, fearless self-glorification, in her concealed complaisant alliance with the beast, may see the mystery of the woman as to her sins and iniquities, as they really were in the infallible judgment of God. Therefore the angel in showing that judgment, not only said what John recorded, but exhibited her fully and distinctly to his view, as she really was in the sight of God, on her forehead a name having been written, Mystery. This is a name in its significancy, characteristic of the woman; and the angel fully unfolded to John that mystery in the wilderness. The angel in showing the judgment of the great whore, told John, as he had shown him, and John had seen in the wilderness, that the beast that was and is not, carryeth the woman.

Now what did the angel show and depict to John of the beast that was? John records, "I saw a woman sitting on a beast full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns." That is the beast that was "to continue 42 months." (Chap. xiii. 5.) And coming up out of the abyss, "shall make war against and overcome and kill them," the two witnesses in the temple of God. Chap. xi. 7. "And is yet to come up out of the abyss and go," or "take itself away secretly into perdition." The latter is the classical meaning of the verb upago, as everyone may see in Liddell and Scott's Greek Lexicon; and I think it is here its Scriptural meaning. The last of the beast and of the false prophet in time, and at its end, is predicted in chap. xix. 20, and xx. 10. Now read in the latter chapter as John wrote it: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them who had been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, and who had not worshiped the beast, nor his image, nor received the mark on their forehead or in their hand." The word translated in our English Bible "were beheaded" is in the original a participle in the passive voice, in the pluperfect tense. This is a summary prediction of what it was before predicted would in the earlier part of the 42 months be done by the beast to whom "the great dragon that old serpent called the devil, and Satan, gave his power and throne and great authority." See chap. xii. 9: xiii. 2. That is the beast which was, and is not. There is the mystery, the unseen reality of the intimate reciprocal fellowship, the alliance of the woman and the beast—the woman sitting on the beast, and the beast carrying the woman. Now notice what is here predicted descriptive of the beast having on his heads the name of blasphemy. "All the world wondered after the beast, and they worshiped the dragon that gave power unto the beast and they worshiped the beast saying, 'who is like unto the beast!' And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things, and blasphemies. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name." Is not this a violation of the third commandment? "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for Jehovah will not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain." That command, like the command "Thou shalt not steal," is broken in doing what it forbids. And besides, if a man binds himself by any oath to secrecy it is what God does not require or allow in the second table of the moral law. What is here revealed of the beast that "was, and is not," as to his being a wonder in the habitable world, will have the same distinctive characteristic in the view of the world, when the beast that was, and is not, yet is, as shown by the angel having a vial of the wrath of God in showing the judgment of the great whore. Even then, "They who dwell on the earth shall wonder whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was and is not, and yet is." The books will be opened, and another book be opened before the great white throne, and Him that will sit upon it. Those who live unto God will see nothing to wonder at with reverence, in seeing the beast as it is in the sight of God; not as it is in the sight of men, who "wonder after the beast," and worship the beast saying, who is like the beast? saying it boastfully. . . .

I will here state that in all the comments I have seen, the woman is represented to be "that man of sin to be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or is worshiped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God." 2 Thes. ii. 3, 4. "Then shall that wicked be revealed, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders; and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness on them that perish." Does not this agree with what is revealed of the beast? It is the beast of which the angel said twice, It shall go into perdition, ch. xvii. 8, 11. There is no statement of this import with respect to the woman.

The three symbolical terms, woman, beast, and city of Babylon, are not synonymous, except so far as what is affirmed of one symbol is indicated or expressed of another. There is nothing to show in what was shown or told by the angel to indicate or imply that the beast is the woman or the woman the beast. There is nothing to show that the woman is the city, or the city the woman. It was only as a woman that she could be "the mother of harlots." After the angel had related to John her desolation by the beast in its impulsive hatred, he said, "The woman thou sawest is that great city," on which the angel had poured out the vial of God's wrath, the city divided into three parts. Nothing was there revealed of the woman or beast. No commentator has a right or license to transfer or attribute the distinct characteristics of the woman to the beast, or of the beast to the woman, or of either of them to the city, Babylon, its symbolical name. The woman was made desolate; the city was fallen, was fallen.

I have before referred to what "a voice from heaven commanded, Come out from her my people," which plainly implies that the woman was really and professedly a visible church, though in apostacy. It was revealed that the woman sitting on many waters, which are peoples, multitudes and nations, having diverse languages, would be carried everywhere by the beast that was, and is not and yet is. The beast, the man of sin, therefore, symbolizes an immense community of men of diverse nations, having different languages, yet having intelligible fellowship one with another—a community self-organized, self-governed, and with an inherent self-administration, independent of all other governments civil or ecclesiastical, on the face of the earth, "with power and signs and lying wonders," making many who dwell on the earth to wonder. I may, if spared, show more of the beast that was.

All the comments I have seen are founded on the arbitrary traditional error that the beast was the Roman empire, and have thus made what John wrote more obscure. I will give an extract from Scott's explanatory notes on this chapter. "The seven heads of the beast signified seven forms of government or succession of rulers. They all appeared in vision at once upon the beast, but in fact five of them were fallen at the time when the Apostle had the vision; namely, kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, and military tribunes; one of them subsisted even that of emperors; and another was not yet come, which when it came would continue only a short time. He quotes from Bishop Newton as follows: "The beast, therefore, on which the woman sitteth is the Roman government in its last form, and this, all must acknowledge is papal and not imperial." Then Scott subjoins, "For the last head was the only one which existed when the woman sat on the beast; and was therefore spoken of as the beast itself."

The Only Divine Principle in Freemasonry.

B. F. Moomaw in the Weekly Pilgrim (German Baptist) concludes a review of the Masonic claim on ancient worthies as follows:—

So much for the pretended divine authority for such an institution or organization, if indeed there is any proof of an organization in all the testimonies introduced. So far, I cannot perceive any, simply that men were endowed by their Creator and Maker of all things, with a mechanical talent capable of being cultivated as circumstances from time to time seemed to demand. If this constitutes Freemasonry I would ask are not all mankind Freemasons? Have those calling themselves Masons more or have others less of this endowment? Have not the females of our race their share of mechanical genius? Why then are they excluded from its secrets and mysteries? No, nor does it stop here, upon the same hypothesis do we not plainly see that the inferior animals come in for their share of the honors of Masonry. Passing by the red man of the forest with his booth or his wigwam, his moccasin and well-arranged strings of beads, &c. We invite attention to the beaver, the otter, the muskrat, and many other of the inhabitants of the water and the woods. The eagle too, wisely selecting his sight beyond the reach of danger, displaying the most consumate skill in the arrangement of his building for the comfort and protection of its tender brood, and among many of the more inferior of the feathered tribes do we discover an equal share of masonic or if you please architectural skill. Coming next to the insect family, we introduce the honey bee as a great Past Master Mason who surpasses all others in architecture, in the methodical arrangement of his habitation for the comfort and convenience of his colony.

So much then for the divine authority for the craft as exhibited in the organization of operative Masonry, but it must pretend as a basis in some way or other to have the sanction of divine authority, or else the pious portion of society would not for a moment entertain a favorable thought toward it, and could not be induced to participate, but as we have said in a former chapter of this essay all these pretended evidences of authority from Holy Writ is merely a necessary afterthought, and never was thought of as a foundation originating the craft even of operative Masons, much less speculative, according to the present form.

How it Happened.

We have all heard with joy the good news of the final determination of the Commissioners to close the Centennial grounds on the Sabbath, but pleasing as was the bare announcement of this decision, the reported particulars of the meeting at which this decision was reached was positively refreshing. It appears from the report in the Sunday School Times that Mr. Corlies of Rhode Island, who furnished the great engine for Machinery Hall, said that much as he had enjoyed working to make the Exhibition a success, yet if it was not to be closed on Sundays, nothing was left of his best hopes but ashes, and he could only wish that all he had done was utterly blotted out. Prof. Campbell of Indiana, predicted that if the Exhibition was open on Sundays it would not only be contrary to the custom of State fairs throughout the country, but the slums of New York, Baltimore and other cities would be emptied into Philadelphia and the city would be overrun with the vilest class in all these communities.

Gen. Hawley the President of the Commission, Col. Halliday of Virginia, and Gov. McCormick of Arizona, also spoke earnestly against the opening and immediately there were loud calls of "Question! Question!'

At this moment an impressive incident occurred. Mr. Haynes of Nevada, rose and said: "Mr. President, before the question is taken I wish to say a word. I feel like a returned prodigal and I want to make a confession. More than twenty years ago I went out from an eastern home to the far west. I have lived since then where we scarcely have a Sabbath. But as I have listened here this afternoon old memories have come back to me." The speaker here struggled with strong emotion and continued with choking voice: "All these truths were familiar to me long ago, and it seems to me again to-day that I hear them repeated as I used to listen to them from the lips of my sainted mother, as every evening I kneeled by her side in prayer. I want to give my vote in favor of observing the Christian Sabbath."

Is it any wonder that the effect of such a speech should be at such a time overpowering. It really seems to us about the best thing that has happened this Centennial year. It looks as though we were about, not only to commemorate the valor of the Fathers, but also to emulate their virtues.

We have only one regret in this connection and that is that the final vote should have been twenty-seven to nine instead of unanimous. There is sufficient cause, however, for praise to God in the fact that the vote was three to one.—The Exponent.

Prayer should be the key of the day, and the lock of the night.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 8, 1876

I expect to vote the Anti-masonic ticket for President if I live to vote on the next election, although I don't understand why Indians should be entitled to justice any more than any other man. Until I have more light on the subject, I object to No. 11 in the platform as sounding too much like the brag which I hear so often about "Young America," but not from old and experienced men who have kept themselves free from rum, tobacco and secret societies. If Congress undertakes to alter the manner of choosing President of the United States, while I have my reason and the use of my tongue, I shall try to oppose it; for I believe the men who fixed that matter knew as much about human nature as most men know now.

NATHANIEL C. MOORE.

War is a fearful game to play at, and a dreadful one to lose at. Stand not as unconcerned spectators, and share not by your silence, in the crimes of a system in which conquest is full of calamity, and victory ought only to be celebrated by tears. Listen to the dictates of reason, and denounce a system which, as an appeal to physical strength, only approximates man to the brute. Let us preserve in the dissemination of Christian pacific principles, convinced that they alone can turn the instruments of war into the implements of husbandry, and fill the world with all the blessings of universal Peace.—William Hunt.

The National Reform League.

We give below the official address of a new movement designed to influence the Presidential conventions at Cincinnati and St. Louis. We know not the extent of the movement, but its object is just and its principles sound.

ADDRESS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The National Reform League is a popular movement intended to unite, and transform into action, that sentiment of the people which everywhere demands REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE, AND HONEST GOVERNMENT.

In the accomplishment of its purposes, it does not aspire to competition with either of the existing parties in the wielding of political power; but pledges itself to constant and earnest efforts for the overthrow of every influence, whether represented by parties or individuals, which has a tendency to foster or promote corruption.

As an organization formed by representatives from the different States, it will seek to give such expression to the demands of patriotic and independent citizens, as shall secure through the agency of the existing parties, or by such other means as it may be necessary to adopt, a policy in harmony with the best sentiment of the people.

Its members regard with alarm the state of affairs which permits the election of venal and incompetent men to positions of trust; the bartering, for unworthy considerations, of appointments to places of honor and profit, and the consequent shameful malfeasance in office. They look upon the corruption by which these things are rendered possible, as a cause for immediate and earnest action on the part of the great mass of the people, who do not recognize, as their proper representatives, the trafficking politicians into whose hands the management of the National affairs has so largely fallen.

They believe that the redemption of the country from the hands of those who have thus betrayed the trust of the people, demands the exercise,—through the existing parties if possible, independently of them, if necessary,—of a power vested in the hands of those whose utterances shall represent the intelligence and patriotism of the country; and whose work, uninfluenced by the hidden machinery of party politics, shall be open, honest and thorough.

Thus believing, the members of the National Reform League will stand pledged to the use of all legitimate means for securing the nomination and election to the Chief Magistracy of the Nation, and to all minor offices, National, State and local, of men who shall worthily represent the people, and the institutions of the United States.

In confident expectation of hearty co-operation, the Executive Committee of the League asks the aid of patriots, in every part of the land, in the work of forming auxiliary organizations, for the purposes, and upon the general basis, herein set forth; and to this end they invite early responses, addressed to the Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Henry Randall Waite, P. O. Box, 1740, N. Y. City, from all good citizens, irrespective of party:—from those who glory in the fact that their fathers were the founders of our Republic; from those who have come from other lands to lay their allegiance upon the Nation's altar, and to vie with her sons in loyal devotion; from all who believe in "the government of the people, by the people, and for the people," and who would vindicate the fair fame of the land which has been, and by the grace of God, will continue to be, a noble example of such government.

Temperance.

The first anniversary of the National Christian Temperance Alliance was held in Pittsburg, May 9th to 11th. It recommended that every pastor preach at least one sermon a year against the great evil of intemperance. Rev. Dr. E. E. Swift was re-elected President; Dr. Robert Audley Browne and Rev. D. C. Babcock, secretaries; and G. F. Turner of Allegheny, treasurer.

We have heard of ladies becoming so much disgusted with the odors of tobacco about their physicians that they dismissed them and employed others who would be free from such irritating accompaniments. And they did right. The smell of a man who is thoroughly saturated with tobacco is as hard for sensitive nerves to bear as many forms of acute disease. But here is a case more serious. A Christian lady lay on her death-bed. Her pastor visited her and in order to be tender toward her in her weakness, leaned close to her ear when speaking of Jesus and the hopes of the Gospel. She heard the words, but they failed to give consolation, for with every sentence there was a breath of tobacco which seemed to poison all his ministry. He retired, and ere he had time to come back she had passed away, not, however, without having first requested that her funeral services might be dispensed by a minister who would breathe no nicotine over her coffin. And the pastor of her own church had to stand by rolling his quid, while another taught the lesson of the hour.—United Presbyterian.

A Surgeon to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Sir Henry Thompson, F. R. C. S., Surgeon Extraordinary to His Majesty the King of the Belgians, and Surgeon to University College Hospital, has addressed the following letter to His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury:

"I have long had the conviction that there is no greater cause of evil, moral and physical, in this country than the use of alcoholic beverages. I do not mean by this that extreme indulgence which produces drunkenness. The habitual use of fermented liquors to an extent far short of what is necessary to produce that condition, and such as is quite common in all ranks of society, injures the body and diminishes the mental power to an extent which I think few people are aware of. Such, at all events, is the result of observation during more than twenty years of professional life devoted to hospital practice, and to private practice in every rank above it. Thus, I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of some of the most painful and dangerous maladies which come under my notice, as well as those which every medical man has to treat, to the ordinary and daily use of fermented drink taken in the quantity which is conventionally deemed moderate. Whatever may be said in regard to its evil influences upon the mental and moral faculties, as to the fact above stated, I feel that I have a right to speak with authority; and I do so solely because it appears to me a duty, especially at this moment, not to be silent on a matter of such extreme importance. I know full well how unpalatable is such truth, and how such a declaration brings me into painful conflict, I had almost said with the national sentiments and the time-honored prescriptive usages of our race. Cherishing such convictions, I rejoice to observe an endeavor to organize, on a large scale, in the National Church, a special and systematic plan for promoting temperance, and I cannot but regard this as an event of the highest significance. I believe that no association in this country has means to influence society in a favorable direction at all comparable to that existing in the English Church, and the example and teaching of its clergy may do more than any of the other associations which have long labored with the same object to diminish the national ignorance on this subject, and the consequent national vice. My main object is to express my opinion as a professional man in relation to the habitual employment of fermented liquors as a beverage. But if I venture one step further it would be to express a belief that there is no single habit in this country which so much tends to deteriorate the qualities of the race, and so much disqualifies it for endurance in that competition which in the nature of things must exist, and in which struggle the prize of superiority must fall to the best and to the strongest."

—This is the way some of our modern politicians serve and honor their country abroad: Odd-fellow Past Grand Sire Logan, having managed to get the appointment of U. S., minister to China, made his administration of the office illustrious by establishing seven lodges of the order in that priest-ridden country.

Reform News and Notices.

The National Christian Association, which has for its especial object the removal of those despotic, idolatrous and deistical associations commonly called lodges, will hold its Ninth Anniversary in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Ill., June 20, 21 and 22, 1876; the opening session being at 8 o'clock on the evening of June 20th.

The business meeting of the Association will be held in the Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison St., at 10-30 o'clock of June 20th. Members will find the office on the second floor at the head of the stairs.

The Board of Directors have selected Saturday, June 3d, as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret associations. Those who observe it are especially requested to remember the Convention in prayer. Ministers of the Gospel of that Saviour who is shut out from these secret lodges are requested to preach on the subject of Secretism on Sabbath, June 4th.

—A mistake occurred in the notice of the Anniversary last week. It is the EIGHTH Anniversary, but the ninth national meeting.

—The General Agent has been settling up his private business for the last week or two. A card from him appears on the 8th page.

Just as the last week's paper was receiving its last impressions, word came from Bro. Floyd, Pres. of the Indiana Association, that the State Convention appointed for the 23rd inst. would be postponed, as there had not been time to make arrangements. We are sorry that some friends in Indiana were disappointed at this postponement, but no doubt the State Political Convention was better attended.

—Bro. Hinman, Illinois State Agent, announces that until agents are appointed in Iowa and Wisconsin, he will accept invitations to visit places in those States if his expenses are guaranteed. We hope that he will be kept so well employed at home that there will be no time to go beyond its lines. Friends, however, in either State mentioned will find his labors blest of the Lord if they can secure them.

—Elder Baird writes from Royalton, Pa., that he expects to preach next Lord's day, 28th, at East Sandy, Venango Co., Pa., and during the three days following will deliver a course of lectures against the lodge.

Progress in Western Missouri.

BAKER, Mo., May 3, 1876.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I intended when I wrote you from Osceola to give you a more extended report of my lectures at Roscoe on the evenings of April 10 and 11, but I have been so pressed since my return home that I have not found time. I here will send you a letter written from Roscoe, one week after the lectures, to the Osceola Sentinel, and published in that paper on the 22nd of April. I have good reasons for believing the letter was written by a Royal Arch Mason, and as such is an emphatic endorsement of Ronayne's expose; any way I found at Roscoe a Royal Arch who was led to renounce Masonry two years ago, by reading John Q. Adams' letters on Masonry. He was formerly W. M. of a lodge in Illinois. When he had examined Ronayne's Hand Book I asked him concerning the truth of it. He replied that it was true, absolutely true, every word of it. He further said that the wood cuts in the book represented scenes as familiar to him almost as the letters of the alphabet. He said Masonry was a snare, a delusion, and a lie. He said considering the thing as a whole he knew of but one word in the language that would express a correct idea of the institution, and that was simply "damnable." He said he had known a number of cases in the lodge where the candidate had begged and prayed to be excused from taking certain parts of the obligations, but he had never known a single case where any were excused. That he has been a Mason there is no doubt, for he has been recognized as such by Masons of this and adjoining counties; and owing to his knowledge of Masonic law, at least one lodge has referred matters of lodge duties to him for his advice and opinion. He is a man of rare intellectual attainments, and withal I believe him to be a Christian. I think it highly probable that he will yet take the field as a lecturer vs. the institution. And should he do so I am satisfied that he will be a host within himself.

The demand for lecture work in this section is increasing. And I ask the readers of the Cynosure to pray God to raise up or send to this field of the work, laborers more worthy and better qualified than is your unworthy servant, W. M. Love.

The Sentinel letter is as follows:

Ed. Sentinel: Sir—Your notice of Rev. Wm. Love's lectures on Masonry, in your last issue, has led me to believe that you have no objection, individually, to the efforts he is making to root out that institution. His lectures were given to large and appreciative audiences, the Masons felt and knew that he was striking hard and telling blows against the institution. The lecturer stated that the institution, not the membership, was the object of his attack; yet in full hearing of this statement, one of the members of Roscoe lodge rose up and charged the lecturer with attacking his private character. This Mr. Love denied, and stated that his object was to show the corruption and iniquity of the institution and the evil tendencies of such an oath-bound society. He showed clearly that the oaths taken by the members were immoral, not judicial, unlawful and hence not obligatory on the members. He also showed by clear, full and direct evidence that the so-called secrets of Masonry were no longer secrets, that the whole thing had been published to the world, first by Wm. Morgan, nearly fifty years ago; secondly, by Elder Bernard; and thirdly by Edmond Ronayne, late the Worshipful Master of Keystone Lodge, in Chicago, Illinois. He read largely from acknowleged Masonic authorities and text books, and gave from Ronayne's exposition (every word of which is absolutely true, and every Master Mason who reads it knows it to be so) the horrible oaths which all Masons take upon entering the lodge. Many ladies were present, and when the lecturer described the manner in which their husbands, brothers, sons, were led into the lodge hoodwinked, neither naked or clothed, legs and feet bare, a rope around the neck, and only a shirt and drawers on, they saw in his clearly drawn word picture a sight such as they had never dreamed of. He showed the institution to be unchristian in all its teachings, contrary to the spirit of our form of national government, subversive of our institutions and that the shadow of it was corrupting the fountains of public justice, and bringing widespread evils upon our land. He made an impressive appeal to all Christian men to forsake the institution, and solemnly warned the young against entering its dark and horrible portals. He has done a good work here, and should he return to extend his remarks upon a future occasion, he will meet a warm and friendly greeting from the thoughtful men and women of this neighborhood, who feel themselves under obligation to him for the light that he has shed on the dark ways of Masonry. God speed and bless him in his work.

HELD BY TEACHING AND RULING ELDERS OF THE INDIANA ELDERSHIP OF THE CHURCH OF GOD IN INDIANA; HELD AT YELLOW LAKE BETHEL, KOSCIUSCO COUNTY, INDIANA.

Agreeable to adjournment and previous notice the convention met as above, on the 6th of May at 9 o'clock A. M., 1876, and was opened by religious exercises, consisting of reading a lesson of Scripture, singing and prayer. After which the convention was organized by electing J. S. Shock, Chairman, and H. C. Smith, Secretary.

The reading of the journal of the convention held at Lake Bethel was called for; after hearing it read it was approved. The reading of that part of the report of the standing committee of the Indiana Eldership relating to the journal of our last convention was called by Bro. J. Martin. Speeches were then made by Elders J. Martin, C. Clem and J. S. Shock upon its merits and disapproved by the convention. A committee on resolutions was then appointed by the convention, consisting of Bros. J. Martin, C. Clem and B. F. Bear.

Bro. Martin then addressed the convention, assigning some legitimate reasons for holding anti-secret society conventions in the Indiana Eldership; being ministers and brethren thereof, which are approved.

Bro. Bear addressed the convention to considerable interest on the workings of secretism among us. Elder C. Clem then followed with corresponding testimony on the same subject.

Bro. Benjamin Ulsh, the Vice President of the Indiana State Christian Association, for Kosciusko Co., was called. He replied in a speech respecting the doctrine and practical workings of secret societies in general, also the refusal of the U. B. church for Stoddard or others to lecture, and other matters of interest.

On motion we then adjourned to meet at 2 o'clock P. M. Prayer by Bro. B. F. Bear.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Prayer by Bro. C. Clem. Committee on resolutions reported:

1*st*, Resolved; That we as Elders of the Church of God, in the State of Indiana in convention assembled, dissent from the course the standing committee has taken in taking into the ministry men belonging to oath-bound secret organizations.

2*nd*, Resolved; That as the Eldership of the church of God in the State of Indiana has departed from its original compact and agreement as respecting secret organizations; therefore we would do all in our power to bring it back its primeval state.

3*d*, Resolved; That we, as Elders of the church of God, disapprove of the proceeding of the standing committee of the Indiana Eldership in misrepresenting Elder J. S. Shock in the report of their late meeting held at Syracuse, Kosciusko Co., Ind., March 9th, 1876.

4*th*, Resolved; That we as a convention, highly disapprove of the doings of the late standing committee at Syracuse, Ind., on March 9th, 1876, in misrepresenting a resolution passed by our convention at Lake Bethel, Ind., in which we do not charge the Eldership with secretly plotting with Masonry, but we do charge Masonry with secretly plotting in the Eldership, &c.

5*th*, Resolved; That we highly appreciate the Christian Cynosure in the work of reformation in which it is engaged, and pledge ourselves to aid in its circulation.

6*th*, Resolved; also that we recommend the reading and circulation of books and tracts published by Ezra A. Cook & Co. and others, believing that they are doing a good work and convey very much truthful information relating to the practical workings of secret societies.

7*th*, Resolved; That we tender a vote of thanks to the brethren and sisters and friends of Yellow Lake, for their kindness and hospitality manifested during our convention.

8*th*, Resolved; That we heartily desire that the brethren belonging to secret societies would not take out a demit, but openly denounce them and proclaim themselves free from such yoke of bondage and actively engage themselves in proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ.

9*th*, Resolved; That we as the Church of God, deeply feel the oppression of not having free defense through the Church Advocate, as in Bro. Stock's case.

B. Martin, C. Clem, B. F. Bear, Committee.

The report was considered item by item and adopted.

Bro. G. W. Hutchings then spoke to the convention and also read a letter from his brother's wife relating to the death of her husband in confirmation of the fact that secret societies do not support the widows and orphans of deceased members. Bros. Wm. Bigler, Hutchings, Hohman, Ulsh, Shock and sister Esther Smith and others then profitably addressed the convention in uttering words of counsel, sympathy and encouragement.

A motion prevailed that the sentiments constituting the speech of Elder J. S. Shock in the financial meeting at Syracuse, Ind., on the 7th of March, 1876. and especially that part of which the standing committee complains in the Church Advocate of March 29th, 1876, is substantially true.

A vote of thanks was tendered Bros. Uish and Hutchings of the U. P. church for their aid during our meeting.

On motion adjourned to meet on Friday evening, November 3rd, 1876.

Prayer by Bro. J. Tucker.

J. S. Shock, Chairman.

H. C. Smith, Secretary.

Our Centennial Letter.

The Great Exhibition—The Overshadowing Lodge—The Cynosure Stand and its Visitors—Helping Hands—Seed-sowing.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 13th, 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—I am here amid a profusion of wonders of many nations, developing the sharpness of human genius and skill; the results of which are here before and all around me, a wilderness of beauty and gorgeous loveliness. The one great thought that these suggest, is the wonderful endowment of mind that God has bestowed upon man and distributed with such an astonishing approach to equality among all nations here represented. And these national representatives are from all around the globe, and many of them had never achieved much prestige for skill and genius in this country till now; or if so, I am unadvised in regard to it. To undertake a description of the almost endless variety of the products of skill and cunning workmanship, would be futile. It would nearly exhaust Webster's unabridged dictionary or at least make some approach to it. I shall not attempt it. I may hereafter give some account of some things. But my present object is to speak of my work here and what relates to it.

First then, I am here in charge as has already been published, of Ezra A. Cook & Co., publications against secret societies. Here, where perhaps, is the grandest temple for Masonic worship on the continent, and possibly the grandest in the world, and whence issue streams of influence, that like cords of darkness and chains of steel bind to itself as so many supporters, the minor secret orders. The Masonic power here reminds me of what I saw in 1837. The Aurora Borealis filled the whole canopy of heaven with a red glare streaming from a circular, dark centre piece in the earth, as dark as blackness, that painted the wintry white carpeting of earth with the redness of blood. So from this dark Masonic centre issues an influence, tinged with human gore, derived from its past acts and its bloody oaths and penalties, that permeates our body politic, perverts justice, bribes courts and jurors, muzzles the pulpit, fetters the press, fosters dishonesty in commerce, and protects murder and treason. It gluts the channels of righteousness with the debris of corrupted morals and perverted minds, and gives the colors of cruelty and barbarism to all it characterizes, over which is cunningly thrown the mantle of pretended charity and benevolence, to secrete its ugliness, but it cannot.

Well, here I am, under the powers of this colossal power. I said under, they think so, but I beg leave to differ. In their self-exaltation they so far as I know, design not to look at this little germ of truth and moral force. They seem to think it insignificant and powerless, but I see it is the young stripling David with his sling going out against Goliath; the single-handed Moses grappling the power and authority of the kingdom of Egypt; the obscure Nazarene chasing away moral darkness with the light of life.

But I must leave this generalizing and mention a few particulars, that to me seem interesting. Most who pass my stand, if they see our beautiful banner, or sign on the book case, lean away, and shy off, looking back as if to be sure that it does not bite them. But some comes right up with an honest look, and freely talk with me and tell me their belief is that the whole range of secretism is a huge fraud, and take freely of our leaflets, so pregnant with truth, and glad to get them, and some promise unasked, to call again. The numbers who call are increasing, which affords me comforting encouragement.

Now a word about mine host, the Rev. A. B. Hubbard, who in an early day was one of our Illinois Baptist pastors. I find him one of God's noble men, whole-hearted in this, as in all Christian effort. He stands by me, and gladly and fearlessly affords me all the aid he can. He and his excellent Christian wife leave nothing undone to make my sojourn with them comfortable and pleasant. May the good Lord reward them. Then again I met with my old friend and co-worker, the Rev. Thos. Goodwin, now in the rooms of the Baptist Publication Society in this city, whose acquaintance I made thirty-five years ago in southern Ohio, who warmly greeted me and spoke approvingly of our work, and craved the blessing of heaven upon me and our work. I also hear that several of the pastors of different churches and denominations in this city are with us; while some seem to be so unwise as to think that they can entertain Christ and Belial, and so in themselves blend heaven and its opposite. May God have mercy upon them!

And just here let me suggest that in my mind it is a deep and abiding conviction, that God only is equal to the work of over-throwing this colossal evil, and that if our efforts are ever crowned with success, it will be in answer to prayer, and prayer accompanied with fasting; for I am sure this is of "The kind that goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

Well, one other encouraging case. A young man stopped at my stand, and in speaking rather lightly of our effort, also spoke favorably of Masonry, who in answer to a question informed me he was a three degree Mason. I told him if he would carefully examine the nature of the institution he would cease to approve of it. He wished to know why I thought so, to which I replied, "You have, as a Mason, sworn that Jesus' saying is untrue, that his prophecy shall not be fulfilled, for he says, 'whatsoever is spoken in the ear in the closet shall be revealed upon the housetop,' you say it shall not be revealed. You have sworn that you will ever conceal and never reveal. There you are right against Christ." He then candidly acknowledged this was so and it was something to be thought of. I then told him, they, the members of the fraternity, had drawn him in without giving him an opportunity to know the wickedness of it, as they were still doing with other young men all over the country, and much more of the same, and he left, manifestly with a serious conviction that he had been duped and his confidence abused.

Now I have one pressing request to offer; that all the friends of God and righteousness, should pray for all of us who are engaged in this thankless and onerous work. More, if God will, in due time. A. D. Freeman.

Work for the Centennial and General Conference.

Editor Cynosure:—I am now in for the Centennial Exhibition. I had partly given up the idea of going myself, on the account of my age (seventy years), and infirmities, but learning that our grand establishment was going to be exhibited down there, it has almost put new life into me and a strong desire to be there. But I am in the hands of my God and he can just do with me as he pleases. I know he wants me to help along with the work, and to this end you will find five dollars for the tract cause; as Ezra A. Cook & Co., give one dollar for the free distribution of tracts for every dollar contributed, that will make my mite ten dollars; would it were more! O I am happy, my brethren, while I am occasionally casting my mite into the treasury of the Lord.

The other day I obtained on my petition, to the M. E. General Conference, forty-eight names opposed to secret orders. I have been advertising myself and am pretty well known around here, and meet with a great deal of opposition and disapprobation and persecution, but it matters not to me while God approves and blesses me, I still keep singing:

"Who, O Lord, when life is o'er
Shall to heaven's blest mansions soar?
Who, an ever welcome guest,
In thy holy place shall rest,
He, whose heart thy love has warmed;
He, whose will to thine conformed,
Bids his life unsullied run;
He, whose words and thoughts are one;
He, who shuns the sinner's road,
Loving those who love their God;
Who, with faith and hope unfeigned
Treads the path by thee ordained;
He who trusts in Christ alone,
Not in aught himself hath done,
He, Great God; shall be thy care
And thy choicest blessing share."

God makes afflictions inlets to the soul of more sweet and full enjoyment of his blessed self.

I remain ever with you in this our labor of love for the good of mankind and freedom generally.

Joseph Keel, Sr.

Why Don't they Speak Out?

Drar Cynosure:—I have been an alternate reader of you for a year, and am taking you this year myself, and as we believe you are impartial, we want to inquire why they don't speak out in reading this paper? I ometimes see where a sermon has been preached against secret societies by an M. E. or a Baptist or a F. M. or a U. P. minister, and where lectures have been delivered in churches of nearly all other denominations except the Evangelical church. Now we have a name to live and why should we be dead. If the institution (Masonry) is good we should know it, and if not then warn us of the danger, both through the pulpit and the press; but alas! it has its hand over the mouth of the pulpit so far as I know and it has chloriformed the press so that even the epistle which claims to be living—behold, upon this subject of so much importance it is dead. The unfruitful works of darkness rules apparently, and if a minister preaches the whole gospel (which he cannot do without reproving them) they will soon rule him to silence or out of the ministry. Some of our ministers, however, take strong positions. One with whom I am acquainted, said to his audience, "I tell them (secret society men), that I am too old and don't know enough to join the lodge. I don't know anything about their secrets, but if they can get to heaven and belong to the lodge I won't lay a straw in their way. Ignorance seems then to be desirable, for books, tracts and papers are scattered broadcast over the land, but those ministers want to carry a little water on both shoulders. But Jesus said, "He that is not for me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad," and we are under no obligation to support such men. Speak out and fear not them that have power to kill the body only.

An Evangelist Member.

A Seceder's Reflections.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I wrote you over a year ago that "I was or had been a member of four different secret societies, consequently had good cause to appreciate your paper," and since that time have seen nothing to dissuade me in the least, but rather to confirm me more and more in the opposition that nothing good can come out of secret combinations for personal protection, or for supposed laudable objects, for when there is an apparent gain in some respects they are more than counterbalanced by loss of moral rectitude, valuable time and money in keeping up the organization of the societies. I have with sorrow witnessed old people who have grown gray in the Master's service cease to attend at places of worship for the only reason that their interest in "meetin" was lost, and love for the order taken its place in their hearts. I have well nigh made shipwreck of my own faith in the same way, and trust that I have been permitted to see the danger to which I was fast hastening, before it was too late to retrace my steps, and would warn all young people, not to try the same experiment, for it is difficult to retrace your steps.

I have seen classes so thinned down in numbers that we have despaired of meeting until another protracted effort should revive and reclaim the backslidden and muster in new recruits, to "run well for a little season only," for the lack of proper nursing fathers and mothers in the church to take the place of those who have gone out after other and strange gods, and have forgotten to return to their Father's house as did the prodigal son.

I wish to say to you that since I became a reader of the Cynosure I have seen persons resort to their wits end to find answers to questions put in a jesting way; as for instance to the M. E. minister, Mr.—"Mr. E. is a good brother Mason?" The answer was (though an entire stranger), "Yes, and a good man." And at another time when the conversation was about the ill treatment of a widowed sister of the church by a Mr. L. (who was understood by us to be a Mason, but not so by the minister), he remarked that he was a rascal, when I replied that I did not expect he would say as much as that. After studying for a few moments he replied that we were not bound to uphold one another in villany. And at another time when looking over "Masonry at a Glance" in the Cynosure, he said it was not correct. On being asked what part was not correct, after a considerable of a pause he pointed to the strong grip of the Master Mason degree and said it was not correct, and dropped the subject as a disagreeable one.

There are a goodly number of persons in this county that are anti's, but are too poor to take more than one paper and feel that they must patronize their church paper, but express kind wishes for the Cynosure. M. H.

P. S. Am looking forward to the time when we may be able to organize an auxiliary society in this county, and often wonder why there is not more done towards organizing a State Association opposed to secret societies. Are there not enough earnest ones in the State of Kansas? M. H.

[If Bro. H. will look on page nine he will read the names of the officers of the Kansas Association; and if he will write to the Secretary much good may result.—Ed.]

The Lodge from a Southern Outlook.

Savannah, Ga., May, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:

I enclose an article from the Dublin Nation which tells some plain truths in reference to the un-Christian principles of Freemasonry. Here in the South, where I am traveling for the benefit of my health, you find also the Upas tree of secretism which is strong to blight the bloom of Christian grace; while secretism is strong it is not imprudent and defiant, but is rather apologetic in its tactics. The dupes of the lodge, who have never advanced to the high and "ineffable" degrees, and know nothing of the ultimate designs of this ingenius conspiracy against the Christian religion, declare that the lodge does not meddle with religion and politics. What are the facts? In France, Italy, Spain, Germany, Mexico and South America, it is notorious that lodge influences have been active in the various revolutions and political convulsions in these countries. So notorious is this fact, that with a few exceptions, that to be a Freemason is equivalent to being an infidel. It is not the charity of the Bible which they profess, but a pagan, heathen and humanitarian philanthropy, which is selfishly limited to their own fraternity.

It is amazing how any consistent Protestant Christian can unite with and countenance the blasphemies and frivolities of a Freemason's lodge, which is, in its essence, the deadly enemy of the Holy Bible and all evangelical religion. The atonement of Jesus Christ—nay, his very divine name—is ignored in the lodge.

EDWARD T. MARKHAM.

Sturdy John Knox.

In the Life of John Knox by McCrie, is found an eloquent letter from that distinguished worthy while at Dieppe, France. The letter is one of impassioned earnestness, urging Protestants in England and his native "Auld Scotland" to hold fast the faith, in language which may be regarded as equally applicable to us in these days when Freemasonry and its secretist allies on the one hand and Vaticanism on the other, are the foes which now threaten our liberties. The language of Knox had reference to the Romanism from which he had emerged. Is it not equally applicable to the worship of the lodge, and its underhanded purposes? He says: "Alas shall we after so many graces that God has offered in our days, for pleasure or for vain threatening of them whom our heart knoweth and our mouths have confessed to be odious idolators, altogether without resistance turn back to our vomit and damnable idolatry, to the perdition of ourselves and our posterity? Oh horrible to be heard! Shall God's holy precepts work no greater obedience in us? . . . Let it be known to your posterity that ye were Christians, and no idolaters: that ye learned Christ in time of rest, and boldly professed him in time of trouble. The precepts, think ye, are sharp and hard to be observed;" and yet again, "I affirm that compareit with the plagis is that saill assuredlie fall upon obstinat ydoliteris they salbe [shall be] fund easie and lycht." . . . Consider, dear brethren, that how "sa mekill mair (much more) feirful it is to obey YDOLATRIE OR BY DISSEMBLING TO CONSENT TO THE SAME, than by avoyding and flying from the abomination to suffer what inconvenient may follow theairupon. Ye feir corporall deth. . . . . But if corporall deth be common to all, why will ye jeoparde to lois eternal lyfe to eschaip (escape) that which . . no earthlie creatur by no craft or ingyne(wit) of man did ever avoid. Gif any eschapit the uglie face and horibill feir of deth it was they that baldlie confessit Chryst befair men."

How appropriate is this remark of the biographer: "It is to the religious spirit excited during the sixteenth century which spread rapidly through Europe, and diffused itself among all classes of men that we are chiefly indebted for the propagation of the genuine principles of rational liberty and the consequent amelioration of government." H. T.

OUR MAIL.

Wm. Sherman, Deer River, N. Y., writes:

"I see in a late issue of the Cynosure. that you have engaged a place at the Centennial Exposition for selling books and distributing free tracts, and you wish the friends of the cause to contribute for publishing the tracts. I enclose an order for $3.00 for that purpose. I want the world to know that we are living under the most absolute despotism that exists on the face of the earth."

The above donation is very welcome as this enterprise is in need of money.

Geo. Hays, Hamilton, Mo., writes:

"You may put me down as a life subscriber. . . People say this is the hardest town out of hell. The Masons and Oddfellows and grangers have full possession."

We hope this friend will wage a successful warfare against all sin in his neighborhood in the name of Christ Jesus. This case certainly seems to need the prayers of Christian people.

John Mayne, Springhill, Ind., writes:

"I cannot do without your paper. It should be in every house. I endorse the cause of reform. My prayer is that the time may soon come when Satan's kingdom will be destroyed, for I believe that Masonry is the devil's work."

L. Raymo, Unionville, Md., writes:

"Bro. Orr went to Conference and passed for a Mason among the "brethren" who recognized him as one by his giving the grips as described by Ronayne. He is stationed at Cainsville, Harrison Co., Md., this year. We have a strong Mason for our preacher here. We expect to have a fight by and by. He is visiting the Masons and their friends but keeps very shady towards us anti's. Bro. Orr gave them some pretty strong doses in private conversation at conference. He told them that Masonry was all the devil wanted it to be, that he wanted nothing better to advance his cause."

Michael Arter, Crestline, O., writes:

"I tell them the devil is the father of Masonry, and of Odd-fellowship and of the grange."

Guernsey Camp, Durham, Ct., writes:

"I rejoice in the success you are having."

Mary A. Gamble, Birmingham, Ct., writes:

"There are a number of active Antimasons here and they have had quite a little success in the late election in getting some Masons out of office who have been in for years. The leaven is working surely although apparently slow. I have given and lent my papers through this place for nearly a year and they have done much good in the cause, also some tracts and Rev. J. W. Bain's book. My purpose is to still work in this cause. I rejoice to know that so much has been accomplished during the winter and spring, and now to read in the Cynosure that a banner is to be displayed because of this truth, light and freedom in opposition to darkness and bondage, in the Main building of the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition, makes me joyful indeed."

Jno. Ball, Rockford, Ia., writes:

"I want to do all I can for the cause, for it is identified with Christ's. The downfall of the dagon of secrecy is to be accomplished by perseverance in sending out the light in the midst of darkness which many seem to love. May God bless the efforts of all who are engaged in this with an eye single to his glory."

Theodore Frazier, Milburn, Ill., writes:

"I am an old man. 77 years is my age. My heart is in the work. I do what I can. I have been an Anti-mason since Morgan times, and am also an old line abolitionist. I feel my prayers are worth something."

We have a Scriptural warrant for believing that fervent effectual prayer will prevail.

John Andrus, Lenox, O., writes:

"We prize the Cynosure very highly, read our copies carefully and prayerfully, and then scatter them abroad, hoping they may prove a blessing to others in opening their eyes to see the evils of Masonry, etc. We rejoice to know that the reform is to be represented at the Centennial, also that the Publishing House is so nearly secured."

Rev. Howard Durfee, Mormontown, Ia., writes:

"I am with you in opposing the the dark powers of hell, and I expect to be while I live, God being my helper. Truth will triumph if we do our duty, fear God and keep his holy commandments, and stand up for Jesus, who is our light and life and truth, and in him is no darkness at all."

SCRIPTURE.—Acts v. 12-26. Commit vs. 17-23.

12 And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; (and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

13 And of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women:)

15 Insasmuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks and them that were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed every one.

17 Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the Sadduccees,) and were filled with indignation.

18 And laid their hands on the apostles and put them in the common prison.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said,

20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life.

21 And when they heard that they entered into the temple early in the morning and taught. But the high priest came and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned and told,

23 Saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors; but when we had opened we found no man within.

24 Now, when the high priest and the captain of the temple, and the chief priests heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

25 Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence: for they feared the people lest they should have been stoned.

—Dr. Davis illustrated a point in our lesson in his Baccalaureate sermon before the Union Biblical Seminary, Dayton, O., May 7, 1876. He said of the preaching of the prophets and apostles:

"Did the preaching of these men produce a calm or an agitation? Was the word of God popular in their hands? We all know that it was not. But why was it not? The answer is easy and at hand. They were not tender of popular or powerful sins, but proclaimed the truth in spite of the plottings of hell.

This is the sense in which the true reformer, then as now, broke the so-called peace of the world. And this shows, also, what Christ meant when he said, I am come not to bring peace but a sword. Not that this was the object of his coming, but only one of its effects; that is to say, those opposed to Christ would set themselves against those who believed in him.

It is, then, the wickedness of men, the malice and hate of devils, that produce discord, agitation and war. In other words, truth, when faithfully preached, will from a law in its nature, excite the hatred and opposition of Satan and the satanized. On this account the people of God can never have peace except by giving up the truth, or in some way compromising with the enemy. But this we cannot do without shame and ruin. Rather let us rush into the thickest of the fight; or in the brave words of another, let us stand up for Jesus,—not, indeed, in our own strength, but in the strength of God's grace.

Farm and Garden.

Curing Hens of the Propensity to Sit.

It is quite as natural for a hen to sit as it is to eat or lay eggs. Hence, after the hen has produced an indefinite number of eggs, sometimes a few and sometimes many, she will cease to lay, and her system will assume a proper preparation to pass the period of incubation without impairing her health. When a hen is in a "laying habit," it would be ruinous to her health to remain inactive on her nest for twenty-one successive days—the period of incubation. Some hens are so slightly inclined to incubate, that the propensity may be sured simply by driving them a few times from the nest, while others, even when they have produced only half a sitting of eggs, will stick to their nest with pugnacious desperation. If it is not desirable that a hen be permitted to incubate, she must be treated philosophically and understandingly. When the desire to incubate comes on, the laying habit disappears. My own practice is to put such hens as are inclined to incubate in a large cage in the hennery, where they can see other fowls outside of their prison, and give them a generous supply of soft food and water. After one or two days they are released, when they will immediately begin to "feed up" and bring the system again into an egg-producing habit,

A great many sensible people, who do not understand the correct way to manage hens at this natural period, take them into a dark apartment and shut them up in a barrel, or turn a corn basket over one. Others order a hen to be ducked nine times in water to cure the propensity to sit. Others still hold a hen's head in a pail of water while one is counting fifty. Others will tie a piece of red flannel to a hen. Numerous other stupid remedies are adopted, all of which are unphilosophical and ineffectual. But when secured in a cage as suggested, a hen will soon commence laying another sitting of eggs. When I have a valuable hen or turkey, whose eggs are desired for rearing stock of that particular breed, she is kept laying. As soon as she has produced a brood of eggs and desires to sit, she is put in the cage for a day or two, and her eggs are placed beneath some other fowl. By this system of management a turkey will often lay three or four sittings of eggs in one season.—Christian at Work.

Publishing House Dedication.

Arrangments are being made to hold dedicatory and other religious services in our building at 221 West Madison street, June 3rd, in connection with the observance of the day of fasting and prayer for the success of our reform. All friends are invited and we hope to see a good representation from the towns and country abroad. Look for programme next week.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF C. G. FINNEY.

This is a wonderful record of a most wonderful man. It has already been read by thousands and is to be read by thousands on thousands more. A child of New England parents, born in amid hard hills on a rocky soil, he was carried at two years old to the then wilderness of Oneida county, New York, by parents who doubtless thought to better their worldly condition by the exchange. His parents took no household gods and no public profession of religion with them into their woods retreat. And when young Finney came out of the forest home to which his pioneer parents had taken him by a second removal near Sacket's Harbor, he went back to Connecticut and was cozzened into a Masonic lodge by an uncle who was deacon of a church. Such were the religious ideas which he inherited from his immediate ancestors. And until twenty-six years of age (A. D. 1818) when he went to Adams, Jefferson county, N. Y., and entered a law office, he says he "had never enjoyed what might be called religious privileges." In this place two years after, when twenty-eight years of age, he was converted to God; and he informed me in personal conversation, "As soon as I was converted to Christ my moral nature loathed the lodge, and I went and demanded my discharge."

He instantly began to preach and continued to do so until he died at Oberlin, Ohio, at eighty-three years of age, and it is no exaggeration to say that his mind, or rather the Spirit of God dwelling in him, has been the pivot on which visible, professed Christianity in this country has turned as on a hinge, from technical theology and dead formalism to anxious seats, to direct appeals, to protracted meetings; in short to an approximation to the New Testament evangelism, which has spread and is spreading itself over the whole surface of Christendom.

There is one great and grievous fault in this volume. While the book dwells fully on the popular excitement concerning slavery and temperance, the words Masonry and secret societies are excluded, though Mr. Finney abjured and abhorred the lodge, and lived and labored during and amidst the Anti-masonic excitement caused by the murder of Morgan. He was thirty-four years of age and in the midst of his labors when Morgan was kidnapped by Masons, and 1500 lodges went down. And since the new struggle has been inaugurated for the overthrow of the lodge, Mr. Finney by his book on Masonry and his personal labors has been among the chief instruments in the hands of God to awaken the people to the turpitude, perjury, blasphemy and idolatry of the system. What this strange omission means we cannot tell, or whether the omission was made by Ms. Finney himself, or by the compiler or publishers since his death. It is published and for sale by A. S. Barnes & Co., 111 William St., New York, and is neatly executed. Whoever begins the book will read it through.

"FAINT YET PURSUING."

We think the New York Witness a wonderful paper, and have often commended it to our readers. We clip the following from a late number containing, in the editor's reply to his correspondent, the creed of the paper on secret societies. But we take the brotherly privilege of hinting to Mr. Dougall, that if its changeless ground is merely that the crimes and corruptions of the lodge are needless, we can scarcely hope that his indictments will ever eject the lodge. But the publication of even so weak, and yet so faithful an utterance is a brave act in an editor at this day.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

To the Editor of the Witness:—

I cannot but admire the bold stand you take upon the great questions of the day, and the firm adherence to principle and honor that characterizes your writings and selections. I thank God that such a man has been raised up, one who fears not to speak the truth as he sees it; and I trust you may be supplied with wisdom from on high to see aright and point out clearly to your many readers the great danger that threatens to overthrow our beloved country.

I am not a little anxious to know how you stand on the subject of secret societies, and especially Masonry, as I deem that to be almost directly responsible for the great spread of immorality; the high handed crimes of our public men that have of late so bitterly disgraced our fair land; the increase of crime; the many escapes of criminals on technicalities alone; and many other flagrant wrongs. And I hope for something to come up that will lead you to speak plainly on this subject. As my reading of your paper has been very limited in time, I do not know, of course, but that you have frequently declared your views on this subject, but that makes my anxiety none the less to know where you are on this, to me, all important subject. With many wishes for your extended and unlimited success, so long as you uphold the right and expose the wrong, I am, very truly, with respect,

S. S. PALMER

We thank the writer of the foregoing for his good word and especially for his prayer that the Witness may be guided by wisdom from on high. That is the great desideratum, and we ask all who take an interest in the Witness to join in Mr. Palmer's prayer. Our position with respect to all secret societies, and to Masonry in particular, is well known to all who have read the Witness for any length of time. The ground which we take, and have never seen any occasion to change, is that societies whose object is lawful and right have no need of oath-bound secrecy, an element which may be and often has been used for improper and dangerous purposes.

—The engraving of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence is just what every one wants this year. See 16th page.

NOTES.

—Several communications have been received lately with no name attached by which the author might be known to the editors. We cannot assume the responsibility of publishing any article without knowing its source.

—The "Psi Up ilon" college secret society held its annual convention during the first of this month at Utica, New York. Gov's. Rice of Mass., Chamberlain of S. Carolina, and Prof. Seelye, M. C., had the misfortune to be taken with this folly in their college days, and have not yet got over it, for they sent communications to the anniversary.

—The Delta Upsilon anti-secret college society also held its annual gathering this month in New York. Ex-Lieut. Governor Wm. Bross of this city, an honorary member, made the annual address.

—The following traveling item only illustrates a practice that is going on in so-called "legitimate" lodges all over the country, only instead of branding the body the "conscience is seared with a hot iron," a form of initiation indefinitely worse: "An impecunious but ingenious tramp has left the colored population of Georgetown, Texas, poor in pocket and sore in body by initiating them, at two dollars and a half a head, into 'a lodge of Freemasons.' The principal part of the ceremony, next to paying the fee, consists in tying the candidate on a table, face downward, and branding him with a hot poker."

—Rev. David McDill, D. D., of the Cherry Fork United Presbyterian church, Ohio, was one of the earliest writers against the lodge in the present revieued opposition. His work published by the Western Tract Society has been widely read through the country. He sometime since accepted an appointment to the chair of Philosophy in Monmouth College, and lately on leaving his charge he gave an able address on the un-Christian character of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship.

—Captain Henry Bundy, whose honest, outspoken condemnation of the lodge in the Chicago noon meetings has several times brought down the authority of some politic Y. M. C. A. manager upon him, is about entering on a new and glorious work, for which he is peculiarly fitted. The Lake Bethel society has contemplated a mission to the settlements and small ports on the bays and water courses that are comparatively isolated and destitute of the Gospel. To undertake this work requires a man peculiarly fitted both as a sailor and preacher. Captain Bundy has been successful in both occupations and feels a special call to this work.

A number of friends and Christian men have contributed to buy a good boat and rig it, and about the first of June this little Gospel ship will begin its voyage. The appropriate name "Glad Tidings" has been given this little craft, and may the prayers of God's people waft her safely on her glad errand.

—A correspondent asks about the Knights of Pythias. As we have explained before this order sprung up after the war, or about its close, to accommodate a multitude of men who had been hurried through the Masonic lodge before going to the front and having no opportunity to study the ritual, were too ignorant of it to be accepted when they settled down in the piping times of peace. So, as Odd-fellowship is strangely imagined by its devotees to represent the friendship of David and Jonathan, this order builds its foul nest on the tradition of Damon and Pythias. Like Freemasonry, it has three degrees: Page, Esquire and Knight. Its forms of initiation if not so disgusting as the Masonic, are no whit less stupid and foolish. A description of them by an ex-Knight acknowledged to be correct by an officer in good standing in the order in this city, was published in the Cynosure of August 13th, 1874.

—Bishop Dickson, President of the Illinois State Association, writes that late word from Bishop Edwards says that there is hardly any hope of his recovery.

A Card.

"Every cloud has its silver side
However dark that cloud may be."

This truth has been verified in the recent trial of the faith of myself and wife by fire. When the alarm was sounded all hastened to the scene of conflagration and used every effort to extinguish the flames. Finding this impossible they directed their energies to save what could be snatched from the building. By dint of effort most of our clothing and furniture was removed, and such parts of the building as could be wrenched off were carried beyond reach of the fire. And then while the dark cloud of smoke lay thick upon the ruins of our once pleasant home, these same generous hearts and hands made provision for the immediate wants of the homeless ones; so that my companion wrote me the following morning: "We have three rooms and passed a quiet, pleasant night." And now supplementing these acts of kindness, as friends at a distance receive intelligence of our trial, come unsolicited free will offerings to aid in the erection of another dwelling. Our loss to us in property, and especially in our home has been great, but when reflecting upon the mercy of God in the rescue of our loved ones and witnessing such spontaneous expressions of sympathy and assistance on the part of friends whom we have known personally, and some whom we have never seen, we see the "silver side" and cannot find it in our heart to speak of it as anything more than a "trial of faith." The warmest gratitude of our hearts is eminently due and is hereby tendered to our many friends who have rendered such efficient and timely aid, and hoping you may be spared from a like trial we will ever pray that you may be and abide in Christ, who is a rock, a refuge and sure defense for his tried and faithful ones.

MR. & MRS. J. P. STODDARD.

P. S.——I will give names and amounts of contributions subsequently,

J. P. S,

DIED.—At his home in Wheaton, Ill., Wednesday, May 17th, Mr. Rufus Nutting, after an illness of about three years. Bro. Nutting was one of the earliest workers in the anti-lodge reform. Years ago he lectured on the subject in Michigan and afterwards in Vermont. He removed to Wheaton in the fall of 1871, and has always been known for his faithful testimony, never withheld for fear or favor, for Christ and against every system of iniquity.

Religious Intelligence.

—Castelar said in a recent speech that the Latin race must get another religion than Catholicism or perish.

—Dr. Nathan Brown, the editor of the old American Baptist whose thundering blows on the walls of secretism still re-echo within, is now a missionary in Japan. He writes of encouraging features of his work in that country.

—The First Congregational Church of Chicago held its first quarter centennial anniversary last Sabbath. Mr. Carpenter is one of the oldest members of the church, having assisted in organizing it in the early days of the city.

—The services of Messrs. Hammond and Bently, in Baltimore, are attended by such crowds that the Maryland Institute, the largest hall in the city, has been engaged for their meetings.

—Among the self-denying Christian workers of the day few are engaged in a more difficult sphere than the Rev. Jno. P. Betker, who devotes himself to the interests of the prisoners at the Tombs. Last year, it appears, that 23,000 males were incarcerated in this prison. In this distinct and peculiar field of effort Mr. Betker is laboring without salary and depending entirely on voluntary offerings for his support.

—The American Tract Society's annual meeting was held May 10th. The Society prints periodicals whose aggregate circulation for the past year was 6,000,000 copies. Seventy-two millions of pages of tracts were distributed. Receipts for the year, including $107,618 donations and legacies, $492,252; Expenditures, $501,803. The Hon William Strong, of Philadelphia, was re-elected President. Fifty-two Vice Presidents, thirty six Directors, and eighteen members of the Executive Committee were elected. Nearly all last year's officers were re-elected.

—Rev. Mr. Fletcher, in whose city, Dublin, Ireland, Messrs Moody and Sankey labored two years ago, stated in the Chicago Ave. Church (Mr. Moody's) May 14th, that wishing to know definitely concerning the genuineness of conversion under Mr. Moody, he made inquiries. He learned that of 45 clerks in one dry-goods house who were converted under Mr. Moody's labors 41 still continued bright examples of Christianity, while four, chiefly through the influence of bad company and strong drink, had left their first love. That of thirty-six in his own congregation thirty-four were, with very few exceptions, the most devoted and faithful Christians in the church. He gave God the glory for their great success, calling it an answer to the prayers of God's people all over the world in their behalf.

—At the request of the American consul at Fu-Chau, the high officials of the province have issued a proclamation defining the relations of the people to foreigners and Christianity. In this proclamation, which has been posted throughout the interior, it is declared that, under the treaties, foreigners may rent lands, build churches, and preach everywhere. Foreigners may sojourn in the interior, whether in cities or in villages, as they please. Christians are not to be obliged, under any pretense, to contribute to the support of the religions of the country. This distinct order sets forth the far greater religious liberty enjoyed in China than is yet the case in more promising Japan.

—The American Home Missionary Society held its annual meeting the same day. The report showed that 979 ministers have been engaged in the service of the Society, and 92 churches organized. Revivals are reported in 200 churches, and 6,297 conversions. The receipts for the year were $310,027; expenditures, $309,871. Rev. Dr. Theodore D. Woolsey was elected President, and also thirty-five Vice-Presidents (among the latter Rev. R. S. Storrs), and a board of fifty Directors.

—While there is a great effort in certain quarters to secularize our Sunn day and to lessen the quiet and serious use of the day, there is a movement in the opposite direction in the cities in Europe that are thought most to favor the laxer practice, and various measures have been taken in Germany to bring about a more devout regard for Sunday. At the late Congress of the Inner Mission in Dresden, a commuication was received from a committee of influential women in behalf of the Sunday association, whose members agree to give no balls and to attend none on Sunday; to attend church regularly, and to enable dependants to do so; to avoid all unnecessary visiting, and even where no direct harm comes from social intercourse not to forget the fact that evil comes indirectly from all habits that tend to add to the work of servants and others who wait upon the will of society. New York needs a similar movement in fashionable circles.

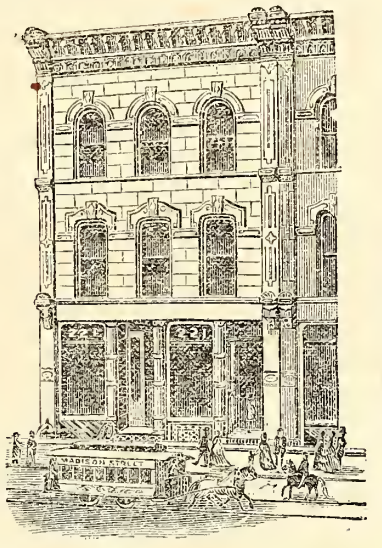
News of the Week.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly met last week in the Tabernacle church, Brooklyn.

—Plymouth church expelled Bowen on Friday evening last.

—The explosion of a steamship's boiler on the Ohio River on Wednesday night caused the death of at least three persons and the serious injury of several others.

—A telegram from Buffalo states that the Thomas C. Street, one of the lake schooners, was capsized by a squall on Wednesday and six of her crew drowned.



—The Independent Greenback Convention assembled last week at Indianapolis and adopted a platform demanding the immediate and unconditional repeal of the specie resumption act of 1875. Mr. Peter Cooper was nominated for President.

—The trial of Munn in the whisky ring cases was continued through last week. Hesing, Kehm, ex-Congressman Ward testified. Kehm and Hesing both claimed to have been pure men till tempted by the other.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 18.—The dedication of the new English Church has been indefinitely postponed, at the request of the British Ambassador, who had consulted the Minister of Police on the possible consequences of the ceremony. Softas and Mussulman roughs are buying revolvers, daggers and other weapons, and the Christians have resorted to similar precautions.

—Intelligence from London, gives as the reason for England's refusal to adhere to the memorandum of the Berlin Conference, that the proposals require from the Porte what is unreasonable, and that England wishes to remain unfettered in whatever course future events may take. It is added that England, however, will not advise the Sultan to reject the proposals.

—A letter from Constantinople under date of the 12th inst., says: "The excitement during the last three days has amounted to a panic. The demand for weapons both by the Softas and Christians, is so great that most of the shops in Stamboul have sold all their stock. The Softas—that is, all persons attached to the mosques in any capacity whatever—are practically masters of the situation. They number about 10,000, and their influence over the Protectorate is supreme. They utter threats against the Sultan and his Ministers, and sometimes against Christians. Although quiet now, they profess to be friends to the latter. Yesterday a great number of them went to the Palace and demanded the dismissals of the Grand Vizier, Mahmoud Nedim Pasha, the Cheikh ul Islavn, and the Minister of War. The Sultan resisted for an hour, but the clamor of the mob finally induced him to demand the resignation of Mahmoud Nedim Pasha, the Grand Vizier. The scene was most riotous and disorderly.

The next annual meeting of the corporate body will be held at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, June 20th, 1876.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

Consecration.

I saw an altar reared for prayer,
And longed to make an offering there,
A living sacrifice:
But Satan came, and showed me gold;
Of pleasures, fame, and honors told,
And bid me these to prize.

I turned, disgusted, from them all,
And listened to the Spirit's call,
Who bid me offer now!
By faith His cleansing power to claim,
By faith alone in Jesus' name,
To God the Father, Son!

In agonizing prayer I groaned:
My wants and helplessness I owned,
But still found no relief;
At last despairingly I cried,
"Cleanse, Lord, for Thou for me hast died,
For me of sinners chief!"

As was my faith, so was I blest,
With perfect love and perfect rest,
For all within was pure;
In and around me all was God,
On the "highway thrown up," I trod,
And every step was sure!

Now sweetly roll my hours away,
'Tis heaven by night and bliss by day,
A Sabbath all the seven:
Temptsd, and tried, yet always free,
For in my heart the sacred Three
Create a constant heaven.

Come, every feeble, doubting soul,
Let unbelief no more control,
But break its cruel chain;
Be strong, be bold—by conquering grace
Each heart may be the sacred place
Where God shall live and reign!

—Selected.

Firing Old Powder.

A story is told of a Southern planter who, under the preaching of the Gospel, was convinced of sin and converted to God. He liberated his slaves, extricated himself from the cares of business, and devoted his life to the ministry of the word. One of his servants, Sam, declined to leave him, and accordingly he retained him as his constant attendant. He labored long and successfully, and being a man of eloquence and power, became noted among the people as an eminent minister of the Gospel, and in due time was made a doctor of divinity, and was in great request as a preacher upon occasions of special interest.

But as the years rolled on, he noticed that with all his elcquence, very little fruit of his labor appeared. This furnished him occasion for serious thought, and one day while riding along to an appointment, attended by his faithful Sam, he talked the matter over with him, and told him he was weary of this way of life and labor, and expressed his desire to return to the simplicity that had marked his early ministry, that he might see the blessing and salvation of God as in days gone by.

They halted by the wayside for a season of prayer, and afterwards journeyed on to the place of meeting. The doctor preached and was eloquent and brilliant as usual, but no power seemed to attend his words. On their return he broached the subject again to his attendant, and expressed his regret that he had simply drifted into his ordinary routine of empty talk, and his utter dissatisfaction with himself, and with all his performances.

"Why is it?" said he to Sam. "What is the reason that I do not see such effects from my preaching as formerly?"

"I think I know, massa," said the faithful Sam; "you have fired that powder too many times. It never kills only the first time you fire it."

How the lesson was received we are not informed, but one thing is very certain, there is a great deal of "second-hand powder" fired off in the shape of sermons now-a-days, and many a man who finds his labor in vain, his efforts fruitless, and who sinks back in discouragement, wondering what the reason is, might perhaps be profited by Sam's homely hint.

The well instructed scribe bringeth forth out of the treasure-house things new as well as old; and those preachers who continually preach the things which they have preached before, and who fire their second-hand powder on every occasion, would profit to dive deeper into the treasures of divine truth; explore the wonders of the revelations of God; acquaint themselves not only with the letter, but with the spirit of the living word; and so, coming like clouds filled with rain, in the freshness of a living faith, and in the power of the Spirit of the Lord, fruit will abound to glorify God, and to bless the waiting multitudes.—The Christian.

What Comes of Sunday Strolls.

I have heard of lads who have gone out walking on Sunday afternoons, because they were too big for Sunday school, and I very sincerely hope you are not bent on the same folly. Perhaps you say to me, "What is the harm of walking out on Sundays!" Well, I will tell you. I have seen some of the best lads I ever knew, whom I really hoped were converted, who have taken to this walking business, and not one of them is now worth a button, for any good purpose whatever. My hope was that in time they would have been among my best workers, flourishing in business, and happy in the service of God. But it is not so. The day they left the house of God for "pleasant strolls" was the day of their doom; they became by degrees careless, idle, boastful, loose in talk and loose in life, and made Satan more and more their lord. Whether a thing is bad or not may be seen by its fruit, and there's the fruit of being "too old for Sunday-schools and classes."—Spurgeon.

Daily Reading.

The Bible is the Christian's handbook, as well as the blessed means of revealing to him the source of all his spiritual life and strength. To comport himself aright he needs to consult it daily. That his fervor may not abate, its fresh inspiration is daily required. That he may live as the child of God, and enjoy the death of the righteous, the Book must be the "man of his counsel and the guide of his life."

The saints of all ages have maintained their spirituality by this habit of daily communion with God through his word. There are men who will not begin a day without reading a classic writer that they may gain a proper elevation of mind and liberty of thought to carry them through the distractions of the day. Shall the Christian do less for his life than literary men deem essential to theirs? The late John Quincy Adams was not a man of the indifferent sort, so numerous at this day. His diary, now in course of publication, affords glimpses of his private life worthy of imitation. An extract largely quoted is this: "I rise usually between five and six—that is, at this time of the year, from an hour and a half to two hours before the sun. I walk by the light of the moon or stars, or none, about four miles, usually returning home in time to see the sun rise from the eastern chamber of the house. I then make my fire, and read three chapters in the Bible, with Scott's and Camlet's Commentaries."

Over-Ornamentation.

One trick of our time I should like to have a word with, and that is, the habit of over-ornamenting everything. It is not merely that we over-ornament; where ornament is advisable at all this is a natural enough fault to fall into, but we ornament a thousand things that ought not to be ornamented. It is hard to find an object of merchandise to-day that has not ornaments (so called) of some kind stuck or fastened upon it. That terrible word "bare" seems to have frightened us all, and driven us to cover the nakedness of things with whatever comes to hand. We cover our note-paper with clumsy water-marks, we put "monograms" (though "many grams" would express better the multitudinousness and intricacy of these illegible devices) on our clothing, on our bed-linen, on our table linen, on on our books and title-pages, on our carriage and silver—our silver! Oh, was there ever silver like unto ours for knobs and welts, and wrinkles and spikes, and everything that silver shouldn't have? If the reader will look about him as he reads this, he will certainly find in his own surroundings, for we can none of us wholly escape, the justification for this criticism. The architects cannot design a house or a church but they must carve every stone, cover the walls with cold, discordant tiles, break up every straight line with cuts and chamfers, and plow every edge into mouldings, crest every roof-ridge and dormer-window with painted and gilded iron, and refuse to give us a square foot of wall on which to rest the tired eye. Within, the furniture follows in the same rampant lawlessness. The beauty of simplicity in form; the pleasure to be had from lines well thought out; the agreeableness of unbroken surfaces where there is no gain in breaking them; harmony in color, and, on the whole, the ministering to the satisfaction we all have in not seeing the whole of everything at once,—these considerations the makers of our furniture, "fashionable" and "Canal street" alike, have utterly ignored, and the strife has long been who shall make the loudest chairs and sofas, and give us the most glare and glitter for the money.—Scribner's Magazine.

Things of evil generally find means to travel. A lie, for example, can pass from Europe to America and from America to Europe in fifteen seconds. A lie is so ductile that it has been known to spread over several diffusible square miles in fifteen minutes. On the other hand truth generally travels by easy stages. A fact is a most clumsy affair. It sets out well enough, but has a habit of waddling away into all manner of by-places when it is detained, and kicked about, and trampled upon, and is sometimes forgotten. It is a good thing that facts keep pretty well, otherwise they would perish in transit.—Ex.

In a certain farm house, twenty years ago, a great blank book was kept, and labeled, Home Journal. Every night somebody made an entry in it. Father set down the sale of calves, or mother the cutting of the baby's eye tooth; or, perhaps, Jenny wrote a full account of the sleighing party last night; Tom scrawled, "Tried my new gun. Bully. Shot into the fence and Johnson's old cat."

On toward the middle of the book there was an entry of Jenny's marriage, and one of the younger girls had added a description of the bridesmaids' dresses; and long afterwards there was written, "This day father died," in Bob's trembling hand. There was a blank of many months after that.

But nothing could have served better to bind that family of headstrong boys and girls together than the keeping of this book. They come back to the old homestead now, men and women with grizzled hair, to see their mother, who is still living, and turn over its pages reverently, with many a hearty laugh, or the tears coming into their eyes. It is their childhood come back again into visible shape. Ex.

The Rosetta Stone.

The history of the celebrated "Rosetta Stone"—the key to those wonderful researches which have opened to us a knowledge of the hidden mysteries of the Egyptian hieroglyphics—is probably known to most of our readers. It is a large tablet of black basalt, which was discovered underground by a French military officer, when making some excavations near Rosetta, in Egypt, when that country was occupied by the French. On the retreat of their army it came into the possession of the English, and was taken by General Turner to England, where it now forms a conspicuous and interesting object among the various treasures of the British Museum.

On this tablet is engraved, in small but very distinct and clear letters, a rescript of the Egyptian priesthood, decreeing divine honors to the king Ptolemy Epiphanes, in grateful commemoration of benefits conferred upon them. It was made about the year 196 before Christ. The decree is inscribed upon the tablet, three times in succession, in the three languages then used in Egypt—the Hieroglyphic, or that of the priesthood; the Demotic, or that of the people; and the Creek, which had been to some extent introduced by the Ptolematic dynasty. Each inscription is a translation of the other, though not always exactly literal.

It has been mainly by the investigation of this remarkable tablet, and by means of comparisons between its inscriptions and those on other Egyptian monuments, patiently and skillfully continued through the last fifty years by various philologers, especially Champollion, that a knowledge has been acquired of the sacred language of ancient Egypt, in which are written, in lasting and still perfect characters, engraved in stone, the innumerable records of a remote antiquity, and which have presented themselves to the eye of every traveler in Egypt, from the days of Herodotus to our own. Clear and palpable to the sight; uninjured in that mild climate by time; courting the investigation and explanation of the curious and learned, they continued for thousands of years in impenetrable mystery, on which, indeed, sometimes, though rarely, in all that long period, fancy and conjecture seek occasionally to throw a delusive light, but which no real or certain knowledge ever elucidated. Of this tablet a fac simile in plaster was presented, not long since, to the Philomathean Society of the University of Pennsylvania.—Public Ledger.

Once upon a time Benj. Franklin chanced to dine with the French and English embassadors, when the following toasts were given: By the English embassador: "England—the sun whose beams enlighten and fructify the very remotest corners of the earth." The French embassador, glowing with national pride, drank: "France—the moon, whose mild, steady, cheering rays are the delight of all nations, consoling them in darkness and making their dreariness beautiful." Dr. Franklin then arose and with his usual dignified simplicity said: "George Washington—the Joshua who commanded the sun and moon to stand still, and they obeyed him."

Obedience.

If you're told to do a thing,
And mean to do it really,
Never let it be by halves,
Do it fully, freely!

Do not make a poor excuse,
Waiting, weak, unsteady;
All obedience worth the name
Must be prompt and ready.

An Old City.

BY AUNT JUDITH.

Did any of you ever hear of Luther? I see that twelve-year-old Charlie has, by the light in his eyes. "Didn't he nail some theses to a church door; and begin the Reformation?" Yes, that was the man I meant, but I am afraid that little Eddie don't know what "theses" and "Reformation" mean. Never mind, father will explain those long words to you and we will talk of an old, old city, that I saw a few days ago, the home of Luther and the place where the German Reformation commenced.

One dark, cold October morning the train left us at the station of Wittenberg, but not a house of any size was in sight. We walked up and down the platform, but nothing was to be seen on one side but what appeared to be low strange hills with one or two taller chimneys or spires beyond, and on the other fields of stubble and a group of farm houses away in the distance. This could not be Wittenberg, so seeing a traveled road leading toward the strange flat hills, we set out in search of the town.

A few minutes walk and the low hills turned into great banks of earth, with water all around them, and here and there a cannon looking over the top. They were the city walls, and more than once, in the long years since they were built, they have had armies encamped around them, and the cannon have had more to do then to lie like great watch-dogs fast asleep, as they do now.

As we pass in through the walk we first see the town. One little, narrow street lies before us. On both sides are queer-looking houses, high and narrow, with small windows that open in the middle like double doors. Most of these houses look as if they had stood there such a long, long time, and as they grew old and were going to fall down, they just crowded together a little more and so held each other up. Some are built out over the street in the second and third stories and so help to make it narrower and more crooked.

There are very few horses to be seen, but many little carts go rattling over the rough stone pavement drawn by men, women or dogs. The poor dogs have a pretty hard time, dragging such heavy loads as are given them, and when they can stop at last, drop on to the little mats their owners lay down for them, quite tired out.

At the door of the first building on the left, we met a crowd of school-children with knapsacks of books on their backs, and when one of us who could speak German asked where Luther's house was, they all crowded around, talking at once. It was some time before we could understand that we were standing before it, but that his rooms were locked, and we must go to the market place half a mile away to find the people who kept the key.

With one of the little boys, who offered to show us the way, we went up the street, passed the little shops, for there were no stores, and the shops seem not much larger than large closets.

The market was a large open place, paved with stones like the streets, filled with stands where all kinds of cheap wares were for sale. There were some small sheds with counters in them on which the goods were displayed, but most of the place was occupied by poor women sitting behind their baskets of fruit or vegetables, while their tired dogs, which had brought the things from their houses out in the country, lay by them enjoying a nap.

Around this square were some of the largest buildings of the city. On one side was the city church, which had stood there for years before the first church was built in the United States, and near by, the strange-looking old court house, with verses from the Bible painted over the door. In front of this building were statues of the two men who have made Wittenberg known all over the world, Luther and Melanchthon. These two friends lived, taught, preached and wrote in this strange little city, while our great country was still but the Indian hunting ground.

But here in the market place we bid good-bye to our little guide, who ran off with something in his hand which made his eyes twinkle. Then finding an older person to lead the way, we went a little farther up the narrow street to another old church, the one whose doors you hear mentioned whenever you hear the name of Wittenberg. Those famous doors have been destroyed, but in their place are bronze gates with Luther's theses on them.

In the olden time it was usual when great men died to bury them in churches. On either side of the center isle, as you go in through these bronze gates, you will see a small trap door, under which plain bronze plates will tell you that here rests all that remains on earth of Luther and Melanchthon.

There are other graves in the church of men who held high stations in their country. They have costlier monuments and a more honorable place in the church, but the world lost most when these plain graves were made, and heaven gained more.

Leaving the church we went back to the home of Luther, two rooms of which are still kept as he left them. Where the table from which he ate stands now, the same large odd stove in the corner, which kept him warm and the seat by the window in which he sat. These rooms will be kept as long as possible as relics, yet everything is already going to decay. The floor itself will crumble in your fingers, in some places, and before long these rooms too, will be changed, as the others have already been, and devoted to some other use.

An hour was spent walking through the narrower alleys of the city—it has but the one street. We passed miserable dwellings from whose windows and doors miserable-looking people looked out, gathered the late fall flowers growing on the walls and picked up acorns under "Luther's Oak."

This tree is so called because it stands on the spot where Luther once stood with almost all the people from the city, looking on while he burned the papal bull, (the curse which the pope had pronounced against him), and then the cars hurried us away, and Wittenberg was only a picture in our minds, but one which will never be forgotten.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependence; you cannot draw one link without attracting others.

Home and Health Hints.

How to Grow Roses in open Ground.

Many well-informed persons appear to think that roses are difficult to manage, and will not bloom without some special or mysterious treatment not generally understood. Now, nothing could well be further from the truth. We believe there is really no flower of proportionate value that can be had so easily and with so little trouble. The rose is a good feeder, and will do well in any ordinary fertile soil, but is, of course, improved by thorough cultivation. It is always best to plant in beds or masses, and not singly. The ground should be well spaded and pulverized to the depth of a foot or more, and enriched by digging in any fertilizing material that may be convenient. Make the bed of any size or shape that suits your fancy; only remember that roses appear to best advantage by themselves. Therefore make the bed only large enough for the roses you intend to plant. If you wish other flowers make other beds; do not put them with the roses.

Set the plants about six inches from the edge of the bed, and one foot from each other. Make a hole large enough to allow the roots to be spread out nicely, cover with fine soil rather deeper than they were grown, and pack down tightly with the hand.

It will generally be best, though not always necessary, to protect the plants for a few days from the sun and chilling winds, until they become somewhat accustomed to their new position. Use paper grocery bags, turning the bag completely over the plant, which should be supported by one or more small sticks, and heaping on a little earth to keep it in place.

If the ground is dry, water thoroughly so as to soak the earth down to the roots of the plants. Do not water too often; like persons, they want water only when they are thirsty. Let them get thirsty before giving them a drink.

After the plants are established they need but little attention, except that the ground should not be allowed to bake or become hard, but should be frequently cultivated with hoe and rake, or other implements, so as to keep it light and friable as well as clear from weeds and grass. Roses of the ever-blooming class will begin to bloom almost as soon as they commence to grow, and as the plant gains in strength and size the flowers will increase in number and beauty, until the whole bed is a mass of bloom. Faded flowers should be removed daily; beside adding to the neat appearance of the beds this encourages fresh bloom, as the effort to produce seeds weakens the vitality of the plant and hinders its growth. This is particularly applicable to the hybrid perpetual class, some of which are rather shy autumn bloomers, unless care is taken to keep them growing vigorously through the summer. At the approach of winter it is a good plan to give the bed a good covering of coarse manure, forest leaves, partially decomposed sods, road scrapings, or any similar material that is convenient; this serves as a slight protection, besides inducing a strong early growth the following season. When dressing up the beds in the spring, all the dead shoots should be cut off down to the live wood; beside this not much pruning is required, except what may be necessary to keep the plants in reasonable shape and limit.

All the rarest hues of human life take radiance and are rainbowed out in tears.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pagenes,

LETTER OF HON. RICHARD RUSH.

saying that we had when I was at school, comes into my mind. I scarcely know how to qnote it, and must hope for your pardon if I do. It was not fiat justitia, ruat cœlum; but TELL THE TRUTH THOUGH THE DEVIL BE BEFORE YOU. Let it be heard.

Hitherto, when a murder, especially one attended by any startling or unusual circumstances, has been committed by any unseen hands, in a country where existed a free press, the great instrument has never failed to raise and keep up the alarm. It has done more, far more than writs, and depositions, and search warrants; more than the whole roll of sheriffs, and constables, and deputies, with the posse comitatus in their wake, to drag the perpetrators from their cover. By its universal and spontaneous activity, operating like a moral hue and cry, it helps to point aright public vigilance and suspicion. It ministers usefully to public indignation, making it strong and stirring. It puts everything in motion, itself heading the pursuit. It sharpens scrutiny, re-invigorates flagging exertion, smites like inward fire upon the fears and pantings of the skulking felon, and throws out signals of all kinds, a thousand times more valuable, when its mighty trumpet is sounded in a good cause than any that Masonry ever planted upon its mysterious lodges. Need I instance the case of White at Salem? Need I mention that of Thurtell, in England, a few years ago, when the unceasing clangor of their press reverberated to our own shores? Paris had never such a police; society never had such a conservative principle. It is omnipresent. Like flashes from the heavens it lights up the entire horizon. Its sweep is from the "orient to the drooping west;" the whole nation its stage, the whole people its audience. What a power in society when directed to proper ends; how resistless, how awful! But in the case we are considering, with the exception of the comparatively few newspapers Anti-masonic in special name and object, the press, as far as I have had opportunities of observing, has been shamefully silent. This best guard of a free state, better than legions of bayonets, this lion at its portals, whose noble nature for the most part, is to spring forward enraged and uncompromising upon crime, has been lulled to sleep; has been chained and muzzled; has been faithless; has been criminal. I say criminal. Silence in such a cause is participation. It shows, in effect companionship with the murderers, had there been nothing more than silence. It is keeping bands with blood, when a voice, loud, simultaneous, and incensed, should have rung through the land.

May I not justly say that the whole transaction, in every feature in which the public have a right to feel an interest, is an anomaly. Generally it has been the course of the press, as through a salutary instinct of its nature, to be too quick rather than too slow to fly at wrong in the remote intention and tendency; to err by inflaming too much rather than too little. But here, in Morgan's case, with the stain of blood before its eyes, with crime actually perpetrated, and crying for punishment, it shuts its eyes. It becomes suddenly and stupidly blind, or it turns traitor. There is no alternative. The press on this occasion has fallen into stupefaction or turpitude; for it cannot so utterly have lost its senses as not to know that the crime would never have been committed and left unavenged, but for the full and continued existence in our country of the Masonic obligaton. No sophistry can gainsay this position. The evidence of it is flagrant; its foundation is upon a rock. Had a case like Morgan's arisen in 1776; had blood been so atrociously shed, and gone so long unavenged, through any acts of the government then ruling us, or the black doings and subtle hiding of Masonry within its borders, I believe it would have acted upon public opinion like an electric shock, and that our fathers would have sought no stronger cause for prostrating in the dust an open authority or a secret influence that could so iniquitously prostrate justice. Am I wrong? Do I affirm too much! Am I giving way to feeling, in place of reasoning? No! I speak under the highest of all sanctions, before the American public. Turn to the DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE, that glorious charter of our liberties, and see if it be not there recorded as one of the causes for dismembering the empire, that the British King, by his odious acts, had obstructed the administration of justice in our country. No single case, comparable in atrocity to this of Morgan's whether as regards the original conspiracy and murder, or the total obstruction of the laws since, ever disgraced the tyranny of that era over us. If one like it had occurred, a town meeting in Boston would have rallied New England to her duty; the fire of Patrick Henry's eloquence would have summoned Virginia to hers; the decree would have gone forth, and monarchy or Masonry would have fallen. That the contest with the latter would have been the most difficult, I have no doubt; but down it would have come. Had the universal press of the country done its duty in a spirit resolute and lofty as of that day instead of sluggishly remaining quiet, or ignominiously conniving, this conspiracy against Morgan would long since have been laid bare, and public justice been vindicated Its voice would have carried consternation into the recesses of every lodge. Its thunders would have shaken their very walls and rafters; their foundations underneath would have rocked, their turrets above would have trembled, and Masonry in turn, like the suffering victim of the conspiracy, would have put up a prayer for mercy. Appalled, menaced for its existence, it would have been seen everywhere in motion. Then, then, its activity, its discipline, its terrors, would have been at work to ferret out the deep guilt. Its conclaves would have assembled for no other object, until that object had been attained. The institution would have been placed under accusation; it would have been arraigned before the dread bar of the nation, where, under the majestic inquest of the press, it would have stood pale and breathless, waiting its doom. The spectacle would have been sublime! And who can doubt the issue? Who can doubt but that the truth would have come to light? Who can doubt but that the cloud all along so dark, would have "turned her silver lining" on this plot of death? No one surely, who has remarked the potency which this institution has ever shown in securing ends on which it chooses to bend its whole purpose, and employ all its exertions. I repeat, then, that the press has shown a dull insensibility to the high motives and feelings by which it ought to have been fired in this case of enormity, or it has been a traitor to its trust. It ought forthwith, to have put the Masonic institution upon the defensive. That was its true position before society; under a case of conspiracy and crime, planned and executed by those who notoriously belonged to the secret institution. I lay this down as strict reasoning, and so let it be judged; so would I clinch upon the press the charge of infatuated dereliction or of accessory guilt.

The worst is to be told. From whence this infatuation, or this connivance? Whence this most marvelous exception to all its wonted eagerness and fire? Whence the sudden spiking of that artillery that ever, heretofore, has played its volleys upon crime? Whence but because the press itself is under deleterious enchantments of Masonry, or otherwise wears its manacles? whether the iron ones forged for it by the institution itself, or those existing in the influence of readers and patrons the result is still the same. How else could it have happened that it has withheld from the people the incontestible evidence of Masonic guilt which the repeated and solemn trial in New York have afforded? Does it act in this way on other occasions? Did it even suppress from its columns the publication of the case of the wretched pirate Gibbs, with all its train of particulars, during this present spring? Has not this case—a case certainly of no novelty in its principle—been running the rapid rounds of almost all the papers of the Union? Yet no word have we of the trials at Lockport, that were going on at the same instant; not a whisper, not a breath. All is silent like the tomb. How will the press shake off the obloquy of such conduct? It cannot shake it off. There is no other explanation of it than the one given. Will it pretend to allege that those trials brought out no evidence of Masons' guilt? Will it presume to say, in extenuation, that the murdered remains of Morgan are still unfound? Preposterous, insulting extenuation! Why not publish the evidence itself and let the people judge; as, at all events, the case had become one of great and commanding public notoriety? If the people were to transfer a portion of their indignation from the murderers of Morgan to those presses of the country that have evinced an anxiety to hush up the foul deed, they would be acting righteously. It would show the Press, by a lesson never to be forgotten, that the people were the true fountain of justice as well as power.

I feel anxious to stop; but as yet I cannot. I must look round upon the unparalleled scene. It brings with it a weight of thought and feeling that is oppressive. I did not sit down to write a dissertation on Masonry, nor am I going to give myself to this task. I dwell not upon its remote origin and long history; upon its curious titles; upon its ceremonies of oriental mould, and celestial exaltation. I dive not into its claims to science, to philanthropy, or to religion. All these I leave, for good or for bad, for censure or for commendation. My concern at present is with none of them. I purposely turn away, that there may be no diversion from the scene I am surveying. I am in a field by itself. There my astonished sight beholds two figures: the State with the broken sceptre of the laws in her hand one side, and Masonry, with a veil over her face on the other. My vision is distinct, though the spectacle is so portentious! I go not beyond the narrative that presents it. Keeping to that I am guarded against mistake or confusion. I have here immovable ground under me. I take post as upon the verity of a legal record. A few facts are all that I want, and these I have. I desire to render the case irresistible, by it concentration and its simplicity. I believe that Morgan was seized, carried far from his home by Masons, and by Masons murdered. I believe that this was the result of a conspiracy engendered and carried through, under circumstances of peculiar deliberation, malignity, and terror. Yet, to this very hour the infamous deed remains unpunished. I have watched the pursuit of justice. I see how she is disheartened, fatigued, worn down, by efforts continued throughout years to clutch these worse than Calabrian banditti. I see her at fault, I see her countenance in despair. Masons know the whole tale of blood. Who can can deny this? Masons conceal it. Who can deny this? Can then, any sentient, reasonable being say that Masonry is not at the bottom of the evil? True, there are depraved Masons who act in this manner, and I do not mean to judge all other Masons by them; but Masonry, corporate, existing Masonry is the root. The abandoned fiends of the order who know the truth, conceal it on system. They are wicked through principle. They confound crime with virtue; murder with Masonic merit. Like imps of pandemonium, they rejoice and dance in their sin. Like the crew in the mask of Comus, they are unconscious of their "foul disfigurement." The deeper their guilt, the more they make themselves invulnerable. You can no more grasp them, than if they sink into the earth, or mount into the air. Its spirit, inexorable as death, destroyed the life of this citizen; and, like a spirit, became invisible. It is here—it is there—it is gone; nobody can see it; but society feels it. It is the spirit of night. The magistrate strikes, but it is into vacuity. He follows up the blow, again and again, but it falls upon a shadow. Is all this nothing? Is it to be forgotten; to be mentioned with indifference; to be sneered at as fanfaronade? If the press has turned deserter, and gone over to the enemy, whose profligate cohorts have overthrown the laws, is that a reason the people should not be true to themselves? Is the whole army to be given up, because the sentinels have skulked? If so, where is our intelligence? where our estimate of the popular dignity? where our stern republicanism? where our quick, our exalted sense of country? Where we may ask, had fled our Jefferson's sagacity, when he told us that a Republic was the strongest government upon earth, since it was the only form under which, on a breach of the law, every one would fly to its support as a personal concern? Had he heard the opposing spirit of our day, that could spurn the law! Had he heard of the spirit, creeping in darkness, that could not only cover the guilty with an armor impenetrable, but try to throw odium on those who cry out for retribution? Solon, being asked which was the most perfect popular government ,replied, That where an injury done to any private citizen is such to the whole body. The blood of a murdered Roman, of one single Roman, could once rouse that whole race of freemen, as by a voice from above. It could call down a just vengeance against all who caused the deed. More than once, it changed their government. It expelled the Tarquins; it overthrew the Decemvirs. It kindled a holy enthusiasm which nothing could appease until the guilty authors were blasted and consumed, that thus the wounded commonwealth, a name sacred in Roman eyes, might have its propitiatory sacrifice. It was so that Roman glory, that work of ages, as Tacitus describes it, that toil of patriots, and statesmen, and legislators, and warriors, was founded and kept pure. But in our boasted Republic, the blood of an American who was taken from his home—bound—tortured—agonized—borne by the conspirators along the high roads with an impudent cavalcade of carriages and horsemen—cast into a fortress over which had floated the sovereign flag of the Union—and at last immolated—by harpies belonging to an organized and powerful institution, who conceal their crime under the horrible delusion of their mystic tie—all this is to go for nothing! The institution is not to blame! No! it is no fault of the institution! The immolation is to cause no public dismay. We are to sit still in stupid gaze; some beholding it with folded arms, others in derision! The press is silent, or the press scoffs! The institution even turns complainant. It positively grows belligerent; it shows battle. It will not be "persecuted." It will have no noise made; none of all this flash, and rodomontade, and bluster. The small number who are driving the conspirators into the toils, and permanently breaking up their den, to save the future from all possibility of similar tragedies, are denounced, ridiculed. They are infected with "an Anti-masonic excitement," are demagogues, office-hunters; the mere getters-up of a groundless party, without use, or motive, or object! Was ever an intelligent community so treated before? Was ever the understanding of rational men so trifled with? Did ever corporate hardihood, in any age or nation, assume a front so brazen faced? Let it go on. It works in its proper office. In this manner let it perpetuate its power of defeating the laws. In good time we shall have some other "affair;" some fresh peccadillo; some new variety in the dramaties of mystery, for an evening's amusement and editors' gibes!

I must hasten to a close. The subject is too fruitful, too painful. My opinions of Masonry will be collected from this letter. I would not give them without my reasons; more especially you as admonish me of your intention to publish what I write. No one better knows than I do, that we are surrounded daily by individuals of the order, whose good qualities as citizens all remain pure; whom we respect, and value, and love; and the mind of a really great man, who knows his duty to his country will soar above all its pernicious obligations. Of this our country has afforded illustrious instances. But after the developments I have given, I must, I do believe the evils of Masonry to be stupendous; I must, I do believe that they counterbalance, a thousand fold, any good that it can achieve. It follows that I think favorably of the exertions which you and your Anti-masonic friends, here and elsewhere in the United States, are making to root out its bad influence from the face of the land. I hope that you may continue them with ardor. Taking care that they avoid personal slander or injustice, let them fall short of no just means that may give promise of success. You have a vigorous foe; but fact, and argument, and the force of truth are with you. Employ these weapons vigorously on your side. If you do make up but a small band, more is the honor to your public spirit; and more the reproach to those who remain insensate under an attack so high-handed upon life and liberty, where guilt has been so presumptous, where the bloody league continues, as malevolent as ever, unbroken, unabashed. Jenkins, the Englishman, when under torture by the Spaniards, and expecting death from those who were mutilating him, commended, says the English historian, his soul to God, and his cause to his country. But where is Morgan's country? Where the avenging arm for him? As yet, he has found none. Unrelenting and bloodthirsty conspirators could even dare to convert a fortress of the republic into his dungeon. Monsters in human shape, they thrust him into the cavern of death. But who takes up the cause of his wrongs? I perceive tens of thousands marshalled against it; but who espouses it? There are none but you. Go on then in your course. You are under the broad banner of the law, of patriotism, of humanity, of public order, of private safety; the banner of right reason and of right feeling. You have all the motives that can urge good citizens to action. You have shown that you are not afraid of Masonry, or bound by its spell; and as to those who chant its praises say to them all that they are as dust in the balance to the unfathomable guilt which bad men of the brotherhood have forever fastened upon it; and that the only way to stop the stream of blood and pollution, which you have detected simply in Morgan's case, is to dry up the fountain. Say that you will never cease from your endeavors to break down a power in the country which has shown itself, in the face of millions if they will but look, to be an overmatch for the laws. Keep up an eternal battery against its dangers. "I like a clamor," says Burke, "where there has been an outrage; the fire bell at midnight breaks your sleep, but it saves you from being burned." We have been told that Masonry is too strong to be put down; that such attempts have been made in European countries, but have failed. Let this animate you but the more. Already it has been the glory of America to set Europe the example of conquest over public abuses, in many memorable ways. It may be her further glory to be the first to dispel the solemn folly, and break the tyrannical fetters of Masonry. The day that shall witness this triumph among us, may well deserve to stand next in our celebrations to the Fourth of July.

In the momentous nature of the general principles I have had under review, I had almost lost sight of a point personal to myself, which your letter embraces, but which I must not omit to answer. It is whether I am a Mason or not? I have to say that I am not. Many years ago I became an "Entered Apprentice," went to a lodge once,—and but once. On my return from England, after an absence in the service of the United States, I voluntarily withdrew from the body, by a letter to that effect. My separation from it was in 1826, before the murder of Morgan was known to me, and had no connection with the just indignation which that deed excited among a portion of the citizens of New York. I am happy to find that this feeling is shared by some of the citizens of our State; yourselves as a portion of my immediate neighbors and friends among the rest

I remain with great respect and esteem,

Your friend and fellow citize,

RICHARD RUSH.

Miscellany.

—There is a Centennial Medical Department to which those suddenly taken ill may be carried. Thirty or forty cases of exhaustion have occurred on the grounds, with others of laceration, fracture and bruise.

—It is said that to walk through all the aisles of the Centennial Exhibition buildings one must travel seventy-two miles. Visitors who do the thing thoroughly will have to take a second day for it.

—The Centennial Fire Department consists of 169 men, divided into three companies, one of which continually patrols the building, while the extinguishers and fire-plugs are numerous enough to meet any possible demand for their use.

How a "Corner" is Managed.—A, B and C combine their means and credits to make a corner in July. They therefore quietly begin in May to buy corn to be delivered in July. They gradually buy all the corn in the market, and, of necessity, must buy all that arrives, paying for the latter whatever is demanded. When a purchase is thus made, seller and buyer put up a margin, either in cash or certificate of deposit. As soon as the corner becomes known, there is an effort made to break it. The settlement takes place at 3 p. m. on the last day of the month. Those who have sold corn to the corner and have no corn to deliver, pay the difference between the price at which they sold, and the ruling price at the close of the business on the last day. As the corner has thus purchased sometimes five times as much corn as there is to be had, amounting to millions of bushels, and the price has advanced ten cents a bushel the profit is enormous. As the prices advance additional margins are required. Those failing to put up the additional margins, lose what they have already put up. The anti-corner factions seek to so crowd sales on the corner as to exhaust its capital and credits, and render it unable to buy for cash all the corn in sight, to prevent having it rushed into Chicago at the last moment. These are exciting times. Corn at such a moment may be purchased of the corner for shipment, from six to fifteen cents a bushel less than it is selling for on 'Change for delivery during the month. Each time there is a corner there is a crash, sometimes of the corner men, and at other times of the anti-corner men. The whole proceedings are of such questionable honesty, that the Legislature of Illinois has declared the operation of a corner to be a felony. It is nevertheless still practiced.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ahlest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs hut $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing ab out the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts[illegible]

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent ont, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, hound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,
CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.
The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public.
Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.
Those who wish to circulate Antimasonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from.

This is better than last week. Who will help to make the report better next week. This is the last number of the Cynosure sent to those whose subscriptions expire inMay. If you have not renewed, please do so promptly.

We have just received the first copies of the large, elegant photograph engravings of Trumbull's steel engraving entitled "SIGNING THE DECLARATION," with KEY and fac simile of the Declaration of Independence. They are very nice. We offer these at the low price of FIFTY CENTS for the two.

Every subscriber must admit on seeing the engraving that a nobler looking company of men are seldom seen. The effect produced on young people by the study of such honest, serious faces must be beneficial.

These are NOT given as premiums to NEW SUBSCRIBERS but to persons who OBTAIN new subscribers and forward a name with $2.20, or to any persons who send us fifty cents cash.

One dollar at any retail picture store would be very cheap indeed. Remember it is sent post paid for fifty cents cash or to any person sending a n ew Cynosure subscriber with $2.20.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING MAY 19th, 1876, from J. R. Baxter, J. M.. Bishop, J. Craig, L. Chittenden, J. B. Freeland, Mrs. J. Hubbard, A. J. Harrington, W. W. Kripple, J. F. Topics of the Time.

As a corollary to the political conference held in New York on the 15th of May, it is suggested that a golden opportunity is now presented to the two leading parties. Let them drop their party strife and scheming, and at their coaventions to be held during this month both nominate the same candidate— a man of recognized ability and integrity, outside the party rings, a fit representative of a new era in our political affairs which shall fulfil the the prayer of Whittier's Centennial hymn—

"And cast in some diviner mold
Let the new cycle shame the old."

A score of such men can be found whose election if thus nominated would be almost unanimous, for all other issues could afford a brief postponement in such an hour of patriotism.

The Methodist Episcopal General Conference was still in session at Baltimore during last week with a prospect of filling up the whole month. The committee on the State of the Church, to which has been referred a number of petitions against the lodge, has either quietly dropped that tormenting subject, or else the press reporters are combined to suppress information. A Mr. Cumback of Indiana brought forward an unfortunate resolution providing for the expulsion or suspension of members for refusing to pay a just proportion of church expenses. The proposition was tabled, but how will this reverend Congress receive a proposition to exercise discipline upon acting lodgemen. This would be a serious and practical question. Some day the Conference must meet it, for no amount of votes will keep it on or under the table. The Conference celebrated its centennial on Saturday, the 20th. The first General Conference was held in Baltimore, May 21, 1776. The minutes of that meeting were read and centennial orations pronounced befitting the interesting occasion.

The Chicago city government is not yet passed through the furnace of purification. The new Mayor, Mr. Hoyne, is not only a man who understands the moral and legal responsibilities of the place, but is firm enough to put his finger on the festering spots and use a severe surgery to remove them. In his mesaage to the Council he shows the necessity and wisdom of reducing the pay of employes, excepting school-teachers; and at its next meeting sent notice that he hed removed the Comtroller, the Board of Health, the Buiding Inspector, and the City Marshall, practically abolishing the last three offices and turning over their duties to other departments. These sweeping reforms are met with favor by all classes, but the ex Mayor and his fax-eating companions, who contest every step toward reform by personal effort and legal process.

The Cabinet had a moving day last week. The President without the usual outward premonitions sent to the Senate the nominations of Attorney General Pierrepont to be Minister to England, Secretary of War Taft to be Attorney General, and J. D. Cameron of Pennsylvania to be Secretary of War, and approval was immediately given. There is a general approval given to the changes. Pierrepont is not fully clear from blame in his management during the Babcock trial, but all agree that he will represent the government in England; Judge Taft will probably find his new duties more fitting to his taste and experiences, and Don Cameron is a business man of large experience and considerable ability. But here this record stops, and his nomination is generally recognized as a political maneuver by some in favor of Conkling, by others to reinstate Simon Cameron, the Reynard of the Republican party, in the inner circle of political power, from which the indignation of the country cast him down in the early days of the Rebellion. His son, who has been thus suddenly brought out of private life, has been known for a few years as a political wire-puller, which gives to these charges a color of veracity, and places the President in the ranks of the foes of civil reform.

1776—A Voice of Seventy-six—1876.

I

I come! I come! a festal year.
With eyes of light and voice of cheer.
I come! a grateful nation waits,
With incense at her temple gates;
I pour into her listening ears
The greeting of a hundred years.

II.

I come, a Reaper of the land,
Columbia's sickle in my hand,
And gather in, from far and near,
With ringing song and bounding cheer,
From seed of blood and toil and tears,
The harvest of a hundred years.

III.

I come, a Sower, sent from God,
To plow the hard and trampled sod,
And sow, in all the fields of earth,
The seeds of Freedom's second birth,
Enfolding with their hopes and fears,
The longings of a hundred years.

IV.

I come, a Prophet of the day;
The night shall fail and pass away,
The looming years are all sublime,
With visions of a better time,
And soft millennial light appears—
And the sunshine of a hundred years.

—Mass. Ploughman.

The Relation of Christianity to Our Government.

AN EXTRACT FROM AN ESSAY READ BEFORE THE ELGIN CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION, AT ITS RECENT MEETING, BY REV. L. TAYLOR OF WHEATON.

There has come to be in our land a large growth of paganism by immigration from China, and other nationalities are numerously represented, cleaving to principles averse to our institutions. To these we are to add Mormonism with its immense immoralities, also Romanism with its almost limitless means of propagandism in efficient operation, hostile to American ideas and government; also the lodge, the secret societies without number, whose interests are sustained by large memberships, bound by fearful oaths to give their influence for the support and increase of their own orders in defiance of moral principles and civil government if they stand in their way, or the personal advantage of a member requires; and then when we increase this aggregate by the hosts of corrupt politicians and persons of corrupt morals and anti-Christian principles, who are clamorous for positions under government where they can wield power to their personal advantage,—when we put all these forces together and others of a similar character, that might be named, we see terrific influences operating which, in no distant day, unless arrested and extirpated will work the ruin of the nation.

Here is a work which government cannot do. It is peculiarly the work of Christianity. Legal enactments and the execution of law, if free from the restraints of these influences, which is far from being true, pertains to the external relations of society and are not thorough educators of the people. The demand is for radical changes in personal views and moral character on a wide scale, the forming and developing of principles in harmony with justice and the revealed will of God. Such results are produced by the forces which Christianity wields, and such results must be secured in order that our government may continue and prosper.

Hitherto nothing has been so serviceable to our government as Christianity, and it will hold the same capabilities in all time to come if kept in purity, because it is the great source of moral purity and righteousness, it is the right hand of our national success. The divorce of our government from Christianity would be fatal to its prosperity if not to its very existence. The relations between the two need to be more intimate; and their forces though working in their separate spheres should work in harmony, and the friends of government and of Christianity need to be aroused to increased diligence, watchfulness and prayer.

Our Foreign Letter—The Professorium.

This is the name the professors at Leipsic give to their annual levee held in one of the public halls in the city. The kind invitation of Prof. Bruhns, director of the Observatory, enabled me to attend one last winter. I arrived in the "Schultzenhaus" just in time to get into a group of men crowding around a door up stairs to deposit their overcoats and hats and get checks for them. Others who had preceded me were standing around in their swallow-tail coats and white neckties, struggling with their white kid gloves. Later in the evening an envious American in the gallery (to which the uninvited were admitted as spectators) ventured the assertion that half the coats in the room were borrowed for the occasion. After I had conformed to the toilet requirements as nearly as the want of a "swallow-tail" would permit, the professor saw me and invited me down stairs into the large hall. A professor of history was speaking on the fruitful topic "das deutsche Reich," to a large audience of professors, with their wives, daughters and friends, among whom was a sprinkling of students. The more sedate portion of the hearers listened with commendable attention; the ladies, I fear, divided their attention between the words of the speaker, and the elegant dresses worn by themselves and their neighbors, and perhaps a number of the younger students agreed with Pope, when he says, "the proper study of mankind is man," using man in its generic sense and applying it to the young ladies. Some of them seemed to think that they were invited for the purpose; at least one told me "the professors invite students that their daughters may have dancing partners." On the whole the address seemed to be a necessary evil accepted for the sake of form and to give an appetite for supper, which was waiting to be brought in as soon as the speaker should close. A round of applause rewarded the professor when he had successfully "developed" the German Empire to the time of Emperor William; the audience rose from their chairs; brisk waiters carried in long tables from side doors; the professors searched the crowd for their invited guests and conducted them to their respective tables. In a short time I found myself seated between the wife and mother-in-law of Prof. Bruhns. Among the other guests were the professor's father-in-law (pastor of one of the city churches), and three incipient astronomers, one of whom though only about twenty years old, reads German, English, French, Italian, Latin, Greek, Hebrew and Arabic, and calculates orbits of new planetoids; the second accompanied one of the German Venus expeditions to China, the third makes himself useful as the professors "famulus." For all the interest these astronomers take in the distant stars, they did not neglect sublunary matters this evening. The professor was busy as the waiters helping his guests, and the latter did full justice to the different courses. First we had a cup of bouillon or soup to drink, the severa courses of fish and meat with vegetables and fruit sauce; finally a dessert resembling ice-cream. White and red wines were on the table from the beginning to the end of the supper, and were used liberally. My abstinence was a source of some surprise to my host and hostess and their guests. Mrs. Bruhns endeavored to argue the point with me, but accepted my statement that many Americans considered it their duty to abstain from strong drink altogether, partly for the sake of their influence on others. The professor concluded that I must be a Quaker. He was none the less kind however, and Mrs. B. when she learned that the invitation had been limited to a part of our family, made up the deficiency by inviting us to call at their home, and afterwards honored us with a call.

After the supper toasts were in order. The speaker of the evening, and the ladies were duly "browned" in neat little speeches, followed by cheers and the jingling of wine glasses. Waiters made their appearance to empty the tables of their dishes and the professors' pocket-books of superfluous coin. The company dispersed to other rooms as far as possible; the tables were carried out, the floors swept and the band began to play. At this juncture I went to the gallery from which I could better survey the scene. The floor was soon filled with dancers, who first marched to slow music until they apparently wound themselves into an inextricable knot. Then there was a moment's pause, after which the band struck up a waltz. One after another, couples disengaged themselves from the crowd, and commenced spinning around on the floor. Gray-haired professors and beardless students alike engaged in the mad chase, frequently running against each other, or stepping on the long trails of each other's partners, tearing off yards of lace. This charming scene of social equality was surpassed if anything in the smoking-room, where all who entered, teachers and students, were furnished with clay pipes and tobacco, and contributed to a common cloud of smoke. I did not enter this place, but had an account of it from my astronomical philological friend.

When I went to the cloak-room at about 10:30 P. M., I had no difficulty in getting hat and overcoat, for at this early hour my groschen was the first reward the woman in attendance had received for her care. She deposited the coin on an empty plate and waited for more. The servants and waiters probably reaped the most substantial benefits from the entertainment, for the system of "backsheesh" is fully developed in Germany. The company did not break up till one or two o'clock next morning.

From the way in which people amuse themselves some idea of their character may be gained. The German professors are intellectually the equals, if not the superiors of any class of people in the world. They are generally men of honor, and kindly disposition, and are enthusiasts in their pursuit after knowledge. They bring mines of intellectual wealth to their hearers, but when they feel called on to manifest their good will and interest in the students outside of the lecture-room the best things they have to offer are wine, tobacco and dancing, mixed with the more innocent offerings of a good supper and spicy speeches. Rich in intellect and frequently in purse, they are as a rule poor in spiritual things, which cannot be gained by hard study but are revealed unto babes. Would that with all their gettings they might "get understanding."

Heidelberg, Baden, April, 1876.

Sam Wo and the Hip Yee Tong in California.

It is not easy for persons at a distance to understand the character and condition of the Chinese in this State. I will try to make it plain by a brief biography: Sam Wo was a young man of the coolie class, who earned about ten cents a day in his native city. With his wages he bought rice enough to keep him from starving and a cotton blouse to cover him. To this poor drudge comes one day a man, well-fed and well dressed, who says: "Why don't you go to America? You can earn there a dollar a day. You can come back in two or three years with five hundred dollars and be a rich man."

The coolie opens his almond eyes as wide as he can, and answers: "I would like to go where I could get so much money; but how can I?" "Easy enough," is the reply. "The Great Hop Wang Company will pay your passage and get work for you in America. They will take out of your wages ten dollars a month until what they advanced for you is made up, and after that you will have all you earn, and can save twenty dollars a month."

The coolie agrees to go on these conditions. He signs a contract drawn up by the agent of the Hop Wang Company and becomes their slave. He is taken to a steamer and put in the steerage with a thousand others. The Company pays their passage, and furnishes rice for them to live on during the voyage. When they reach San Francisco they are marched to one of the Company's buildings, on Jackson street. Sam Wo is put into a room in the fourth story just twelve feet square. He is to eat and sleep there with five other men. They have a little charcoal furnace to cook their rice on, and a few old blankets to sleep on. The agent of the Company takes Sam Wo to a factory and puts him in charge of a boss who sets him at work. Saturday night the boss says: "You earn this week five dollars. I keep two fifty on the passage money advanced by the Company, fifty cents for rent of your room, one dollar for the rice furnished you, fifty cents for my commission, and that leaves fifty cents for you." Sam takes the fifty cents and starts for his home on Jackson street. After supper he goes out to see the sights. He finds his way into one of the 120 gambling houses in the Chinese quarter. He risks his money in a game of tantan. He loses it, of course, and goes to bed that night as penniless as he came. Thus he goes on week after week. He thinks after a while that he must have paid for his passage. He enquires of the boss about it, and is told that he owes the Company for interest on the money advanced, for getting him employment, etc. If he grumbles at this he is told to keep quiet or he will be turned over to the Hip Yee Tong Society.

He knows what that means. The Company that imported him keeps a band of professional assassins. If any Chinamen offends them they give his name to the Hip Yee Tongs, and at once a notice is placarded in Chinese all over the quarter offering a reward for the murder of the man who has offended the august Company. The Hip Yee Tong is a secret association. One or more of Sam Wo's room-mates may be members of it. All Chinamen are afraid of it. They know that its placarded threats are not idle ones; that many have been mysteriously murdered. Sam Wo cannot tell of his troubles and fears to any of us, for he cannot speak our language, and he is taught by his masters that we all hate him. His whole intercourse is with his own countrymen. He is kept by them in ignorance of, and prejudiced against, the institutions of the land of his sojourn. He does not mean to stay here but a few years. He is going to get his five hundred dollars and return to China. Time rolls; and between the exactions of the Company to which he belongs and the temptations to vice that pass around him, Sam saves no money. At last he gets discouraged. He takes to opium. He becomes a miserable skeleton. He is found one day dead in his garret. The agent of his Company bundles up his bones and ships them back to China, and that is the end of Sam Wo and of his hopes of getting rich by coming to America. Such is the brief, sad career of tens of thousands of these poor slaves; for slaves they are as really as the negroes in Cuba. Occasionally one of them is attracted to the Chinese Mission, and learns the story of the Cross. But most of them live as heathen in the midst of our Christian population, nay, in the houses of Protestant church-members. They die as they lived, and their bones are sent home for burial.

A few Chinamen come here who have wealth and education; a few bring families with them. But fully ninety-five per cent. of all who come are brought here by the Emigration Companies, and are of the lowest class—the mere scum of the overcrowded population of the Chinese cities.—Rev. C. E. Babb in Herald and Presbyter.

Don Quixote de la Mancha.

THE BEAUTIES OF KNIGHT TEMPLAR MASONRY.

In September, 1871, a great gathering of Knights Templar took place in Baltimore. The following written at the time paints the humors of the occasion:—

As I passed through Baltimore, after writing the above, with my mind full of Ku-Kluxism, I saw all the streets full of remarkably well-dressed nondescripts, wearing ostrich plumes in their chapeaux, and an astonishing quantity of small sword and gimp. But for the length of the procession I should have said it was a menagerie and circus combined, "showing" in the streets, in the old-fashioned way. Again, it might have been the Ku-Klux, or the Maryland militia, parading in honor of Yerger's arrival.

I flew to my paper—not a very long fly, intellectually, as it was the Baltimore American—and found the Knights Templar were collected from all parts of the globe. Yes, that perished, vanquished order of chaps existed; they held their lists in the newspaper columns, long ones, and exceedingly dull reading. There I found the name of my respected tailor set down as Sir William Apollo, whom I had always accosted as plain Bill. Everybody was a "Sir Knight." The broad-cloth was tremendous. I forget how many bands of music boomed at once.

Now, as there was no election for commissioner of the poor going on, no great protracted meeting, no infringement of the eight-hour law, not even a theft of Baltimore city vouchers, I asked my next neighbor in the arrested street car why the Knights Templars had resisted thus the change of the moon.

"Are you a Mason?" said this individual.

"No. I thought it necessary to insure for my life, but not for my burial."

"They are a celebrated order (I think he said 'order'), of Freemasons, celebrating their clothes."

I looked along the lines of those extravagantly dressed mystics, and revived the feelings of my youth when, in a hat of parti-colored tissue paper and a chicken cock's plume, I wore a sword, and was a Knight Templar like unto these,—the same in love of display, in innocent vanity, in utter irrelevancy to any occasion of war, funeral or militia training, and, in my capacity of benevolent society, chiefly efficient because when parading I did not embarrass the wash-tubs at home, nor do some less ridiculous species of mischief. Oh! if I were ever to be a boy again, and command my crack company (we called it the "Eagle Blues," on account of the well known color of eagles), there should be another great feature of Masonry added to our tactics; we would have grips. In this dark, unsettled age, no lad should be without his grips. The tying up of the navel, vaccination, and the first degree in brimstone and treacle, will all have been in vain unless the grips, according to Solomon, are impressed upon the adolescent understanding. I hope I am correct in my solution of Masonry!

Masonry always appeared to me, standing on the outside, to be a huge juvenile joke, and the more people who go in thereat makes the joke only broader. I like its smell of antiquity, so well sustained by its regalia, which has all the flutter of a millinery shop; its perfect consistency in matters of heraldry; the excitement it makes in those two fragile, sensitive minds, the wife's and the priest's; the extensive assurance it gives of burying you in good standing, and relieving you of any anxiety about your family. As Miss Somebody, in Dickens, wanted to be sent to a hospital in order to eat some chicken, the Mason appears to me to submit to initiation in order to insure himself with a contingent hospital. But then there is no use in rejoicing over it in such prodigal clothing.

A Mason, long antiquated and lost to his lodge, once told me:

"Masonry is a lot of fellows getting together in a room and swearing not to tell. After one swears not to tell, there is nothing worth telling."

An esteemed relative of mine, whose reverence is wider than his experience, advised me thus, a year ago:

"I belong," said he, "to three institutions I am proud of: the Methodist clergy, the profession of medicine, and the Freemasons. Those," concluded my venerable relative, with a smack of his lips, "are all ancient and honorable institutions."

Doubtless so! No railroad conductor nor militia officer was ever known who did not expect to require them all. People whose inclinations are to go to Alaska or Australia without money or errand, ought to take some such precautions. A copy of Joe Miller in the pocket, or some skill on the jewsharp, will carry one nearly as far. Almost any kind of grip is a good thing to have. The infant at the parent fount, General Grant at his cigar—we all have our grips.

When the subsequent New Zealander or Apache wanders over the United States, and, amongst the debris of the republic, observes certain mammoth Masonic temples tumbled to monogram and granite, and wonderously asks, "What part of the self-reliance, independence, politics, and government of the late extensive cuss were these?" The answer might be, if there was any echo to ruins:

"Grips! Merely grips! Nothing more."—Gath in the Chicago Tribune, Sept., 1871.

Masonic Morality.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

"With respect to the duty of any individual to keep the secrets of another if communicated to him as such, be what they may, there can be no doubt in any reasonable and well-informed mind. It is sanctioned by every principle of religion, morality and benevolence, and is strictly enjoined by the laws of honor from which no gentleman will ever depart."—Luther Pratt's Defence of Masonry, page 134.

This is a specimen of Masonic morality. In this view of my obligations I may swear to conceal the secrets of my companion R. A. Mason, "murder and treason not excepted," and ask God to help me, and yet be guilty of no wickedness. Nay, I have discharged a debt of honor which "no gentleman" will neglect. To state such a proposition is sufficient. "The fool" who "hath said in his heart, There is no God," may believe it. Men of common sense will see its absurdity without argument. Yet this is Masonry.

The Curse of France.

Ex-Secretary McCulloch, formerly of the treasury department, and now a banker in London, has written several letters to the New York Tribune on the French financial affairs. They have, and worthily, attracted much attention. The present debt of the French nation is, he says twice that of the United States, and what is remarkable is that this debt has grown more rapidly, not when the country was engaged in war but when it was preparing for war. The standing army has been at the bottom of all the financial troubles in France. And he adds, it is her standing army and the standing armies of other countries that menace the peace of Europe. These armies, he rightly asserts, are not created for the preservation of peace, they are the preparation of war. They mean war and nothing else. It would be a measureless blessing to France "if she would forget her triumphs under the great Corsican, and get over the delusion which she indulges that she must become again the great power of Europe." What a blessing it would be to France and to civilization everywhere, if she would now say "The Republic is peace," and verify the saying by following the example set by the United States at the close of the late civil war, by disbanding her army. If she should do so she would shame every European nation into doing the same.—Advance.

TME AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—The action of the American party at the late Iowa State Convention is thus reported in the Christian Expositor of Council Bluffs:

"A committee was appointed to place an electoral ticket in the field. It was determined to carry the contest to the polls. Vigorous efforts are to be made to receive the largest anti-secrecy vote possible at the Presidential election. It was thought that while secret oath-bound clans, such as Freemasonry, control the parties, hope for reform in politics is vain.

This was by far the largest and most enthusiastic anti secrecy convention yet held in the State. The cause it represents is evidently on the advance. A deep, permanent feeling against secret societies is increasing rapidly in Iowa, and not many years hence will the now prosperous and vaunting secret orders be worsted and driven to the wall. This movement is on the side of God and truth, and must eventually triumph."

—The National Prohibition Convention met at Cleveland, Ohio, and nominated Green Clay Smith for President and G. T. Stewart for Vice President of the United States. The resolutions adopted declared for a prohibitory amendment to the constitution, and treaties with foreign powers to prevent the importation of liquor; the reduction of postal, telegraphic and railroad rates; the suppression of gambling, polygamy and the "social evil;" the national observance of the Sabbath; the use of the Bible in the public schools; complete separation of Church and State, and various other things. Pres. H. A. Thompson of Otterbein University was chairman of the convention.

—The National Independent Greenback Convention, recently in session at Indianapolis, adopted a soft money platform and nominated Peter Cooper, of New York, for President, and Newton Booth, of California, for Vice President, of the United States.

—The Christian Republic, Home, Tenn., says of our political reform movement:

"There has also grown up by the side of this Association a political party, small as yet, but increasing in numbers, and squarely committed against secret orders of every name and kind. This party has a platform of principles, which for clearness of statement and definiteness of outline certainly compares most favorably with the glittering generalities usually found in the platform of parties. Their candidates are already in the field, and are certainly men of sterling character. Their candidate for President, James B. Walker of Ill., is a man of great learning. He is an author of wide reputation, and a man whose Christian integrity will undoubtedly command the respect and confidence of all. I heartily congratulate the friends of this cause on the success which has crowned their efforts.

The Elections of 1876.

Our Congress has been nearly six months in session, and what has the nation gained in honor or legislation? Senator Morton wants the nomination for the White House, but what speeches or acts in this emergency entitle him to the distinction? Senator Conkling has been intriguing for the same prize, but what, as the representative of the leading commercial State of the Union, has he done for the prostrate commerce and industries of the country? Has he lifted his eloquent voice in denunciation of inconvertible currency and inconvertable men? And what have the other party aspirants for the Presidency done to entitle them to our votes and the confidence of the country? Nothing whatever. They are all creatures of expediency, aiming above everything else to conciliate and consolidate the party in their own interests. We have had enough of them. We want, for the present crisis, men whose words are better than the quibbling bonds and platforms, through which smart lawyers can drive a coach and six, holding all offenders guiltless. Belknap's resignation was hastily accepted. That placed him beyond the penalty of impeachment. West Point soldiers, in some cases, stand like the Freemasons, faithful to each other. The country has had enough—aye, more than enough—of such dastardly treachery and incapacity. The voice of the citizens, ground down by these continued outrages, is being heard, and is marshalling for the fight. The elections of 1876, if we do not misread the signs of the times, will be as fruitful of advantages to the country as were the votes of the fathers one hundred years ago.

Our Centennial Exhibition is admirable; and now let us prepare for an exhibit this Fall which will redeem the nation from the self-seeking politician and place it once more upon the solid rock upon which Washington and his comrades built so well. Europe is watching our political exhibition. Let it be worthy of ourselves and our country.—N. Y. Witness.

Temperance.

LOCKPORT, Ill., May 26, 1876.

Five old friends accidentally met the other morning at Mr. Preston's and sat down for a social chat of an hour or so. Their ages ranging from seventy-seven to eighty-eight and averaging past eighty-two; and all healthy, strong and active, and in full possession and perfect use of their mental faculties and for the last fifty years all teetotalers.

Will some of our younger friends who indulge in chewing, smoking or drinking very moderately, make note of this. Respectfully, B. F.

Prohibition.

SENTENCE OF SALOON KEEPERS—A REMARKABLE ADDRESS.

Hon. N. M. Hubbard, District Judge of the Eighth Judicial District of Iowa, in passing a sentence upon some liquor dealers for violation of the Prohibitory laws of the State, said:

"While there are greater crimes known to the law which are punishable with great severity, there are none which involve more of those qualities known as despicable meanness and audacity, than the selling of intoxicating liquors.

"There is something in the taking of human life by violence so instantaneous that it shocks and terrifies the minds of all, and yet we look upon the man who takes human life quite as surely, but by a slow, lingering process—if not without condemnation, at least without horror. You who stand before the court for sentence are, in every moral sense murderers, and you are within the spirit, if not the letter, guilty of manslaughter, for the law says that whoever accelerates the death of a human being unlawfully is guilty of the crime. Your bloated victims upon the witness stand, and who undoubtedly committed perjury to screen you from the law, not only abundantly testify that you are accelerating death, but that you are inducing men to commit still greater crimes than your own.

"You still maintain the appearance of respectability, but how morally leprous and scrofulous you are inwardly, the ruin, poverty and idleness you are bringing upon this community declare as from the house-tops. You are living in idleness and eating the bread of orphans watered with widows' tears, you are stealthily killing your victims and murdering the peace and industry of the community, and thereby converting happy, industrious homes into misery, thriftless poverty and rags. You are sowing the seeds of ignorance, idleness and want among the generations to come.

"Anxious wives and mothers watch and pray in tears nightly with desolate hearts for the coming home of your victims, whom you are luring with the wiles and smiles of the devil into midnight debauchery.

"In fine, one can have no adequate conception of a cataract until he has seen Niagara, nor of the terrible fury and grandeur of a storm in mid-ocean until he has witnessed one; so no one can know the utter degradation and total depravity to which his species can be brought until he looks upon the desolate ruin caused by your hellish traffic.

"You are persistent, defiant lawbreakers, and shamelessly boast that in defiance of the law and moral sense of the community you will continue in your wicked and criminal practices.

"It has therefore now become the imperative duty of this court to let fall upon you so heavily the arm of the law that you shall either be driven from your nefarious traffic, or ruined in your fortunes or wicked prosperity. You have become a stench to the nostrils of the community, and all good men are praying that you be speedily reformed or summarily destroyed. By the providence of God and the favor of his court these prayers shall be speedily answered by signal and exact justice for your crimes. This court will feel a proud satisfaction in taking from you by law your ill-gotten gains and giving it to the common school fund of this county, where, let us hope it will assist in educating the rising youth to shun your vices and wicked practices.

"And finally let me entreat you, if you are not lost to every sentiment of humanity, to desist from your criminal vagabond traffic and betake yourselves to some honest calling for a livelihood; and you may yet become useful, virtuous citizens, and entitled to the respect of a Christian community; while if you persist in this way your ruin is certain, and you will receive, as you deserve, the execration of mankind.

"You may think that the sentence of the court is harsh and unjustly severe, but the court assures you that, compared with your crimes and the desolation you have already brought upon the community, it is mild in the extreme."

Reform News and Notices.

The National Christian Association, which has for its especial object the removal of those despotic, idolatrous and deistical associations commonly called lodges, will hold its Ninth Anniversary in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Ill., June 20, 21 and 22, 1876; the opening session being at 8 o'clock on the evening of June 20th.

The business meeting of the Association will be held in the Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison St., at 10-30 o'clock of June 20th. Members will find the office on the second floor at the head of the stairs.

The Board of Directors have selected Saturday, June 3d, as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret associations. Those who observe it are especially requested to remember the Convention in prayer. Ministers of the Gospel of that Saviour who is shut out from these secret lodges are requested to preach on the subject of Secretism on Sabbath, June 4th.

Past Master Ronayne will visit Washburn, Woodford Co., Ill., on June 5th. He will work the three degrees of Masonry and lecture there on June 6th, 7th and 8th. He can also visit any other point in that neighborhood where his services may be required. Address James Robinson, Washburn, or this office as soon as possible.

Footfalls Among the Wolverines.

DEAR K:—Since I last wrote I have made a visit to Calhoun and Barry counties, where in twelve days I gave ten lectures, and preached three sermons, after which I returned to Fenton, to meet and assist in settling my family, whom I had not seen in nearly five months. This done, I am again on the war path once more in Barry Co., making my home for a few days, with that sterling Anti-mason, Dea. S. P. Poole, and his amiable family. Here I seize upon time to write, and tell your readers of the incidents of the twelve days above referred to.

On the morning of April 15th, I took the cars from Highland to Battle Creek, where I found in waiting for me George Swanson Sr., and his son George the Jr., two as true Anti-masons as one will meet in a day's travel. To fall into the hands of such men is as refreshing to the toil-worn lecturer as is the shadow of a great rock in a weary land to the thirsty and sun-beaten traveler.

We were soon behind a good team and with umbrellas up, were off on a seven miles ride to the north-west corner town of Calhoun Co., where we arrived near 5 o'clock P. M. Here I was introduced to Rev. J. L. Crane, pastor of the Congregational church, who kindly asked me to tarry with him over Sabbath, and as he was unwell I preached for him morning and evening. On Monday and Tuesday evenings I lectured in the same house, to overflowing congregations, going over my usual grounds, very much to the astonishment of some, and to the intense disgust of some Masons, three of whom at the close of my last lecture, concluded for a while to let loose their jewel of a silent tongue; much to their own gratification, I doubt not, and certainly very much to mine.

I had noticed while speaking, at my left, on a seat running along the aisle, three gentlemen, who soon shaped themselves to me as members of the craft. I felt satisfied also, from their looks that "they meant business!" Accordingly, when at the close of my remarks, I gave opportunity to deny my statements, the one nearest the desk, after some hesitation arose and announcing himself a deacon of that church, began to speak of the "brother"—and then stopping, and with a look about as full of malice as a Christian deacon could well assume, went on to say; "No, I will not call such a man, brother!" whereupon he seemed relieved. He then took up a side expression I had thrown in, and tried hard to turn it into a personal attack upon myself. He touched upon no point I had made against the institution, only making a general charge against me of "misrepresentation." After which he said. "I am a deacon of this church, I am a Mason, and a Christian, and I intend to remain a Christian, so long as I am well!" What he meant to be when unwell he did not say. He then said; "The man knows we cannot deny what he says, and prove our denials, without exposing the secrets of our order," and then made a pitiful plea for the confidence of the audience, and then took his seat, perspiring like a man in a hay field.

The third man then took the floor, and in effect added nothing to what the other had said, save that with great empressement he made the same play upon the word "gentleman," which the deacon had gone through with on that of "brother;" after which he gave way to the gentleman who occupied the space between himself and the deacon. The most important contribution which this latter speaker made to the debate was to say that "Masonry was a religion—it is all religion." For which I immediately tendered him my hearty thanks.

This display of Masonic helplessness and imbecility in defence, taken in connection with the standing of the three defenders produced a painful and profound impression upon the pastor, and upon every true-hearted Christian in the audience. Here was a deacon in the church, a Universalist, and one as near an atheist as it will do to take into a lodge, banded together to defend Masonry, the bitter enemy of Christ and his church! It was an instructive scene, and the impression made upon many minds will never be effaced. The effect upon the pastor has been to make him a wide-awake, active worker in our cause, I am indebted to him and his family for kindnesses never to be forgotten.

From this place, having been joined by Remington, we passed on to

on Wednesday the 19th, where two lectures were given to full audiences in the U. B. house of worship. Nothing occurred here worthy of note, save that a Bro. Brown, with whom I was making my home, was, during Friday, thrown from a large roller and badly injured. At the close of my Thursday night's lecture we were taken by Rev. E. W. Bruce some 8 or 9 miles to where I spoke on Friday and Saturday nights in the Baptist church. Here is a young lodge in full blast, with some who were contemplating a connection therewith. Some of these were effectually cured. At the close of my last lecture a young lawyer accepted my challenge, and afforded the audience much amusement by his lame and impotent attempts to bolster up the rickety institution against the recoil of its own guns, directed by an Anti-mason. He admitted my charge that the Mason was a "slave," but undertook to offset it by claiming that when we join anything, even the church, we part with a portion of our liberty! Poor sceptic, how little he knew of the "glorious liberty of the sons of God!"

After he sat down a Baptist brother, who had become entangled in the meshes of Masonry, took the floor, and quite noisily put in what he intended as a defense of the lodge. I wish I could transfer the scene to paper, that your readers might see its sides of sadness and ridiculousness. He utterly scouted the idea of being enslaved and then frankly acknowledged that he was so tongue-tied as to be unable to deny my positions. The remarks of these champions of secrecy, under the circumstances were more damaging to Masonry than mine, and I felt grateful to the speakers for them. When they sat down I arose and called the attention of the audience to the fact that no position of mine had been denied, whereupon the lawyer arose again and began to say that I had spoken falsely respecting their obligations, whan Remington sprang to his feet and said, "Sir! did you not take those obligations?" Our champion stopped, turned pale with rage, stammered out, "It's none of your business," and sank into his seat. If Masonry has any more such defenders I shall always be happy to see them coming to the front.

Sunday evening the 23d, I preached for Bro. Bruce, the pastor of the Wesleyan church, with whom I found a real "Pilgrim's" home. In the front seat, right before me sat our young lawyer in company with a young lady, who gave him quite a sensation as she boldly gave her name for a dollar on a subscription here taken for our work, amounting to more than $30 00. God bless Mr. Bruce and his little church.

QUAKER SPRINGS,

some 22 miles north of this was our next stopping place, where, under the auspicies of Lewis Baldwin, a Baptist Bro. and Calvin Hill, Esq., I gave two more lectures in a large school-house. These two men are Anti-masons of the genuine stamp. On Wednesday the 26th, the former transported us to where, with two lectures in the Baptist church I closed up my labors for this trip. J. L. BARLOW.

Hartsville, Ind.—Visit of Mr. Ronayne.

HARTSVILLE, Ind, May 23, 1876.

According to announcement Mr. E. Ronayne of Chicago, delivered three ectures in the College chapel, and worked the first three degrees of Masonry on the 15th, 16th, and 17th evenings of May. The numbers present from time to time gave unmistakable evidence that there is a real interest felt upon the subject of secretism, and that the tide of opposition to it is rising in this section of the country. The lecturer gave evidence that he was perfectly familiar with his work "in the lodge." The points he presented in which Freemasonry is a system of religion, but idolatrous and anti-Christian, were so clear that Masons of ordinary sense could see if they desired, its relation to Christ, and the duty of Christians to Masonry; that persons conld not adhere to Masonry and be consistent Christians. He certainly satisfied all reasonable persons who were present that we can know what Freemasonry is without belonging to the lodge. What Past Master Ronayne did in initiating persons into the mysteries of Masonry in Key-stone Lodge, in Chicago, he did in the presence of many persons in the chapel in Hartsville. True, some Masons who were not present report that it was all a lie. Yet there are some of the craft who were present who admit the truth of what he did so far as they know. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." Thus it is with Masonry in many sections, its members are divided among themselves; some of them admit that its secrets are revealed, while others say they are not revealed.

The fruits of this meeting will be gathered in the future. Many young gentlemen and ladies abhor such obligations and tomfoolery as the initiatory ceremonies which Freemasonry imposes, while old persons and children look upon them with derision. He also showed in a graphic manner how Masonic obligations influenced civil proceedings in our courts. I sincerely hope that the lessons so earnestly and clearly presented will be honestly studied and reproduced by many, and that those faithful warnings of the speaker will be heeded. How can men who are bonnd be free? How can men who are the subjects of a despotism exercise at all times their rights as American citizens, or do their duty as earnest Christians? This good work of reform must go forward. There is much power all over this land in its favor, which is not yet aroused. Let all the friends of equal rights, of a free government, and of a living Christianity stand at their posts.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 18, 1876.

DEAR BROTHER COOK:—Patronage increases. I distribute more papers and tracts. I shall want a package of Cynosures of fifty soon, if there should be no falling off, and more if there should be a growing interest in the work as now.

People are less shy, more frank, and much more free to talk with me. Some express fears for me but as they see I am not hurt are less reticent and speak less guardedly and with less qualification. What an institution in a free republic to keep men in fear! Several warm friends from New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Virginia, Kentucky and Indiana, have called and speak words of encouragement and cheer.

I had conversation with a 33rd degree Mason from Boston who coverly conceded that Masonry was all out, and said he told enthusiastic Masons that it was all sham to pretend that there is any religion or any great moral excellence in Masonry. A Knight Templar the same day told me the whole thing was a humbug, and said that he told one of the fraternity so and he agreed with him; but still he told me he was so constitutionally a coward, he dared not come out. Not that he feared personal injury but that his business would be injured.

I sometimes ask myself the question involuntarily, Is it so? Have we such a fearful institution in our boasted free country, that can by its powerful and fear-producing menaces, nullify the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech? And I might add, and muzzle the press? Here I might also ask, Have we a government? If we have, it is a throttled government struggling with a grappling foe. And I pray not, "God save the King," but most devoutly and ardently, "God save the Republic."

We may, by these leaflets yet dispute successfully and displace the usurped power and almost conceded authority of oath-bound secrecy.

May 19.

A proposed Mason yesterday said that he would call this morning and get Morgan's Expose, because he wanted to know what he had before him. He has not come yet, but may be in any moment. I had a rush yesterday, both of friends to our cause, (sprinkled with Masonic inquirers) and those less anxious either way. I gave out more tracts and Cynosures than in any two or three days before. Well, I have sent these shining leaflets to thirteen States; Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. I do not remember that I told you that a Baptist D. D., from Kentucky, who reports himself as a life-long Anti-mason, called and left his blessing upon me and the enterprise, and his name and residence for future correspondence.

Did I speak yesterday of a Virginia evangelist, who says he finds secretism alarmingly in the way of the progress of the Gospel, and he has almost made up his mind to go into the lecture field.

Bro. Hubbard is very kind, and he and his excellent wife do all they need to make me comfortable; and he takes upon himself to scatter the tracts wherever he goes in the city, and has scattered a goodly number.

The tracts go with a strongly increasing distribution. To-day a New Zealander, an Austrian from Vienna, a man from Montreal, Canada, a D. D. from Memphis, Tennessee, an intelligent D. D. from New York City, men from St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minnnesota, and many others have generally taken all our tracts, that is one of each kind.

The Austrian promised he would translate them into their language. I have many a pleasant conversation about every day, not only with the friends of our cause but with professedly adhering Masons; and in some of these cases before we part, some of them unwittingly let out that they are not satisfied with Masonry, and some come out most heartily and declare themselves disgusted or in words to that effect. Many Anti-masons, both male and female express surprise that so strong an organization as ours exists, and they had not even heard of it; but when told the reason, that the press and pulpit are under Masonic surveillance, and prominent business men are afraid to speak, and that therefore almost universal silence on the subject reigns, the wonder ceases.

I see in the last Cynosure an account of the opening of the Centennial on the 10th. I failed to witness that, not arriving on the ground till after the exercises closed. The grounds were very muddy on account of a very heavy rain the day before.

Birds carry seeds immense distances where they germinate and originate new grades or kinds of vegetables. So these leaflets are bearing the seeds of truth all around the world. Let us pray that as they pass they may jostle down paganism in its native heathen form as well as its oath-bound secret forms. God is in this work and for him I labor.

I see it stated that I shall "keep the many readers of the Cynosure informed of the interesting features of the great Exposition as they occur." I will say most heartily, I wish I could; but in order to do it, only in outline, I should need to multiply myself by at least 100, with the skill of experts at reporting. Besides I am very closely confined to my work, to stand or sit by my book case and fold and hand out tracts; tell the people of our National Christian Association, (of which multitudes are ignorant) our Publishing House, our Cynosure, of our benevolent effort to deliver the unfortunate hood-winked and cable-towed victims from their fetters, of which the masses all over the country are ignorant.

The idea of its being a benevolent effort makes the Masons look queer, and it seems to some a huge joke, while some can appreciate its fitness and seem to feel the need and are glad, and express an astonishment that they have known nothing of it before. It is wonderful how many Anti-masons there are in every part of our land, and how everywhere they are put in fear to speak out their sentiments; and when they do, it is with bated breath. I tell them that if our country is ever delivered from this nightmare of secretism it will be after men have cast off all fear of the menaces of these denizens of dark conclaves, these would-be tyrants, and speak out boldly their views as they would if they were but grasshoppers. I here talk of the matter as freely as if it met the approval of all. Many look at me with astonishment. More approve of it silently than dare utter it, and look at me as the barbarians did at "Paul, expecting him to drop down dead," and sometimes say, "Are you not afraid the Masons will kill you?" which shows the awful surveillance under which the people are held in fear.

As to keeping the "readers of the Cynosure informed of the interesting features &c.", I will cheerfully do what I can; but as yet I am far from being informed myself; having seen but little of it. My special work commands almost my entire attention. "I am engaged in a great work and cannot come down;" a work that pertains not only to the civil but to the Christian welfare of our country; and not only of our country, but of the world. Leaflets have gone out from this little book-case belonging to Ezra A. Cook & Co., that are destined to begirt the earth with a flame of light, and penetrate the dark conclaves where treason is plotted against God and our country.

So you see I can do but little of what has been suggested. I do not get time even to read the dailies, or one of them. If I could have time to gratify my own desire for sight-seeing, I might then be better prepared to gratify others.

I would not have you think I am fool-hardy, or that I am insensible to the danger that may surround me; but these are times when Christians should not fear; when they should not tremble or betray trepidation. There is too much at stake, too much in jeopardy—not God's kingdom—but souls, and our civil institutions. It is a time for all who are friendly to this cauae to speak out and act against this heaven-daring enemy of all righteousness. One should not wait for another to know how he fares for his daring. Immediate and simultaneous effort should be made; for peril to souls and our civil institutions is imminent. No time for sleep. Every device that secretists are capable of or equal to, they are putting into requisition to increase their numbers and their strength, and their hold upon the people and the helm of civil and ecclesiastical power. They do not slumber; and their apparent quiet and innocent looks, and pretended indifference, augur only their secret activity; not a blank as to interest, as they would have us think, but a settled though silent purpose. Men of America, people of the living God, come to the rescue. God and the perils of our Christian and civil institutions call you to this work! A. D. FREEMAN.

They Do not Go Together.

An Odd-fellow was recently defending his secret order to a brother church member who had called secretism in question, and attempted to justify the lodge prayers which ignore Christ as the Way to the Father, on the ground that the membership had different views about religion! If Christians are required to leave their Christian faith at the door of the lodge are they sure of finding it when they come out? Is the devil dead? Does he as in the olden time still crouch in waiting to seize every opportunity of destroying souls by causing doubt where faith should be, and alluring with deceivableness of unrighteousness from the narrow life-path? It is to me utterly amazing to find men, otherwise sensible, so insensible to the cloven foot of secretism, while it pretends to be an angel of light.

Christian secretist, is Christ indeed your Master? Shall I address any one as a swearing Quaker and not be regarded as using an incongruous adjective? And shall not the secretist Christian be regarded as equally incongruous? It certainly would if the character of the terms were equally well understood. Jesus, the true light, is, alas, too often obscured by human darkness, which is ever so ready to be led by idle rites and ceremonies which should shame any man worthy of the name. T.

Rejoicing in the Lord's Work.

BOLIVAR, Ohio,
May 10th, 1876.

Dear Editor of the Cynosure:

Beloved, I am yet alive and able to work a little in our good cause. Would that I could accomplish more good, but I am rejoicing and praising God for the great good He has done, and is now doing on the earth. When the good news came that we were successful in raising the necessary funds to secure the munificent Carpenter donation, I said, "Glory to God." Thank and praise the Lord, I have a little stock in that grand affair, would that I had more. I rejoice with you, dear friends, and congratulate you all in this, one of our most grand victories over our enemies in this grand reform of ours. May God bless abundantly our general agent and lecturer, brother J. P. Stoddard, for the unceasing labor in this grand work. And now, in the language of that good old brother, Isaac Preston, in the Cynosure of April 20th, I too want to see the machinery of the Publishing House in full and perfect operation, and our thousand voluntary colporters engaged in selling the books and distributing the tracts of the society to the masses of mankind throughout the land, till the church and state, congress and the legislature, the courts, the jury and the ballot-box, religion, business and politics shall all be free from the blighting and demoralizing scourge of oath-bound secret conspiracies. Who of us that is looking for the fulfillment of God's word, when "The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea," but will give a hearty amen to the above, for most certain it is that these blighting curses must first be removed before God can fulfill his words and bring this wicked world back to Him.

But be encouraged, dear brethren. Jesus is going to reign until his enemies are all put under his feet. God is working delightfully and powerfully in the hearts of his people everywhere, and all he asks of us is to give him our heart, and all we have and are, and if we do his bidding he will do all the work himself, and we have only to wait, look on and rejoice, wonder and praise him.

My heart was made glad again, while beholding in the Cynosure, May 4th, the work of Rev. A. D. Freeman, at the Centennial. May the good Lord stand by, support and bless brother Freeman, in this grand enterprise. This is just what we want, brethren, and what we have often thought of and prayed for, that we could or would be represented at this our great Centennial Exhibition. Oh, I am so glad to learn that our beloved Christian Cynosure opposed to secret societies, is going to have a place so conspicuous, even in bold golden letters in this monstrous exhibition, where millions of people can and will behold it!

Now, my dear friends, I wish to say to you, that so far as enlightening the minds of the people upon this all important subject of secretism is concerned, to my mind the above exhibition is going to do more in that direction than all our previous efforts, that is if we back it up. If God bids us to loosen our purse strings a little, surely we must do that. Brother Cook says it is hoped a million persons may here receive three or four of our briefest and most pungent Cynosure tracts. Money is greatly needed to pay for these tracts. He seems to live by faith, for he says, "We are sure God will send it." Well, I believe so too, for I do believe in my very heart and soul that God is moving with us, and will bring to light the hidden things of darkness. Amen. O I do hope and trust that every earnest reader of the Cynosure and all others that are with us in this reform will lend a helping hand. Throw in your mite, brethren, and victory will most assuredly perch upon our banners. To this end we must not forget to put on the whole armor of faith and prayer. Here is where our strength lies; the gates of hell cannot prevail against it. We must resort often to that secret spot where God meets and talks with his children. O I am so sure and so glad that God hears and answers prayer! I have of late obtained a little book, "Alone with Jesus," and O how it has strengthened me!

"I love it; I love it; and who dare
To chide me, for loving the place of prayer.
Let me often be found in that hallowed spot
For a charm is there that the world knows not.
Let me listen to truth coming warm from the heart,
And feel by its power gushing tear-drops start;
Would you learn the spell? my Jesus is there,
And a sacred spot is the place of prayer.
I have sat in that bless'd place many a day
When our fathers were there with their locks of gray,
And I almost worshipped them as they bowed,
O'er the Bible to bless the gathered crowd.
Years passed on, and they were laid in the tomb;
And my cheek wore the freshness of manhood bloom,
But I found no joys that the heart could share,
Like those I had in the place of prayer.
They are past, they are past, those seasons so sweet;
But my heart lingers round them, nor can I forget,
Where thirsty and faluting my spirit has found
Waters cool and refreshing, and a balm for each wound.
Oh, say it is folly and deem me weak
When the scalding drops start down my cheek,
But I love it, I love it and cannot tear
My soul from the hallowed place of prayer."

A humble soul, like a white sheet, must be prepared to receive that which the hand of heaven shall imprint upon it.

Use not evasions when called upon to do a good action, nor excuses when you are reproached for a bad one.

The happy man: If thou hast a Christ in thy heart, a cross on thy shoulders, a world under thy feet, a heaven in thy eye, thou art the happy man.

A Christian has nothing to call his own, save Christ and his salvation; all the rest is surrendered to God.

Fraternally yours,

JOSEPH KEEL, SR.

Let the Abolitionists Boast.

[As Paul gloried, half-ashamed of his foolishness but COMPELLED to it, or rather let them sing unto the Lord for "HE hath triumphed gloriously."]

SARPY CENTRE, Neb.,
May 3d, 1876.

I wish to answer a column in the Cynosure of April 27th, entitled, "A New Emancipation Needed." The writer forgets that it was longer ago than in slavery times, that it was said by Christ, "Whosoever is not for me is against me," (said for all future generations); forgets it (if he was not an infant, or then living in some far off land where no knowledge of the evil could reach him), when he says he has never had any connection with either the pro-slavery or abolitionist party. Hands off, ye unsanctified in heart and life! "What hast thou to do to declare my counsel, saith the Lord." It was the "lapwater" abolitionist whose prayers and works came in remembrance before God, when, because slave-holders and their abettors, and men who sat astride the equator and would not come over and help, because of these, I say, He, the Avenger, brought blood up to the horses bridles, and lo! the work was done. It is our business to learn and to teach wisdom from the past. We ask the whole world to go with us. But, if they will not go, we can do without them. For little David's God is as helpful now as he was when Goliaht fell with the sneer yet upon his impudent lips. I have seen abolitionists whose bragging needed quelling, but it was not those who, not ashamed of what they have done, with armor still buckled are continuing to fight, with spiritual weapons, whatever is opposed to the kingdom of Christ; not putting on their own crowns of victory, but waiting in patient, earnest working until God himself shall adjust them. Why does Mr. H. say WE must do much more when he never had any connection with us? Little flock, whose zeal is kindled by reminiscences of past experience, fear not those who wish to have their past sins "healed but slightly," while the sore is still in their hearts, and they are not willing that their history should aid in the present movement, by giving a warning impetus to the wheels of God's rolling chariot. Do not be afraid to speak of Luther's reform for fear you will not gain the Catholics. Boast on, for Paul's example has proved that it is not always wrong. Yes, tell how the past was won ere we thought the battle done. How the cause of God, for his helpless sable sons, for the wretched drunkard, and for the fettered Mason is the one cause, the abolition of slavery. As far as heaven is from hell is the oppressor from the righteous man, and so how shall they work together except they are agreed? Their language is already confounded. I am of the opinion that we are yet too many, and I repeat "hands off, ye uncircumcised in heart and life." Repent of the past, and then will the "mountains be sunken and the valleys be raised," and blood guiltiness be remitted, and "The bloody chasm" shall be no more. Until then, friends, let us be content to work without the South if need be, and without the old fence riders too, who always said after pouring out their full vials of wrath, that "they were as good abolitionists as any of us." And they are now saying that they abolished slavery. Behold, who will God have in derision if not these? Farewell to the Jehu's, and welcome to the Stephen's, and to the Mary's who were first at the tomb of Christ. We like the dying testimony that does not fear stones. We like the mills of God; though they do seem slow, they are sure. And may we all have strength to abide in the day of the severest trial.

Noble veterans! Hoary-crowned birds of paradise, sing on, and warble of the wounds and glorious triumphs of the past. It will help you and us to bear the present. The spray of Jordan will too soon waft your music to the other side.

HANNAH D. CHAPMAN.

REMARKS.

J. H H., on the sixth page of the Cynosure of April 27th, writes from a different standpoint. In order to find the exact position of a fixed star it must be viewed from different stations. He forcibly presents an important thought, viz: "There is another and a much higher emancipation needed for the negro without which all that has yet been accomplished for him will be of little avail." All, who have, for a time, successfully engaged in Christ's service, are in danger of resting on past achievements. The emancipated people are fearfully preyed upon by Satan and his servants. The pretentions of secret societies lead many of them into a soul slavery. Do them good as you have opportunity.

We think, however, that allusions in the Cynosure to the abolition of American slavery will not prevent real Christian people of the South, from co-operating in this reform, who, under any circumstances would intelligently and sincerely do so.

The Cynosure has had for years a few subscribers in most of the southern States. Not more than a year ago, if we remember correctly, a subscriber living in Virginia wrote us that he and his father both fought in the rebel army. That since then he had been converted and by the grace of God, he saw the sin of slavery. He showed his interest in the war against secret societies by securing from six to ten new subscriptions for the Cynosure. The clouds of self-interest and false education, we trust, are being lifted from the once slave-cursed States. Their "seven thousand," who have not bowed the knee to Baal, will yet come up prayerfully, intelligently and uncompromisingly (strengthened by the record of the late abolitionists) to oppose those societies which, in words of J. H. H., "Are eating the godliness and the manliness out of the nation."

OUR MAIL.

Linus Chittenden, Crystal Lake, Ill., writes:

"My losses by the pickle failure last fall crowd close to $115, yet I expect to attend the Convention in June."

We hope many of our readers are preparing to be present at the June Convention, and it would be desirable for them to send us their names beforehand."

E. Norelius, Vaso, Minn., writes:

"The Swedish Lutheran Augustana Synod of North America is decidedly opposed to all secretism, and yet despite of all vigilance the wicked thing creeps into some of our churches wherever the people are more Americanized."

W. S. Spooner, Fairbury, Neb., writes:

"It is said when the enemy shall come in like a flood the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. The tendency of the times is that secrecy as a flood is coming in here. We see the people taught that it is the only sure and efficient remedy for high prices, financial difficulties, dishonest officials, and even domestic troubles. The charity and benevolence of secrecy is extolled to the skies, and Christianity is expected to lay its hand approvingly on the head of and even embrace the dark handmaid; and the fruit of the unholy alliance is seen in the many professedly Christian, yea ministerial, apologists, some of whom can in solemn conference resolve that secrecy is an evil and a sin, and resolve at the same time to advise Christians to avoid and abstain from all connexion therewith, well knowing that history, reason and revelation all alike teach that it requires something more than advice and admonition to enable and even to constrain any one to abstain from all appearance of evil. We need, the world needs, Christianity needs, to have a standard reared so all the world can see it; a standard true, pure, consistent, undefiled, incorruptible, a standard to which all can look for deliverance and look with confidence. And who shall lift up this standard but Christ, the great Head of the church; Christ, to whom all eyes are turned."

A. J. Weaver, East Sandy, Pa., writes:

"God showed me before I knew anything about its secret works of darkness, that Masonry was a wicked institution, and that I could not receive the sacrament of the Lord's Supper from the hand of a man whom I know to belong to the order, without being a partaker of his sin."

C. D. Brooks, Dunkirk, N. Y., writes:

"You may put me down as a perpetual subscriber to the Cynosure, while the monster evils it combats have such an unhealthy sway in our land."

James G. Laughlin, College Springs, Ia., writes:

"We were grasshoppered last year, but it is my purpose to have a little stock in your Publishing House, in the last $10,000."

We hope many who as yet have no stock in the Pub. House will invest as many shares as possible, so that we may soon have a warrantee deed of it.

J. A. Brenneman, Davis, Ill., writes:

"A few of us here wish to know what we shall do in order that we may vote the American ticket. We wish to know how many subscribers to the Cynosure there are in this State, and their addresses, if it would not be too much trouble. We are so few in this State and so far between, that it may appear useless for us to try to do anything, but for one I intend to keep doing as long as I feel that God is with me in the work. The more I see the working of the institution of Freemasonry, the more earnest I am in opposing it, and how any Christian, man or woman, having any knowledge of its true character and influence, can hold their peace and not cry out against it, I cannot understand. We want in this State a first-class lecturer to travel and lecture all the time."

John Macauley, Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

"There is no church here that excludes lodge members of any kind. I have taken the Cynosure for three years and expect to take it a good many more."

Thos. E. Radabaugh, Cambria Mills, Mich., writes:

"I am in the midst of secrecy; surrounded by grangers, Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, Odd-fellows and Freemasons, of all grades and classes, big and little, high and low. O that God may speed the day when all such clans shall be swept from the face of the earth!"

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for June 11.—The Apostles Before the Council.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts v. 27-42. Commit 27-33; Primary verses, 38,39.

27 And when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the high priest asked them,

28 Saying, Did not we straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us.

29 Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men.

30 The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree.

31 Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

32 And we are his witnesses of these things: and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33 When they heard that they were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

34 Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space;

35 And said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men.

36 For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered and brought to nought.

37 After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he also perished: and all, even as many as obeyed him, dispersed.

38 And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

39 But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.

40 And to him they agreed: and when they had called the apostles, and beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go.

41 And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name.

42 And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ.

—The attitude of the world toward the Christian religion has ever been one of prohibition. By faggots and stakes, by floggings, by rocks, by torture, by prisons and cruel persecutions, it has repeatedly said: "Did not we straitly command you not to preach in this name?" The reason is not far to find; for "the friendship of the world is enmity against God." Luke xiv. 26; John xv. 19; xvii. 14; Gal. i. 10; vi. 4; 1 Thess. ii. 4; Jas. iv. 4; 1 John ii. 15; iii. 12.

—We cannot escape the blood. "This man's blood" must come upon us either in condemnation or in justification. Heb. ii. 3; x. 29; Luke xxii. 20; Eph. i. 7; Heb. ix. 22; 1 John i. 7; Rev. vii. 14, 15.

—Courage to speak for Christ, courage to act for Christ, courage to live for Christ anywhere and everywhere is the great need to-day. Every Christian ought to feel that he "ought to obey God rather than men." How shall the weak, the timid, and the fearful become strong and courageous? Easily enough—for courage is, also, a gift of God. "Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." Josh. i. 9; Judg. vi. 14; Ps. xxvii. 1; Is. xxxv. 4; 1 Cor. xvi. 13; Eph. vi. 10; 2 Tim. ii. 1.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Farm and Garden.

Fruits for Home Garden.

The currant is of very great importance in keeping up a succession of summer fruits for the family—coming next after strawberries and raspberries. In fact we prefer to use them mixed with raspberries, while we can, in preference to either alone, as the one is deficient in acid, while the other has superabundance. However, when the currants are fully ripe, and the weather is at summer heat, the acid of the currant is grateful and wholesome to most people who are accustomed to eating fruit. The fact that children and others want considerable sugar with acid fruits ought not to be so much of an objection on the score of economy, for sugar is of itself quite nutricious, when used with other articles, and less costly than butcher's meat.

The quality of currants depends more upon the culture than the kind or variety. That is to say, the common red variety is as good as any, if the bushes are well cultivated; but if neglected and starved, the fruit is small and very sour. Clayey soil, a little moist, but not wet, is the best for currants, but they will do well on any soil if made rich, and if dry, give mulching of manure or litter about the roots. Pruning, too, is essential to prevent their growing too thick, so as to exclude sun and air from the leaves and fruit.

The Cherry Currant and the Versailles are larger than the common but not any better, if as good. The White Grape is a large and fine variety, desirable for table use, especially to mix with the red. The White Dutch is also very good, only a little smaller—both are thought to be less acid than the reds, but this depends mainly on culture. Do not let the ground about the bushes "go to grass" if you want good fruit; and remember to give a dressing or mulching of manure annually.

The currant worm is best kept off by dusting the leaves with powdered hellebore, to be had of all druggists.

Blackberries.

If any reader is now making his first experiment in the culture of blackberries let me give him a word of advice, to wit: that he try mulching instead of hoeing the plants. If, however, he has a large lot of them, set in rows so that a horse cultivator can be used between them, it may be best to cultivate and hoe. But for small patches I think mulching is better for keeping down weeds and keeping the soil cool and loose around the plants. I used to try hoeing, but the rows were near together so I could not use a cultivator, and I found in a short time that I had gotten hold of a bad job. Wherever I cut a root with my hoe there a shoot would spring up, and very soon I had three plants where there was room but for one. Becoming disgusted with this method of culture I took up my plants and decided to mulch instead of hoeing. Old hay or straw costs but little, will keep down weeds and promote the growth of the plants. Let those who have been in the habit of hoeing give the mulching a trial.—Cor. Boston Cultivator.

The Fruit Recorder says the Snyder and Western Triumph are the two hardiest blackberries, the shoots being alive to the very tips after a hard winter which badly winter-killed other sorts.

Cucumbers are generally permitted, or compelled rather, to grow flat upon the ground, but vines have been trained upon trellises with the very happiest results. Indeed nature never intended the cucumber for a mere surface runner, else it would not have been provided with grasping tendrils. A low order of trellis keeping both vine and fruit off the ground, adds largely to the yield and the quality. When space is an object, a great saving of ground may be accomplished by training upon high trellises.—Cor. New England Homestead.

The Tract Work.

Hereafter we propose giving a weekly statement of receipts for the tract fund with names of contributors, also the names of those to whom tracts and books are sent. We give in this number the receipts from Jan. first and also the names of those to whom tracts have been sent. Seventy-four thousand pages of tracts have already been sent to the Centennial at Philadelphia. Within the past nine months Enoch Honeywell, Esq., has furnished us for distribution 284,000 pages of his two tracts, which we are fully assured have saved scores of young men from the soul slavery of the lodge.

Has God entrusted any money to you that you can use better than in this tract work?

EZRA A. COOK,
Secretary Tract Committee.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1876.

OUR FAST, JUNE 3rd.

The most cursory reader of the Scriptures must see that in no one particular, has the religion of the present day receded from the religion of the Bible more obviously than in the matter of fasting. Moses, Elijah, and the Saviour fasted. Prophets and apostles, holy men of all ages have fasted; including especially the personal disciples of Christ and the founders of the Christian church. They fasted when they chose church officers, when they ordained them, and on all occasions and events where Divine light, guidance, instruction or deliverance were needed.

A father had brought to Christ his demoniac son, who had been a long time in that case. The demon who possessed and tormented the child, was cast out and the son returned to his father. And the disciples asked, "Why could not we cast him out?" Our Lord answered, "Because of your unbelief;" but added, "This kind goeth not out except by prayer and fasting."

If there be an enterprise on earth fit to compare with dislodging and driving out Satan from his control over that child, it is assailing his worship in his strongholds, the lodges of spurious worship and counterfeit religion. These lodges which call themselves "ancient," in their idolatry are so. And if the restoration of the faculties of that youth, bodily and mental, which had long been habituated to the sorcery and magnetism of the devil, required "prayer and fasting" as the appropriate means in his case, how much more the deliverance of whole neighborhoods from the cunning of that vile craft in whose ritual the minds of a mass of men are brought into loathsome contact with Satan, whose touch, like the torpedos, deadens the moral sensibilities and darkens the moral natures of men.

But the National Christian Association regards ours as a "Christian government," and government itself as the ordinance of God. And our politics require fasting as well as our religion. The fast ordered by a Mordecai and kept by Queen Esther was political fast for national deliverance. And it was a successful fast.

The fastings of the celebrated "Long Parliament," have been jeered at as fanaticism; but as Macauley has said, no man ever jeered at one of the men who inaugurated and carried through the mighty struggle which saved the popular rights and liberties of England and the world, when he met him in debate or in battle. Hume, though a regular tory and apologist of monarchy and the Stuarts, gives the highest possible enconiums to the Parliament, and especially the lower house of it, which went into and through that strife, and brought out of its seven times heated furnace the rights and liberties of mankind. They were the coolest, clearest headed set of men on earth.

"The Commons," says Hume, "renewed their eternal complaints against the growth of popery, which was ever the chief of their grievances." But while they saw and said, as Gladstone has done since, that the sworn minions of a foreign pontiff whose creed is despotism, could not be good and true citizens of Great Britain, they voted the needed supplies, though their king was an ill-concealed papist and his queen an open and avowed one. And though Charles told them in plain terms, that if they did not vote him what subsidies he demanded he could and would rule the realm, themselves included, without their aid or co-operation; and his favorite minister in power reiterated and enlarged their sovereign's claim of a right to rule as sole despot, without the forms of civil government; yet they lost neither their temper nor their sense. Though they reformed the criminal code by narrowing the definition of treaaon and abolishing the torture, they impeached and executed both Laud and Strafford, the tools of his tyranny, and finally brought Charles himself to the block, and thus held up to the nations the hitherto unheard of and almost undreamt of truth, that kings and pontiffs are amenable to law. And though fanaticism came afterwards, it came not as the child of prayer and fasting, but as the offspring of the arbitrament of blood.

But we, to-day, are neither Roundheads or Cavaliers, but simply associated Christians and citizens. And though we naturally look back to the fires which forged out American freedom, and see in the titles, gewgaws and trumpery of the lodge, still, as then, the means by which priests and despots have ever managed the masses; yet we neither follow Cromwell nor Charles, but Christ and the Apostles in prayer and fasting for the deliverance of man.

THE SABBATH—"BLUE LAWS."

The comments of the press on the vote of the Commission, twenty-seven to nine, to close the Centennial Exhibition on the Sabbath, evince a degree of ignorance in the writers which is both amusing and amazing. They show.

1st, a general belief in the "Blue Laws," which error has been an hundred times corrected. The public has been informed, over and again, that the only "Blue Laws," were a small volume under that name published by an English Episcopal nector, as a vituperative romance and caricature of the laws of the early colonies against Sabbath-breaking and other popular vices.

2d, It is curious that such laws are popularly spoken of as belonging to New England, whereas the most stringent of them were enacted south of Mason's and Dixon's line. Thus:—

South Carolina, in 1712, it was "enacted," "That all and every person whatsoever, shall, on every Lord's day, apply themselves to the observation of the same, by exercising themselves thereon in the duties of piety and true religion, publicly and privately; and, having no reasonable or lawful excuse, on every Lord's day shall resort to their parish church, or some other parish church, or some meeting, or assembly of religious worship," etc.

As late as 1803, Tennessee enacted: "That all and every person or persons whatsoever, shall, on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, carefully apply themselves to the duties of religion and piety, and all labor on land and water, except works of necessity and charity is prohibited on that day."

As early as 1835, twenty-three then existing States had enacted laws punishing the violation of the Sabbath, though not all of them, like the States above cited made laws compelling attendance on public worship.

Yet prints like the Chicago Tribune, which we recently cited, are making the public believe that the "Sunday Laws" were peculiar to New England, and belong to the imaginary "Blue Laws" which never had an existence. Whereas attempted legal coercion in religion belonged more appropriately to the institutions of the South where slavery tinged everything with its own despotic nature.

But about a divinely sanctioned and legally guarded Sabbath, there was no diversity of opinion, except perhaps in Louisiana, where the first legislation was French. It is so plain that the abolition of the Sabbath puts labor at the mercy of capital, compelling the masses to divide their time between toil and vice, and it is so obvious that the Fourth Commandment, providing the teaching-day, is the very atmosphere in which the other nine commandments draw their breath, that the natural reason of men demands a Sabbath till corrupted by priestcraft or infidelity.

Weekly Prayer Meeting in the Carpenter Building.

We congratulate our leaders on the opening of a prayer meeting intended to be held weekly in the new building so kindly donated by Mr. Carpenter. The General Agent, Mr. Stoddard conducted the services on Tuesday evening of last week, and the President of the Chicago local Association, Rev. J. W. Bain, was expected to conduct them on Tuesday evening of this week, in the same place, viz: The rear room of the second story which has been fitted up very comfortably for that purpose as well as the more special meetings for the work of the Association.

At the close of the prayer meeting those present unanimously adopted the following:

We hold that there is no need of secret societies to promote true Christianity, to secure individual rights or for the promotion of any legitimate object.

2d, We regard such societies for the promotion of these objects as an impeachment of the wisdom of Christ in founding his church, as an abiding danger to our political institutions, a special reproach upon the freedom of conscience, and a great barrier to the full enjoyment of that civil and religious liberty which belongs to every free man and is the crowning glory of our beloved country.

—Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, has arranged to speak as follows on his trip to the Anniversary: Jackson, Mich., June 8th and 9th; La Otto, Ind., 11th to 13th; Albion, Ind., 14th and 15th; Ligonier, 16th to 18th. After the National Convention he visits Wheaton and Princeton, Ill.

—The Biblical Messenger, heretofore issued at Waterbury, Vt., has now changed its office of publication to Exeter, N. H.

—In September, 1871, the Knights Templar had a grand parade in Baltimore, and paid a visit to Mt. Vernon (to keep up the name of Washington's connection with Masonry) stopping in Washington over one day. Of their visit it is enough to know that the Woman's Club of Washington charged them in the public press with reviving the business and filling the empty coffers of the houses of ill fame of that city. We have taken some trouble to get a copy of Geo. A. Townsend's caustic review of the parade in Baltimore. This same letter was put in type and in the forms ready for press on the Saturday evening before the Great Fire in this city. On Sunday night the type was melted or burned up, and no copy of the letter could then be found for re-publication, though eagerly sought for. The demonstration of these "Sir Knights" at the Centennial begun day before yesterday makes the reappearance of this letter of some interest.

—Rev. A. H. Springstein lately sent to the Reformer and Free Press the statement of a prominent Michigan Freemason. He writes:

"Lawyer Look, a Masonic author of some note, and the Grand Lecturer of Michigan, said to me, 'You are right, the lodge does rule the country, from the Congress down to the Post office, including this Postoffice; and we intend it shall, and you can't help yourselves.' This Mr. Look is one of the converts in the recent revival in the Pontiac M. E. church. One Methodist, in presence of all, admitted that he took the first degree just as I gave it in the Postoffice. He then said that it was a help to his religion, and he intended to take the second and third degrees soon.

While we give some time to this question, the work of grace is becoming more and more deep on my charge. Many are seeking to be sanctified wholly; some have found. We thank God and press onward."

—Dr. C. H. Fowler, formerly of the Centenary M. E. church of this city and now President of Northwestern University, was elected to succeed Dr. Curry as editor of the New York Christian Advocate. Dr. Fowler is a talented and ambitious man, whose proselyting efforts for the lodge have been somewhat conspicuous at the West, and do not promise much assistance in his new position to the efforts for a pure church and a ministry unpolluted with false rites and "strange" oaths.

—The Illinois State Republican convention nominated last week for Governor, Shelby M. Cullom; Lieut. Gov., Andrew Shuman; Geo. H. Harlow for Secretary of State; T. W. Needles for Auditor; Edward Rutz for Treasurer and J. K. Edsall for Attorney-general.

Of these Shuman, Harlow and Needles are Freemasons. There must be some better names than these presented for the suffrages of voters to whom the lodge is an abomination.

—Monmouth College announces that the services of Blaney Lodge quartette of this city have been engaged for the annual commencement, to take place June 22nd. We question whether this is not an acknowledgement on the part of an anti-lodge institution which might be worth the notice of its Board of Trust. A chorus of students singing the glorious psalms of praise would be music more pleasing both to ear and heart on such an occasion.

—The following item from the Free Methodist informs us of the final arrangement by which the Reformer and Free Press has been transferred to Messrs. Baker and Arnold, publishers of the first named journal:

"In our issue of April 19th, we announce that the Reformer and Free Press had been transferred from Arnold Brothers to Rev. John Levington and Rev. A. H. Springstein of Mich. At the time the announcement was made we supposed the arrangement was so far completed as to warrant the notice, but the plan has not been carried out, and the list of subscribers has been united with that of the Free Methodist; an arrangement which we trust will be satisfactory to all concerned. The Arnold Brothers have labored faithfully to keep the paper in its own field but failing health and a multitude of other cares have compelled them to desist from its farther publication."

—The following resolutions relating to the deliverances of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church upon secret societies and dancing, were adopted at the last meeting of the Presbytery of Kansas:—

1. That this Presbytery understands the deliverance of the General Assembly on the subjects of secret societies and on dancing to be adverse to any of its members belonging to secret orders of any kind, and also that the members of the church should not engage in or countenance the dance, even as a social amusement.

2. That all church sessions under the care of this Presbytery are directed to maintain kindly, but firmly, the church principles on these subjects.

3. That all members of the U. P. church, by their vows when they unite with the church, are bound to observe the order, and be subject to the teachings and discipline of the church while they are in connection with it.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church met in Pittsburgh last week.

—Mr. Moody is visiting his friends and the Christian workers of his church in Chicago. It is not expected that he will engage in any protracted public effort at present.

—The St. Louis Presbytery is the only body in the Southern Presbyterian church that has taken action in favor of establishing fraternal relations with the Northern Assembly.

—A petition has been addressed to the United Presbyterian General Assembly, which met in Philadelphia May 24th, asking it to change the rule forbiding the use of musical instruments in the churches.

—Dr. H. M. Field, of the Evangelist, reports from England that Sir William Muir, a resident of thirty-nine years and Finance Minister, tells him that "the missionaries have been the benefactors of India; that to them greatly is due (especially to the labors of Dr. Duff) the magnificent system of national education which has grown to such proportions, and he added (what it pleased me to hear), 'We owe a great deal to your American missionaries in the Northwest.'"

—India has her own Sunday-school monthly. It is the official organ of "The Indian Sunday-school Union" and its first two numbers have been received in this land. The new publication is called The Indian Sunday School Journal It is an attractive magazine of twenty-eight pages, issued from the American Missionary Press at Lucknow. Besides notes on the International Lessons, the numbers already issued present several instructive papers read before the recent Allahabad Sunday-school Convention.

—The Right Hon. W. E. Forster has undertaken to distribute the Peek prizes gained by 4,000 children of the London School Board in subjects of Scripture teaching. In addition to Mr. Peek's prizes, which will be awarded annually, the Religious Tract Society gives 4,000 handsomely bound New Testaments. No fewer than 70,000 children entered their names to compete for prizes.

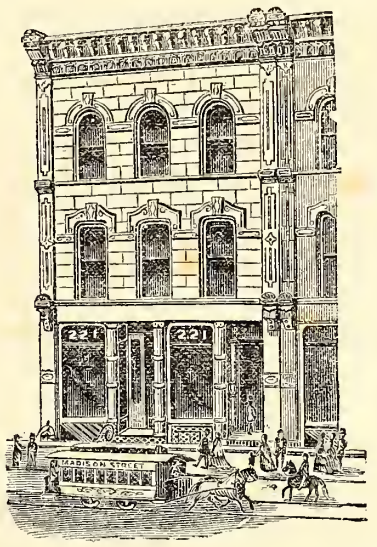
—The union between the Reformed Presbyterian Church and the Free Church in Scotland took place on May 25. The accession to the strength of the latter church will be forty-two congregations, with a membership of some 7,500 and an annual income of about 14,000l.

—It is announced that fifty preachers are needed to supply the vacant Presbyterian churches and mission fields in Missouri and Kansas this Spring.

News of the Week.

—The trial of Munn, ex-revenue collector for whiskey frauds was concluded here last week. He was acquited.

—Gen. Sherman has by direction of the President, telegraphed to the military authorities in the vicinity of the Black Hills to protect all whites coming in from the Hills and all those going there with food for those who are in need of it and who cannot get away without assistance; but gives instructions that all those who persist in invading the Indian country without authority from the government are to be left to take care of themselves.



—Rev. Dr. Storrs' Church of the Pilgrims paid off a mortgage on their edifice last week of $100,000. The mortgage was held by the North American Life Insurance Company of New York.

—The fast mail train on the morning of May 26th jumped the track at West Albany. The fireman, Charles Johnson, was killed and Sixbury, the engineer was fatally injured. The cars were thrown five or six yards from the track.

—A heavy reduction in passenger rates is announced by the New York Central management, owing it is said, to cutting under by rival lines leading west from Boston. The new tariff to go into effect to-day on the New York Central places the fare between Chicago and New York at $17, instead of $25, as before; Cincinnati, $15; Indianapolis, $16; St. Louis, $22; Louisville, $19; Detroit, $13. This will compel a corresponding reduction upon the connecting lines from Chicago to the seaboard.

—The European troubles grow more complicated and threatening. England does not fully agree with the memorandum from Russia which has been urged by other powers, and a European conference may have to be called. Meanwhile she is preparing for emergencies, as 100 tons of gunpowder and a million cartridges have just been dispatched from Woolwich to Gibralter, Malta, and the Mediterranean fleet. This is quite independent of the ordinary supply. It is stated also that all available workmen are to be placed at work on the ships which are nearest to a seagoing condition.

—The Turkish government is moving vigorously in its dealings with Salonica rioters, of whom nineteen were sentenced on Friday and Saturday last —four to capital punishment, and the others to forced labor for life, and to various terms of imprisonment.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The next annual meeting of the corporate body will be held at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, June 20th, 1876.

The object of this Association is:—
"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

Thy Will and Mine.

Laid on thine altar, O my Lord divine,
Accept this gift to-day, for Jesus' sake.
I have no jewels to adorn thy shrine,
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make;
But here I bring, within my trembling hand,
This will of mine—a thing that seemeth small;
And thou alone, O Lord, canst understand
How, when I yield thee this, I yield mine all.

Hidden therein, thy searching gaze canst see
Struggles of passion, visions of delight,
All that I have or am, or fain would be—
Deep loves, fond hopes, and longings infinite;
It hath been wet with tears and dimmed with sighs,
Clinched in my grasp till beauty hath it none.
Now from thy footstool, where it vanquished lies,
The prayer ascendeth—May thy will be done!

Take it, O Father! ere my courage fail,
And merge it so in thine own will, that e'en
If in some desperate hour my cries prevail,
And thou give back my gift, it may have been
So changed, so purified, so fair have grown,
So one with thee, so filled with peace divine,
I may not know or feel it as mine own,
But gaining back my will may find it thine.

God's Hidden Ones.

PSALMS LXXXIII. 3.

God hides his people. He gathers them as an hen gathereth her chickens under her wings. To him they run as to a place of safety, a rock of refuge, a tower of strength. They lodge under the shadow of the Almighty. He covers them with his feathers, and under his wings do they trust. He is their shield and buckler. In the time of trouble he hides them in his pavilion, and keeps them in the secret of his tabernacle. In the secret of his presence he shelters them from the pride of mortals and from the strife of tongues. In famine, pestilence, persecution and trial, he shields them from harm, and watches them with an unslumbering eye. And in the day of judgment he shall say, "Come my people, enter into thy chambers, and hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast."

Ever does God work for the deliverance of his people. He hides Noah from the deluge, Moses in the ark, Elijah by the brook-side, Daniel in the lions' den, the Hebrews in the fiery furnace, and thus in a thousand wondrous ways, he shields, and guards, and hides his trusting ones.

But we must be content with our hiding place. Often we become dissatisfied with our obscurity. The lamb frets at the confinement of the fold. The dove flies away from its cote to soar on high with hawks and eagles. The Christian dislikes to condescend to men of low estate, and longs to climb the pinnacle of wealth, and fame, and pride and power. He envies the great; he minds high things; he says I, too, will spread abroad my name and fame; he strives, and cries, and causes his voice to be heard in the street; he is honored, exalted, respected, revered, all men seem to speak well of him, as their fathers did of the false prophets; wealth, fame, and luxury are his; until his soul is absorbed, his feet have well nigh slipped, and it seems as though he could no longer be reckoned with God's hidden ones.

Suddenly there comes a change. God loves the man,—he lays his hand upon him and hides him. Sickness comes, and he drops out of sight, hidden forever from worldly eyes, and how soon forgotten by the world in which he moved! Or God hides him in poverty, and lowliness; and teaches him that riches are not forever, and that the Lord is the hope of his people. Or calamities overwhelm him; he falls into disrepute; he is overtaken in faults; or slanderers assail him, and his name which once filled the trump of earthly praise, is sneered at, and derided, and hissed forth in very key of hatred and disgrace. The pinnacle on which he stood totters beneath his feet; the reputation which he sought is blotted and blasted in an hour; the multitudes who hailed him as a leader and a pattern, look now at him in pity or in scorn; the throng that shouted hosanna, now say crucify; the dreams and ambitions of his life are over, he covets the obscurity of a peasant's cot, and wears his withered honors as a burden and a shame: his spotless garments are defiled; the dove, soaring among eagles, comes back with torn plumage and mournful voice; the lamb fares hard among dogs and wolves; and he who has sought and found his fill of worldly praise, longs for a place where he can hide and die alone.

Christian, are you one of God's hidden ones! Be quiet and content. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Learn of him who is meek and lowly of heart. Before honor is humility. Be content with your dinner of herbs, and do not covet the "stalled ox and hatred therewith." Be thankful for your hiding-place, and in lowliness and peace await your Master's will. Your day of honor is to come. Be faithful in your low estate until God shall bid you, "come up higher." Your day of glory will come; though slow, it will be sure. This world is not the place where Christians display their glory. They are strangers here; they follow a crucified and exiled king; they share his shame and they expect to share his glory. Their royal robes are not yet ready; their crowns are laid up until "that day" when the Lord the righteous judge shall give them to his saints. Till then they are hidden; they walk the Master's lowly path. The world knoweth us not because it knew him not. But when He shall come "whom none of the princes of this world knew," and who, mocked by Herod and condemned by Pilate, once hung bleeding upon the malefactor's cross, then shall his hidden ones be revealed. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father." "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever."—The Christian.

Incident in an Observatory.

It is now some years since I paid a visit to the royal observatory at A——. I had the good fortune to secure an introduction to the assistant astronomer, a genial and communicative sort of a man, who took both pride and pleasure in showing the wonderful instruments and contrivances, in the large and lofty building for obtaining with mathematical exactitude, the facts and data of his science, a science which, it will be admitted, is, apart from religious truth, the sublimest and most awe-inspiring that can engage the human mind. It would be interesting to give an account of the various instruments in an observatory, and their uses, such as those to which my attention was drawn. I pass this over, and all the more readily, since books are easily procurable, in which such information is clearly and attractively given. My special object now, is to relate a serious and striking incident which occurred during my visit, involving moral and spiritual lessons, suggested to the writer at the time, and which were often remembered with advantage in after life. In the course of our inspection, my friend the assistant astronomer, pointing to a certain instrument, said, "This is called a mural circle. It is contrived for a two-fold purpose, to observe the transit of stars across the meridian, and to mark the angular distance of each of those stars when so crossing, from the pole of the heavens. It is not to this, however, I wish to direct your attention, but to a rather startling fact, which I think will interest you more. "You observe," he said, "the large size of the instrument; it is a telescope some feet in length, in connection with a double wheel of wide circumference, and of heavy spokes, one wheel is fixed, and the other, you see, is movable with the instrument, and the whole apparatus is firmly supported in the plane of the meridian on a long and powerful axis, which axis is inserted deeply into the great column of stone, from whence is derived the name of the instrument, mural, that is, wall circle."

"It is of the greatest consequence," he continued, "that this instrument should be steady; even a slight vibration would vitiate an observation and render it useless. To secure steadiness this column of stone, or rather of marble (for it is really such, the neighborhood supplying that material in abundance) is of the most massive construction. It rises, as you perceive, about seven feet from the floor, is sunk several feet into the earth, and the whole structure, column, circles and telescope, weigh together some 120 tons."

"You see that vessel there," he said, while pointing to it. It was a large cup of mercury resting on a brass stand, which had been let, like the axis of the mural circle, into the marble column. "You observe," he continued, "the shadow of the window sash upon the bright surface of the mercury." "Yes," I replied, "and it is very distinct, for the sun is clearly shining." "And that so much better for my purpose," he observed. "Now," he proceeded, "keep your eye fixed steadily upon the shadow of the window sash, while I give a gentle blow to the marble column." I did as directed, and while gazing intently upon the shadow mark, my friend, with his hand gave such a blow to the marble pillar as boys in sport give their playmates, and to my amazement the shadow on the cup of mercury began on the instant to move and tremble. "You see," said he, "the effects of that little concussion. It has stirred and agitated the whole 120 tons of solid stone, and the effect," he added, "will never be lost. The vibration will continue in its results and effects forever. And no doubt," he went on to say, "from what you have seen, you will now be prepared to believe the saying of one of our modern philosophers, which some in their ignorance have laughed at, namely, this: That at every step we take we shake the world." As I looked and pondered I seemed never to see so clearly, and to feel so deeply my responsibility as a moral agent in the kingdom of God. It was plain to demonstration, that no act or even word of mine was without its result; but that everything I did bore a relation and exercised an influence upon the world around me, and that not merely upon the material but upon the moral, upon the lives and characters of my fellow men; for if result followed action in the one world it was certain the same thing must obtain in the other. To use the idea of an apostle (although in another connection), I could not live to myself, and neither could I die to myself. I seemed also to perceive with startling vividness that no human deed however trifling it may appear, can, with truth, be regarded as insignificant. I had known before that in certain special circumstances, a so-called trifling act may be fraught with stupendnous results; for I had read how in passing through an Alpine ravine, a loudly sounded word of human speech has been known at times to bring down upon a band of travelers, by its vibration in the air, the overhanging avalanche. But here it was revealed that every movement, springing from the living forces of heart and mind within me was productive of no mean result.—British Messenger.

THE END OF THEATRICAL PERFORMERS.—Epitaph on the tombstone of a performer and his wife in the graveyard at Waterbury, Conn.:

"Out! out! brief candle;
Life is but a walking shadow
A poor player that struts and frets his hour upon the stage, and then is heard no more.
It is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."

The dismal truth of this epitaph, the life of many a theatrical performer illustrates. Do not patronize and smile upon these victims, whom Satan uses for the destruction of souls.

PROPHETSTOWN, Ill., May 3, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I am a boy 14 years old. I am a constant reader of the Cynosure. I like the tone of the paper very much. I think secrecy is as great a sin as slavery. I am very much pleased to hear the Cynosure is a going to be represented at the Centennial. I enclose you one dollar for special fund of tract distribution. Yours for the right, C. FRED RISTOW.

Thank you, Freddie, for your kind and timely contribution. It may be the means of savingmany boys from the dreadful snare of the lodges.

BELLFONTAINE, Columbia Co., Wis., May 8, 1876.

MR. EDITOR:—I am a little boy 11 years old. My father is a farmer, and reads the Cynosure, and likes it very much, and gives some copies away. He has got some of your tracts and gives them away too. I send you an acrostic, and would like to have you publish it if you think best. Yours truly, ARTHUR C. ALLEN.

You will see your acrostic on this page. It's a good subject you have chosen. May the Lord indeed be on your side in life snd death. Try again.

Trotty's Almanac.

Monday to wash all the dolly's clothes,
Lots to be done, as you may suppose.

Tuesday to iron, and put away;
That takes a body the live-long day.

Wednesday to darn and to fix and mend—
Plenty of sewing, you may depend.

Thursday, if shiny, we visiting go;
Then we are dressed in our best, you know.

Friday—oh! then we go out to shop;
Once you get out, it is hard to stop.

Saturday, polish, and scrub, and bake;
Fire's out; hardly can keep awake.

Sunday, oh! that day of all is the best.
Glad when it's here, for we take our rest.

Profanity.

TO THE BOYS OF AMERICA.

DEAR BOYS.—Did you ever see a lovely plant overshadowed and choked by great and ungainly weeds till it had no strength to bud or bloom? Just so the noxious weeds of profanity shadow your character and choke from your heart every sweet blossom of purity and refinement.

I hope there are many among you who never use bad language of any kind, but I want to warn you all against profanity. First, it is exceedingly sinful to take the name of God in vain, and how often do we hear the name of our blessed Jesus Christ—who died for us—profaned. Any boy has some influence, be it more or less; and if he indulges himself in the use of profane language he places a very bad example before his acquaintances.

About Bananas.

Few people who see bananas hanging in fruit stores think of them as more than a tropical luxury. In fact they are a staple article of food in some parts of the world, and, according to Humboldt, an acre in bananas will produce as much food for man as twenty-five acres of wheat. It is the ease with which bananas are grown which is the great obstacle to civilization in some tropical countries. It is so easy to get a living without work that no effort will ever be made, and the men become lazy and intolerably shiftless. All that is needed is to stick a cutting in the ground. It will ripen its fruit in twelve to thirteen months, without further care, each plant having 75 to 125 bananas and when that dies down after fruiting, new shoots spring up to take its place. In regions where no frost ever reaches, bananas are found in all stages of growth, ripening their fruit every month and every day in the year. Col. Whitner, near Silver Lake, Florida, has probably the largest banana plantation in the United States, containing fully ten thousand plants in bearing. Some of these are large trees, which do not die after bearing their fruit, but the majority are of the dwarf species, which are renewed every year. Slips are planted about eight feet apart and rapidly pu h up leaves disclosing six or eight small bananas behind this protection. Some plants will have sixteen or twenty leaves and branches of fruit, bending over as it ripens, forming a most beautiful sight. The culture of bananas is very profitable, and with the unlimited capacity of Florida and the West India islands for producing it, there should always be a supply equal to any possible demand. —Selected.

Speak in a Low Voice.

A good Quaker, eighty-five years of age, whom no one had ever heard speak a cross word, was asked by a young man how he had been able, through the trials and perplexities of a long life, to keep always so pleasant. He replied:

"If you never allow your voice to rise, you will not be likely ever to ge very angry."

Home and Health Hints.

HOW TO KNOW FRESH MEAT AND FISH.

Ox beef should be of fine grain or fiber, the flesh or lean of a bright red color and firm; the fat white, and distributed throughout the lean; it should not be yellow or semifluid. If the meat is entirely lean it will be tough and its nutritive power low. Heifer beef is close-grained, but paler than the preceding; the fat is very white and the bones are small; its flavor and nutritive power are inferior, and its value therefore less. Bull beef is of a very dark color. It does not contain much fat, is generally tough, and has a strong meat like odor, and an unpleasant taste. It should never be used.

Veal is dry if fresh. It should be close-grained. If the meat is moist and flabby it is stale.

Mutton should be of a clear deep pink tint; firm and with a liberal supply of fat. Fine wether mutton may be recognized by the presence of a small mass of fat on the upper part of the leg. It is more nutritious than ordinary mutton, and the darker its tint the finer its flavor.

Pork should be of a pale pink tint, and the fat very firm. If it is soft or if the fat is yellow the meat is bad. If it is semifluid the animal has probably been fed on flesh. It must not be forgotten that pork is apt to contain certain parasites, viz: the cysticercus, which produces tapeworm, and the trichina spiralis.

If the eyes are bright and the feet supple in poultry and birds, they are fresh; but if these signs are absent they are either diseased or stale.

Fish should always be used as fresh as possible; when in this state the eyes are bright, the eyes of a fine red color, and the body stiff. It would be a great improvement if fish were always kept alive at the stalls.

Men are drowned by raising their arms above water, the unbuoyed weight of which depresses the head. Other animals have neither motion nor ability to act in a similar manner, and therefore swim naturally. When a man falls into deep water, he will rise to the surface, and will continue there if he does not elevate his hands. If he moves his hands under water, in any way he pleases, his head will rise so high as to give him free liberty to breathe; and if he will use his legs, as in the act of walking (or rather walking up stairs) his shoulders will rise above the water, so that he may use the less exertion with his hands, or apply them to other purposes. These plain directions are recommended to the recollection of those who have not learned to swim in their youth, as they may be found highly advantageous in many cases—Sanitarian.

Look to your cellars. Now is the time to clean up the cellars, as it is a work that should not be left until warm weather is upon us. By that time any vegetable matter left remaining will decompose and produce an atmosphere most deleterious to health. The meat stands should be emptied upon the asparagus beds or manure heap, and must not be thrown anywhere else, as the brine will kill even trees as thick as an arm if applied in large quantities. The cellar should then be thoroughly whitewashed and burnished up nice enough to dine in it. A filthy cellar is an abomination that no housekeeper who has any claim to tidiness will allow to remain an hour longer than can be helped. The health of the entire family may be seriously endangered by it, and we have no doubt that in many instances fevers have resulted from unwarrantable neglect in this matter,—Germantown Telegraph.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pagenes,

WAS WASHINGTON A SECEDING MASON?

The fact that George Washington was, for the last thirty years of his life a non-affiliated Mason, is clearly established by his own pen in a letter dated Sept. 25, 1798.

"Gen. Washington was written to by Rev. Mr. Snyder, who spoke of him as presiding over the English lodges in this country. Washington in reply, dated Mount Vernon, 25th September, 1798, speaks of his illness, 'which allows me to add little more now than thanks for your kind wishes and favorable sentiments except to correct an error you have run into, of my presiding over the English lodges in this country. The fact is I preside over none, NOR HAVE I BEEN IN ONE MORE THAN ONCE OR TWICE WITHIN THE LAST THIRTY YEARS. With respect, I am, sir, Your ob't. servant.

GEO. WASHINGTON.'"

That the tenor of his farewell address is decidedly in condemnation of secret societies is undeniable, whether he referred to Freemasonry or not. The following from Giddin's Almanac of 1831, copied from the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, contains important evidence. Edward Livingston was the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States and the great Masonic champion of his day, and Andrew Jackson was also a high Mason. In view of Washington's non-affiliation and his farewell address there can be little doubt that General Jackson and Edward Livingston considered WASHINGTON A SECEDER. The following is the article referred to:

"Who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington?—When General Washington retired to private life, Congress passed resolutions giving thanks to this great man. Only three men were found in Congress at that day, that voted against these resolutions. One of these three is now dead, and we do not wish to disturb his ashes. The grave should cover the foibles of all men. But there are two men now alive, whose names are on the journals of Congress, denying the poor pittance of a vote of thanks to Gen. Washington. We ask who these two men are?

We have asked this question without expecting an answer from those to whom it is addressed. But there is no reason why our readers should not be gratified with the fact. Let the journals of Congress reply—"They are ANDREW JACKSON and EDWARD LIVINGSTON!!!'—Penn. Intel."

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The relation and Duty of the Church and her Members toward them.

BY REV. J. G. CARSON, D. D.

It is proposed to establish the truth of the following proposition, viz.: "That associations formed for political, benevolent or other purposes which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity and church members ought not to have fellowship with them."

This declaration contains a statement of principle, and an inference from it; the latter following as an irresistible consequence from the former—for if we can show that these associations in spirit and workings, are inconsistent with those principles of God's word, which Christians universally recognize as of paramount obligation—then it will follow that members of the church—not of this or that one, but of every church, ought not to have fellowship with them. And if Christians can but be convinced of the sinfulness of their connection with such associations, and be persuaded to sever or keep aloof from all such connection—if the church of God would but use her influence and lift up her testimony against this great and growing evil of secretism, the power of these societies, for evil, would be so weakened as to excite little alarm. And on the other hand, the presence of church members in them, and the silent indifference or active encouragement of the church of God regarding them, is that which gives them respectability and constitutes the chief part of their strength, just as formerly was the case with slavery in this land.

The church cannot afford to occupy a neutral, much less a friendly position towards them; for, if they belong to the "unfruitful works of darkness," as I think can easily be shown, then she is bound not only "to have no fellowship with them, but rather to reprove them." If, as I think will be evident as we proceed, they belong to the world that lieth in the wicked one—the god of this world—then they are the enemies of Christ and his kingdom, from which she is bound to maintain a complete separation, and with which she must wage an uncompromising war. And what is the duty of the church is the duty of individual Christians.

The question is one of intensely practical importance, and nothing can be more amazing than the apparent apathy and indifference of the churches generally, on this subject, as formerly on the subject of slavery, unless it be the impudence and arroganee of these societies in claiming recognition and encouragement and at the same time resisting and bitterly resenting all investigation and judgment of the character and truth of these claims. Indeed the very attempt to screen themselves from public observation, and honest, candid investigation, is itself a confession of weakness and is the old cry of the demons, to which the enemies of Christ and truth have always resorted to stifle inquiry—saying, "Let us alone, what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth?" But despite all these attempts by ridicule, defamation, and even persecution and violence to stop our mouths, we claim the right in the name of the Master, and are bound in faithfulness to Him—and to this point it must come sooner or later with all the churches, to inquire, "Art thou for us, or for our enemies?"—"to try the spirits whether they are of God."

Now, in the pursuit of this inquiry it is not necessary for us to become members of these societies, or to pry into what they call their secrets in order to ascertain their true character. We need only to examine the principles which confessedly underlie their organization, and the character and tendency of their legitimate workings, and show that these are inconsistent with the principles laid down in the word of God—"to the law and to the testimony if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." Nor is it necessary to deny that there is anything good in these associations, or to assert that all of them are equally bad. But if on the whole they are evil in their tendency and workings; if there are some things necessarily belonging to all of them which are wrong and sinful, if connection with any of them involves the Christian in acts of at least doubtful propriety, and closes his mouth against the acknowledged evils of the more dangerous societies, then we are warranted in drawing the conclusion that Christians ought not to have fellowship with them; and if I shall succeed in persuading a single one of my fellow Christians, who have become entangled in the snare of unholy conformity, to break that connection, or prevent any one from becoming involved in such connection, I shall feel amply rewarded. I appeal to your understanding, not to your prejudices, to your reason and conscience, not to your passions. "I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say."

PRINCIPLES OF THE ORGANIZATION.

1st. The first reason I would offer why these associations are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, is that they constitute an artificial relation of fraternity or brotherhood, the obligations of which are inconsistent with the duties we owe to our fellow men in those relations which God has established and in which he has placed us.

God has instituted the brotherhoods of man or society, of the family, and of the church. These have their foundations either in the nature of man, or in his relation to God through Christ. The obligations of these relations, the family, the church, and the state are, divinely imposed—are neither arbitrary nor voluntary; which can neither be assumed nor laid aside at pleasure. Every one is born into the family, and into society, and even when joining the church (as we express it,) although in one sense a voluntary act, yet he thereby merely recognizes and acknowledges those obligations which every one owes to his God and Saviour. These relations being thus divinely appointed and regulated, are designed and adapted to move on together and co-operate harmoniously like the planets of the solar system in their several spheres, their duties and obligations neither interfering nor conflicting with each other. But it is not so with these associations. The relation of fraternity which they form is a purely artificial one, having its foundation neither in nature nor in grace. Certainly it is not of Divine institution, and cannot be referred to any of those natural or gracious relations which he has instituted, the duties and obligations of which are imposed by purely human authority, self-assumed and self-imposed. Hence arises, and must necessarily arise, discord,—corruption—conflict, just as if a new planet were introduced into the solar system by some other power than that of God.

Here is a relation, a brotherhood, whose tie cuts right across all other relations, enters the family, interfering between parents and children, husband and wife, brothers and sisters; enters society, interferes with its various relations both civil and social; enters the church, coming between pastor and people, and between members of the same church, often producing alienation and distrust if not positive discord and conflict. It is in vain to say that membership in these societies need not conflict with a man's duty in his other relations. In the very nature of things they must conflict, and as a matter of fact, we all know and see that they do conflict in multitudes of instances; and when the obligation of these societies is regarded at all it becomes necessarily paramount to all others. Instances might be given illustrating this in the family, (as at funerals); in the state, (as in the case of judge and juries,) and in the church, (as between pastors and people.)

To this principle our Lord refers when he charges the Pharisees with making void the law of God by their traditions. They had invented an artificial relation with its appropriate sign, or pass-word, by which they undertook to set aside the obligation of children to their parents. The law of God said, Honor thy father and mother, and whoever hateth father and mother let him die the death; but ye say, "If a man shall say to his father or mother, corban, that is to say, it is a gift by whatsoever thou mighest be profited by me he shall be free, making the word of God of none affect by your traditions:" Mark, 7:10–12. Precisely on the same principle do these associations come between those whom God hath joided together in the various relations of life, making distinctions where God has made none either in nature or grace; thus producing disturbance, unsettling confidence, and introducing suspicion, alienation, strife. Now, while it is improper for any one to enter a society which does or may conflict with the duties he owes to his fellow men in the other relations of life, it is especially wrong and inconsistent for a Christian to do so. The very principle on which these societies are organized is that of caste and their obligation requires them to help each other in preference to all outside, no matter how closely connected these outside ones may be otherwise. I do not say that this obligation is always regarded as paramount, but I do know that this principle of favoritism belongs to all these associations, is avowed by them, and urged, indeed, as one of the most powerful inducements for members to join them, viz.; the superior advantages to be enjoyed in various ways from the patronage, support and assistance of their fellow members to which they are all mutually pledged. I do know, also, that many regard their obligation in this light, and treat it as paramount to all others. A Presbyterian elder, when asked the question,—If two men claimed his assistance equally needy, the one a Christian or fellow member of the church, and the other a fellow Mason, which he would feel bound to prefer?—answered without hesitation, "The Mason." Another stated, that if the claims of his mother and those of a brother Mason came in conflict he should feel bound to regard the latter before the former; and, indeed, this, as we have said, seems to be the natural and obvious meaning of this pledge of brotherhood and mutual help if it have any obligation at all. The only way in which the Christian can maintain the integrity of his conscienee between these conflicting claims is by treating this artificial obligation as a nullity. Now every one can see how a conscientious judge or juryman sworn to administer impartial justice between the parties brought before them would feel himself, to say the least embarrassed by his relation to one of them as a member of the same fraternity. Has any one, much less a Christian, a right voluntarily to place himself in a relation the obligation of which he must either disregard and treat as a nullity, or else violate his obligation to his fellow men iu the other relations in which God has placed him. Partiality, favoritism, the making of discriminations among men on the ground of fictitious or artificial distinctions which is the very essence of these associations, is just as unwarranted and inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity as the same partiality would be unjust and unwarrantable in a judge on the bench. Jas. 2:1, 2: "My brother, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ of glory with respect of persons. For if any come into your assembly a man with a gold ring in goodly apparel and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him—Sit thou here in a good place, and say to the poor man, stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool, are ye not, then, partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts, or as it ought to be rendered—ill-reasoning judges?" Therefore we say these associations the very principle of whose organization requires their members to exercise this partiality towards their fellow members are inconsistent with, &c.

2nd. The second reason why these associations are inconsistent with the genius of Chistianity is because the obedience which they require of their members to their superiors is inconsistent with that supreme allegiance which every Christian has vowed and owes to Christ.

The spirit of these orders whether religious or secular is that of an unmitigated despotism, requiring an obedience which is implicit and unquestioning. This is seen most fully in the society of Jesuits, the prime qualification of whose members is an entire subjection of their will to that of their superiors; and although all these secret orders do not go to the same length as do these Jesuits, or even the Masons, yet their spirit and tendency is the same, and so far as they are allowed to exert their legitimate influence, the effect is to destroy all independence of thought, speech, or action on the part of their members and render them passive tools in the hands of their superiors or the orders they represent. This is symbolized in some of their ceremonies, inculcated in their lectures, and expressed in the subordination of the various degrees and in the high-sounding titles given to their officers—Masters—Grand Masters—Most Puissant Potentate, &c. Indeed, obedience to the Master is one of the cardinal virtues in their orders. And of their power to enact this obedience, when they deem it necessary, let the abduction and murder of Morgan bear witness; and also that intolerant spirit everywhere manifested by these orders which aims to fetter the freedom of speech and of the press, and which prevails to muzzle editors, publishers, and public speakers, and even the ministers of Jesus Christ, most of whom dare not utter their own convictions, and can hardly call their souls their own. Now while any one who has any regard to his own manhood ought to scorn to place himself in subjection to any will or authority less than Divine, it is specially unworthy of the Christian who, as the Lord's servant, is free from both the doctrine and commandments of men. "Ye are bought with a price be ye not the servants of men." "Call no man master, neither be ye called master, for one is your Master even Christ." To Him every Christian owes and cheerfully acknowledges implicit subjection—entire and unreserved obedience. He only is worthy of it and entitled to it, because He is God; nor dare any Christian, on peril of treason to his Lord, acknowledge or promise subjection to any man or set of men only in the Lord. It is only so far as they represent the authority of Christ that we owe obedience to our superiors in the family, the state, or the church. Children are to obey their parents in the Lord for this is right. Wives are to be in subjection unto their husbands, as unto Christ. Citizens are to obey civil magistrates because they are ministers of God—the powers that be ordained are of God, and we owe this obedience not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake, because they represent the authority of God in all their lawful commands; and even in the church, Christians are under obligations to those who have the rule over them only in the Lord; that is, so far as they represent the authority of Christ; anything else than this is rank popery, culminating in the Jesuitical dogma of papal infaliblility. Now it may be safely affirmed that the subjection which membership in these orders involve is worse, more inconsistent with Christian liberty than popery itself, because the priest and the pope have some shadow of pretension for their claims to implicit subjection because they pretend to be the vicars of Christ, and to represent his authority. But where in all these orders is there even a pretense of representing His authority? Where in all the word of God has he given them authority to command my obedience, and how can I consistently with my supreme allegience to him, voluntarily place myself in subjection to any such usurped authority, or promise any kind of obedience to it, when it is not and can not be obedience in the Lord? Surely Christians and Christian ministers especially, who ought to be so jealous even of their lawful superiors, where their authority infringes upon, or conflicts with that of Christ, must see that in joining these orders they are renouncing their allegianee to him, and promising subjection to those who neither pretend to represent the authority of Christ nor can ever claim obedienee to any of their behests on the ground of that authority. "And no man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other." If there were no other reason than this one, it is sufficient of itself, one would think, to convince any conscientious Christian that these associations are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity.

3d. Because the morality and benevolence which they inculcate and practice are selfish and partial, so inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christ, and ought not to he encouraged or patronized by Christians. The whole system from beginning to end is just a system of organized selfishness. Instead of beiug governed by that royal law of Christ: "As ye would that man should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." The Christian in these societies finds himself restricted and narrowed down to this miserable law of selfishness—do to others as you expect them to do to you—which is the rule aud limit both of their morality and benevolence, so called.

(1.) Their morality is selfish and partial, although the professions which some of these societies make of beiug the special patrons and teachers of morality, may at first sight appear plausible, yet when we come to inquire into the principle which underlies their so-called morality, it will be found nothing more than a species of a personal honor—a somewhat extended kind of selfishness. It is true, they inculcate friendship, love, and truth, and oblige their members to abstain from injustice, wrong or injury. But to what extent? Toward all men? Oh, no! only toward their fellow members,—and why even toward them? Because the one is right and the other wrong, that is required or forbidden by the law of God, the only standard of true morality? Oh, no! For this would require them to make the obligation universal and extend it to all men, which would destroy their very character as exclusive mutual aid societies. Take for illustration the Masonic fraternity. The obligation of this order requires its members to act honestly and uprightly towards their fellow members, and to abstain from injury towards them or their wives or sisters. This implies a license to act otherwise towards all others; that is to say,—if they are restrained from acting unjustly towards others, it is from some other principle than their Masonic obligation; such injustice and immorality does not affect their standing in the order, nor is it considered or treated as a breach of Masonic obligation. The most dishonest and immoral men can and do maintain their standing in the order, provided their offences are not against Masonic law. What is this but a species of worldly honor, and no more deserves the name of morality than that honesty which may be found among thieves and banditti.

That I do not overstate this matter let me refer to an instance that I have seen quoted by their own writers as an illustration of the superior excellence and advantage of the Masonic obligation; and many similar instances might be given from our own rebellion and the Sepoy rebellion in India. A pirate captured a vessel and murdered all its inmates except two who were Masons as he was. Here was one who considered his obligations of masonic morality limited to his own order, and whose multiplied crimes of fiendish cruelty did not affect his standing as a Mason, so long as he refrained from injuring his fellow Masons. Is it not worse than a misnomer to call such conduct by the name of morality, or to compare it for a moment with that universal honesty and integrity of character and conduct which the gospel of Christ not only teaches, but produces—"teaching us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts and live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present evil world," the disregard of which in regard to the poorest and humblest human being, would not only, if known, affect the Christian standing of the most eminent minister, or member of the church but would destroy the reputation and standing of any church which should tolerate such an one in its membership for an hour; and yet I repeat, this is the extent of the morality which the Masonic order, as such, (and the same is true, to a certain extent, of the others,) inculcates and enforces—simply and solely the morality of selfishness. How degrading to, and unworthy of, the Christian to lend the sanction of his name and influence to any such caricature and fraud, by which thousands are deluded into the thought and belief, that with such false and spurious morality as their religion they can be as good Christians as church members, and fitted at death for entrance into heaven, or the Grand Lodge above. Surely Christians instead of having any fellowship with, ought to exposc aud testify against all such miserable pretences as dishonoring to Christ and ruinous to the souls of men. The same substantially may be said of their—

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts.

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20 000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,
CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

Those who wish to circulate Antimasonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from.

Loss in one week, 145

This is not the best season of the year to secure subscriptions we very well know. But we hope friends will be prompt in renewing and wherever practical in forw rding new subscriptions. We ought at least to keep the number up to or above 4,000.

Will those whose subscriptions expire in June renew promptly?

The Fourth of July is coming. Many of our readers would find a great help in celebrating it pleasantly in the fac simile of the Declaration together with the engraving "Signing the Declaration" (see notice). Every young man would be benefited by a careful study of these engravings. Fifty cents for the two.

One of our subscribers in Pittsburgh, Pa., orders five copies of the Cynosure sent to a pastor of a mission church in Salem, Ala. The pastor expects to collect the money to pay for the papers from the people who read them, but if he fails the friend in Pittsburgh will make up the deficiency. We mention this circumstance, thinking it may suggest to some other friends a way of spreading the sentiments of this reform, which they had not thought of or tried before.

J. W. Knowles, Cynthiana, Ind., writes that they "greatly admire the paper," but do not feel able to subscribe just now. We hope he will remember them and send in their names when they are able.

Irvine Guilford, Grand Ledge, Mich., writes:

"I am not succeeding very well in obtaining subscriptions. Find plenty who want it but money is lacking. Will do better I think before fall."

This is the season for planting and we hope for an abundant harvest at the time appointed.

Topics of the Time.

"Ten exhortations, ten visits scarcely suffice now where formerly one would have brought a soul to the sacrament" said the Romish Bishop Vaughn in a recent pastoral appeal for a diocesan seminary. What better testimony can be asked of the power of a free Bible, school and press against the hoary superstitions of Rome.

Some weeks ago the chief engineer of the Chicago water-works was dismissed by Mayor Colvin for some personal pique. But while the grounds of removal were probably insufficient, other things have come to light which justify the removal. The engineer's name is Dewitt C. Cregier, and for two terms he served the Masonic Grand Lodge of Illinois as Grand Master for $1,500 annual salary, all the while as an employe of the city. It is known that he would leave his important post at the water-works for days together while away at some lodge pow-wow. At the time of the great fire of 1871 he was out of the city inaugurating a lodge, and did not return, so Masons say, until the Tuesday after the fire had burned up the business and homes of Chicago and his own water-works establishment, which he should have guarded against any attack by fire so long as Lake Michigan held water. The most significant feature of the affair however is the threat published in the Tribune, along with the notice of his removal, that Cregier's Masonic friends would take the matter in hand and secure his re-appointment. They have done so and succeeded; and have thus once more shown the desperate power of the lodge in our public offices, for this ex-Grand Master holds his position by virtue of his Masonry alone.

Gen. Hawley of Connecticut has been re-elected President of the Centennial Commission, which is regarded as evidence that the Sabbath regulation will not be withdrawn; Gen. Hawley having affirmed that he would resign if the Exposition was to be open on the Lord's day. A great meeting of forty thousand citizens of Philadelphia was held at Music Fund Hall on the 24th, to ratify the action of the Commissioners. Four hundred prominent bankers and capitalists of the country, with a score of great religious gatherings and hundreds of churches have given a vast support to the wise regulation of Sabbath closing.

In postponing the dedication of his large North Side tabernacle until it is paid for, Mr. Moody gives to all the churches another fact for their counsel and admonition. An opening service was held by him on Thursday evening last and continued on the following evenings of the week with vast audiences. On Friday evening, Pres. Blanchard took part in the exercises at the invitation of Mr. Moody, thus showing that there is no flinching from the good work begun in New York and Philadelphia. Twenty thousand dollars were needed, and before Sabbath evening the amount was nearly raised, and will be completed before the formal dedication. The ceremony of giving to the Lord a church building which may shortly be sold out for the benefit of creditors is very like the matter of Ananias; and a lingering church debt to say the least seldom promotes holy living or helps the faith of churches.

As the lodge is a shelter of whatever opposes Christ, so the great Masonic building of New York serves for a temple for false systems and rites. The communists gather there to influence politics, and the other day the "Theosophical Society," a company of infidels and spiritualists, held funeral services over one of its members there. Seven lights in the form of a triangle were on the coffin, a serpent twisted around a wooden cross stood beside it, and incense was burned. The ceremonies were conducted by seven persons robed in black in the form of an "ancient Egyptian liturgy," which with the long array of mystic titles belonging to the dead man, marks plainly the Masonic connection of the whole affair.

Pray for the blessing of God on the approaching Anniversary; and do all you can for it by sending delegates or suggestions or other help.

"That Funny Apron."

AS SUNG BY GEO. W. CLARK—WORDS BY ELDER J. L. BARLOW.

I.

Of all the funny gentlemen who walk the crowded street
And in regalia march in grand procession!
The oddest, queerest of them all that any one can meet
Are the "Ancient" craft who ape a true profession.
But the truth is they are shamming!
And with legends false are cramming!
All the silly ninnies who will take and choose 'em.
Each one thinking he grows wise
As he drinks in all their lies,
And doth wear an apron white beneath his bosom!

II.

In bright and sunny weather, in the leafy month of June
These speculative gentlemen out coming
From dark and tylered lodges, with slow or lively tune,
On St. John's day for recruits they go out drumming.
This is sure the meaning of it:
And they make it of great profit:
These grown up boys to catch and with flags amuse 'em,
While their cash they meanly take,
And each victim they will make
Wear a little patch of white beneath his bosom.

III.

If a corner-stone is to be laid, in city or in town,
This crafty craft will somehow come to square it.
Tho' knowing naught of tools, the world believes they've "done it brown."
All the honor they'll be claiming, none may share it:
O, is it not amazin!
That the creature called Freemason
Should so church and state control, none dare refuse 'em:
For each craftsman like a lord,
Looks above the common herd
'Cause he wears a sheep-skin white beneath his bosom!

IV.

Of all Republicans they're the strangest I am sure;
With knights, grand puissants, generals and other lofty titles,
Priests clad in Aaron's robes—attention to secure—
While they're striking blows at freedom's very vitals.
And they boast they're growing stronger,
While we tolerate them longer;
And are loudly claiming we do much abuse 'em,
From the efforts we do make
All the people to awake,
To that funny patch beneath each Mason's bosom.

The Church and Secret Societies.

It is sad to see how ready many church members are to entangle themselves in the "legion" orders which are springing up in these last days. They need to be instructed anew in the Gospel and in the mission of the church. The following extract is forwarded for publication with the hope that it may do good. Let no one read it with prejudice, thinking it aimed at the modern organizations which they look upon as so praiseworthy. It was written nearly half a century ago, before many of them started, by Rev. Hubbard Winslow, then pastor of the Bowdoin Street church, Boston:

"The church of Christ is the only divinely constituted society for reforming the world. Benevolent societies for securing and putting into operation the means of diffusing the Christian religion on the earth, such as Bible, missionary, education, and other kindred societies, are not independent societies, or societies undertaking to reform mankind independently of the church, but they are the instruments or means of the church by which through the grace of God she is laboring to accomplish her work. There is no power on earth adequate to reform and save mankind but the Christian religion. This only is the 'power of God unto salvation.' And there is no other depository of this power but 'the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth.' We shall not undertake to decide the great question whether any human societies except such as are instruments of the church, should be organized for the professed purpose of reforming mankind; this much, however, we are bold to say, that the church must ever hold the supremacy, ever be made 'the pillar and ground of truth,' and no other should be countenanced which tends to divide with it our affections. No society can be good that does not increase rather than diminish our attachment to the church. Let this test be applied to all reformatory societies of human invention.

"There seem indeed to be inherent difficulties in the way of the permanent and valuable success of such societies which cannot be obviated. Composed of heterogeneous materials; men of all kinds of faith, and of no faith; men of all kinds of principle, and of no principle; men of all kinds of character and conscience, and men of no character nor conscience; embracing men of various and conflicting designs; some perhaps honestly seeking the suppression of vice, and others under pretense of doing the same, really seeking a mercenary, ambitious, or political object; they have the elements of their early dissolution and death within them. 'Can two walk together except they be agreed?' It is as difficult now as it was in the days of Amos. Experience has fully decided that reformatory societies, composed of unbelievers as well as believers, tend so surely and speedily to become connected with secular, mercenary, ambitious, political ends that Christians who would keep themselves pure, need to be very cautious in forming alliances with them. Those who join them for good motives not unfrequently find, after a while, that they have mistaken their company, and they retreat back into the church to operate again there, in a congenial element and in a more Christian way. Generally speaking, those Christians who have the least to do with these reformatory societies of human invention; who are content to put forth their moral influence upon society as members of the church of Christ, by their personal character and conduct; who, by their holy examples, their prayers, their labors in Sabbath schools, their co-operation with their pastors, their benefactions, their spiritual conversation, 'adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things,' though they may seem at first to operate more slowly, yet operate more safely, and in the end accomplish a thousand-fold more real good to mankind than those who are impelled by a fiery and tempestuous zeal in other and more secular methods of reform.

"When the Christian church maintains her proper place and character, she is entirely aloof from all worldly ends; she has no alliance whatever with mercenaries and politicians. She belongs to a kingdom that is not of this world. Yet there is no virtue which she does not promote, no iniquity which she does not condemn. Not the absence of a single vice, nor the presence of a single virtue is to be desired in our world, which it is not her high prerogative, acting in the name of Christ to secure. Constituted by God for the express purpose of maintaining and extending the cause of righteousness; composed of homogeneous materials; men called out and separated from the world unto God, for the express purpose of promoting his kingdom; armed with divine truth; attended with the promised presence of Christ himself, and the power of the Holy Spirit, surely, if any society upon earth can reform and save mankind, the church can do it."—Sabbath Recorder.

Secession a Duty.

BY H. W. CLARK.

The witnesses against the lodge are comparatively few. There are hundreds to-day who would come out and boldly expose what they have proved to be a corrupt and baneful system by being themselves hoodwinked, if it was not for the regard they feel for the awful oaths and "solemn obligations" they have taken on their bended knees, with the Holy Bible, square and compass between their hands. I know there are too many who lie low and keep dark from pecuniary motives, and some for lack of moral courage. And it does take quite an amount of moral courage to come out and boldly combat popular iniquity, such as is tolerated by the lodge, when life-long persecution is to be the result.

But there are many who really desire to be free from the shackles that now bind their conscience. If I could speak to all such, I would say, read in the 14th chapter of Matthew King Herod's oath and the result. Was Herod's oath binding? If so, then the consequences of said oath were not wrong. Then read Lev. v. 4. Such oaths are sinful.

When I hear Masons intimate that Mr. Ronayne or others are "perjured villains," it is to me a positive admission that their revelations are true. Now if telling the truth violates some oath or obligation that we have taken, this fact alone makes such oath a nullity. It makes no difference how binding the wording of the oath may be or what penalties are connected therewith, it is but a solemn farce.

Truth and falsehood are opposites; are so in the nature of things. Truth ever existed. Falsehood had a beginning. By the principles of truth God governs the universe. Our obligation to truth is above and before all human law or obligation. Therefore any law or obligation that conflicts with this higher law can be of no binding force whatever. And an oath taken according to such a law is only presumption and blasphemy. Then, again, an oath has no legal binding force unless administered by some one duly authorized to administer an oath. I ask, what legal right have the officers of the lodge to administer oaths?

Now we walk into a civil court. A Mason is on the witness stand, and a "brother" Mason on trial. Witness with right hand on the Holy Bible, or raised, is sworn to "tell the truth, the whole truth." This the law requires. This common morality requires. This the safety of community and loyalty to our government requires. Said parties are strangers to me, and so I don't know whether witness is a "great and good man" or not. But soon learn that the "common people" are almost astounded. The witness is telling what he knows to be false. What's the matter? O he is a high Mason, that's all. His conscience is seared by many red hot Masonic oaths.

Another witness is called. A young man about twenty-one. He hesitates. He "quibbles." I learn that he has "just joined" the Masons. He has some conscience left. He hates to swear to a lie but must not violate his Masonic obligations. Poor fellow! Hoodwinked and cable-towed, neither naked nor clothed. These men (if they are still men) swore before high heaven to tell the truth. Why did they not do it?

Here we see conflicting governments, conflicting laws, and conflicting oaths. Two such governments cannot long exist together. In the nature of things one will destroy the other. Now if we have a legitimate government, this this conflicting government is illegitimate, and must be cast out as dangerous and treasonable, whose laws and oaths are null and void on this account, and must be put in the same catalogue with the laws and oaths of the Knights of the Golden Circle, the Ku-Klux clans or bands of highway robbers.

By Webster's dictionary foreswearing is perjury. Every man who takes the oaths of the secret organizations is a "perjured villain" for every man has to be foresworn; swears to obey, conform to, "conceal and never reveal," before he knows what he has done. He violates the laws of God and man, runs the fearful risk of everlasting condemnation, in taking this foolhardy leap in the dark. Such oaths valid! No; the very thought is repulsive. The whole thing is a cunning device and a snare of the devil.

Now every lodge-sick soul has an important duty to perform. A duty he owes to himself, to his fellow man, and his God. Duty to himself to arise and break loose from the shackles of bondage and boldly assert and once more feel himself a free man. To his fellowmen, to keep them as far as in his power from becoming "entangled in the yoke of bondage. To his God by repentance according to his word, as he has by accepting the religion of the lodge, denied the only true God and Jesus Christ, through whom alone is salvation.

And then farther he should "bring forth fruits meet for repentance," by assisting the anti-secrecy reform with his money as God has prospered him. By refusing to give aid, either by money or vote either to individuals or institutions that are under the influence of the lodge. I have no faith in half way work; reformation in this work must be genuine, thorough, to be of any use, and by the grace of God it can be. As the Apostle Paul said, and Mr. Ronayne repeated at the Sugar Creek meeting, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

The Great American Weakness.

Under this title the Catholic Review publishes the following "o'er true tale," from the columns of the N. Y. Journal of Commerce:

Deacon Grimes called the other day upon Mrs. Butterwick to ask for a subscription to the Missionary Society

"Your husband is a Presbyterian, I believe, Mrs. Butterwick?" said the deacon.

"No," replied Mrs. B., "he belongs to pretty near everything else on earth but the church. That's what I say to him, that while he is joining so much he'd better join something decent, that'll do him some good. But he says he has no time. He belongs to about forty-six secret societies of various kinds. He's the awfullest man for such things you ever saw, and all the time running after them. Monday night he goes round to the Freemasons, Tuesday night he associates with the Odd Fellows, Wednesday is his Red Man night, Thursday is his Temperance lodge, Friday he goes fooling along with the Knights of Pythias, and all day Sunday he is visiting the sick and the widows and orphans of dead members. If there were sixty days in a week I believe Butterwick would have some lodge to attend to every night.

Mr. Grimes, that man actually knows ninety-three grips and over two hundred passwords. And he's awful mysterious about them. The other day I saw him swinging his arms about kinder queer at breakfast, and presently he stops and says: 'Thunder, I forgot where I was! Mary Jane, you saw that? It was a grand hailing sign. Swear you'll never reveal it.' And you know he'll wake up nights and ask me if I heard him talking in his sleep, and if I say yes, he'll look scared to death and get out his pistol and say he'll blow my brains out if I ever repeat one of those passwords. And he is all the time practicing grips on me, but he won't even tell me what any of them are, although he knows I'm just dying with curiosity. He says he knows more secrets than any other man in the whole State, and he says if he was to tell one of them, those Knights and Patriotic Sons, and the rest of them, would put him into a vault and seal him up alive, or tear him apart with red-hot pinchers.

He's so careless, too. I see him giving the grand hailing sign to the slopman yesterday, and the slopman asked Bridget if Mr. Butterwick had the St. Vitus dance bad; and I know when he tried one of those grips on the man that came to tune the piano, the man said if he squeezed his hand that hard again he'd give Mr. Butterwick a bloody nose.

And as for processions. Well, it seems to me that when Mr. Butterwick ain't at a lodge he's marching in a procession. Always some funeral, or celebration or something, and he turns out and goes skipping around through the streets, dressed in a cocked hat and sword, and looking fierce enough to frighten anybody out of their wits. And he told me that sometimes he gets all these grips mixed, and he'll give a Mason an Odd Fellow's grip, and tells me not to be surprised if he is kidnapped and made away with before morning. And he'll kiss the children good-by, and make his last little arrangements so's everything'll be straight when he's gone; and then the children and me'll cry, and he'll look solemn, and go to bed to rest before he meets his doom. But nothing ever came of it. They never touched him.

You ought just to see the letters that come here directed to him. 'E. Butterwick,' and then a whole alphabet of letters strung after his name. He's a Right Worshipful Grand Master and a Sir Knight, and an Eminent Past Grand Sachem, and a Noble Grand, and a Grand Chancellor, and a Chief Magnificent Rev. Druid Priest, and a lot more such things as that, enough to take your breath away; and with it all he's no more stuck up than you are. Just as humble as a lamb. And he says that he can reel out more stuff that they say at ceremonies than'll fill a small library; and he has about sixty sheepskin aprons, and all kinds of pictures on them that he wears when he is on duty.

So he has no time to tend to church, and no money for the heathen. He spent his last dollar Saturday paying up his past dues to the Knights of Pythias, and he says if he can't settle up with the Druids by Thursday they'll cut him off and chuck him out. I don't know what happens to a man when the Druids shut down on him, but Butterwick hints that it is not much better than sudden death. Perhaps you're a Druid? No? Well, you call and see Butterwick and he'll explain it to you, and meantime those heathen'll have to shuffle along the best way they can. Maybe, if you was to write to them how Butterwick is fixed they might consider that sufficient. Good morning. Remember me to Mrs. Grimes."

Then the deacon withdrew, and went around to visit a less mysterious family.

Ann Eliza Young says of Brigham's distillery: "Over the door he placed the All-seeing Eye, with the inscription, 'Holiness to the Lord. Zion's Co-Operative Institution. Wholesale Liquor Dealers and Rectifiers.'" He certainly put his knowledge of Freemasonry to a practical use. The All-seeing Eye is sometimes placed in about the same kind of company in this country.—The Christian Radical.

Temperance According to Webb.

BY J. K. ALWOOD.

"This virtue should be the constant practice of every young Mason, as he is thereby taught to avoid excess, which might lead him to disclose some of those valuable secrets, which he has promised to conceal and never reveal, and which would consequently subject him to the contempt and detestation of all good Masons."—Webb's Mon., page 44-45. Notice! A good Mason is simply one who keeps the secrets. Secrecy is excellency in a Mason, no matter how much sin there is in his heart. See the proof on page 49 of this same Monitor: "Finally, keep sacred and inviolable the mysteries of the order, as these are to distinguish you from the rest of the community, and mark your consequence among Masons." This makes it plain that in the estimation of a Mason, the highest degree of piety and intelligence in an outsider is but dust and ashes compared with the secrets, seerecy and secretism of the vilest rough on earth. The divulgence of Masonic secrets is the thing which above all others "subjects to contempt and detestation." Jesus said, "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, proclaim ye on the housetops." This is one great reason why his name is expunged from their ritual.

But let us see some more links of the strong chain that holds the tongue and lips of Masons in the interest of every rogue who can raise money enough to buy degrees. "And here (in the Royal Arch degree) we are bound by the most solemn ties, to promote each other's welfare."—Mon. p. 171. We can think of a good many "solemn ties" by which a man may be bound. But the most solemn tie we can think of is an oath enforced by a death penalty binding a man to support another under all possible circumstances. I can think of no other "tie" that would be so "solemn." And this is precisely the tie that binds the Royal Arch companion: to keep the secrets perfectly and "espouse his cause whether he be right or wrong, murder and treason not excepted". Webb's Monitor tells the thing straight, though not in lodge terms. It would not sound well to talk about supporting a fellow "right or wrong, murder and treason not excepted," in a Freemason's Monitor. A monitor is a book designed to win favors for Masonry, and must contain nice things. If a rough idea must be inserted for the enticement of the rough, it must be covered with a velvet garb. And they MUST be presented to win the rough.

"Let Us Have Peace."

In a recent interview with a prominent minister in Chicago, who told me that he was a Mason, I urged upon him the importance of giving up his connection with Masonry on the ground that a large and increasing number of brethren were seriously grieved and offended by it; and cited the words of the great Apostle that, "It is good neither to eat flesh nor drink wine, nor anything whereby my brother is offended, or is stumbled, or is made weak." He replied that it was just on that ground that he thought the Anti-masons ought to desist from their vain and injurious assaults on Masonry. It seriously hurt the feelings of the good brother who had joined the lodge.

Well now I have a proposition, or if you choose an exhortation. Ho! all ye Anti-masons, a great host of men and women scattered through all the churches—good people in the main but extremely fanatical. How can you persist in disturbing the peace of of the church and wounding the feelings of our dear brethren of the lodge? Why will you madly endeavor to stir up prejudices in the church against such social recreations as leading a man into the lodge "neither naked nor clothed, barefoot nor shod," and swearing him under penalty of having his throat cut and his tongue torn out? Why will you object to these dear brethren playing at Hiram Abiff lying in the grave fourteen days and then being raised on the five points of fellowship and having Mah-hah-bone spoken in their ears? I tell you, friends, when you talk about these matters you intrude on the sacred privacies of the lodge, and the members thereof feel deeply afflicted. Now the church wants peace, and if this strife continues to be stirred up you can never have it, for adhering Masons can never feel quiet while their institution is assailed.

It is true they form but a fraction of our population. Only one person in eighty is a Mason. Not more than one church member in forty belongs to the lodge; and it is true that if there were no Masonry there would be no Anti-masonry, but then these brethren won't give up their Masonry, and as we have need of all our members and ought to respect their rights, we should desist from our annoyance lest they be so offended as to leave the church.

I therefore exhort and entreat you in the name of that wisdom set forth in Jas. iii. 15, to suppress your convictions, and as the abolitionists of twenty-five years ago were exhorted to overcome their prejudices, and obey the fugative slave law with alacrity, so will you consult your own ease by bowing the knee to Freemasonry, and no longer like so many Elijah's, seek to be troublers in Israel. AHAB.

—The missions on the west coast of Africa have already done much to repress the cruelty of the degraded graded tribes who people those unhealthy shores. In Old Calabar, the missionaries of the United Presbyterian church, after twenty-five years of labor, have succeeded in uprooting the worst forms of heathenism. A little further south the English Baptists are established on the banks of the Cameruns River. If they have not gathered many converts, they have, at least, established an asylum for fugitives from the horrible custom which prevails in the mountains back of the coast. As soon as some person of influence dies, one or more victims are selected and, on the charge of witchcraft, are compelled to drink poison, or are in other cruel ways put to death. A Baptist missionary writes that within the past seven months the little mission settlement has afforded shelter to seven persons who had been thus condemned.

TME AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

The New York Reform Conference.

EXTRACTS FROM ITS ADDRESS TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

The national election is approaching under circumstances of peculiar significance. Never before in our history has the public mind been so profoundly agitated by an apprehension of the dangers arising from the prevalence of corrupt tendencies and practices in our political life. And never has there been greater reason for it. We will not display here in detail the distressing catalogue of the disclosures which for several years have followed one another in rapid succession and seemed to have left scarcely a single sphere of our political life untouched. The records of courts, of State Legislatures, and of the National Congress speak with terrible plainness, and still they are adding to the scandalous exhibition. While such a state of things would, under any circumstances, appear most deplorable, it is peculiarly so at the present moment. We are about to celebrate the one hundredth birthday of our national existence. We have invited the nations of the earth on this great anniversary to visit our land and to witness the evidences of our material progress, as well as the working and effects of that republican government which a century ago our fathers founded. Thus the most inspiring memories of our past history are rising up before us in a new glow of life, forcing upon us the comparison of what this Republic once was, what it was intended to be, and what it now is; and upon this we have challenged the judgment of civilized mankind conjointly with our own. There is much of which every American citizen has just reason to be proud: an energy and thrift, a power of thought and action, a progressive spirit, which in magnificence of result have outstripped all precedent and anticipation; a history abounding in illustrations of heroic patriotism, fortitude and wisdom; a greater freedom from foreign wars and revolutionary changes of government than most other nations can boast of; our Republic, but a century old, and just issued from the only great civil conflict we have had to deplore, so strong in resources and organization that it stands in the foremost rank of the great powers of the earth. And yet, with all these splendid results on record, it cannot be denied that at no period during the century now behind us have the American people been less satisfied with themselves, and that the centennial anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, in so many respects to all Americans a day of sincerest pride and rejoicing, is felt to be in other respects not without self-reproach and humiliation. Of this the corruption revealed in our political life is the cause. To the honor of the American people be it said, every patriotic citizen feels the burning shame of the spectacle presented in the centennial year; there the mementoes and monuments of the virtues of the past, and here the shocking evidence of the demoralization and corruption of the present; there the glorious eulogies pronounced on the wisdom and purity of the fathers, and here, in mocking contrast, the verdicts of courts and the records of legislative bodies illustrating the political morals of to-day. And this before all mankind solemnly summoned as a witness to the exhibition and a guest to the feast. Never was there cause for keener mortification, and keenly does it strike every patriotic heart. How can we avert such dangers and wipe out such shame? By proving that, although the Government machinery has become corrupt, the great body of the people are sound and strong at the core, and that they are honestly determined to reform the abuses of our political life and to overthrow at any cost, the agencies of evil that stand in the way. Only such an effort, well directed and sternly persevered in until success is assured, will save the good name of the nation, prevent the prevailing disease from becoming fatal, and restore to its old strength the faith of our own people to their institutions.

It is useless to console ourselves with the idea that the corruption among us must be ascribed solely to the immediate effects of the civil war, and will without an effort at reform soon pass away. There is another cause which is not transitory, but threatens to become permanent. It is that system which has made the offices of the Government the mere spoils of party victory; the system which distributes the places of trust and responsibility as the reward of party service and the bounty of favoritism; the system which appeals to the mean impulses of selfishness and greed as a controlling motive of political action; the system which degrades the civil service to the level of a mere party agency, and, treating the officer as the hired servant of the party and taxing him for party support, stimulates corruption and places it under party protection; the system which brings the organization of parties under the control of their most selfishly interested and, therefore, most active element, the place-holders and the place-hunters, thus tending to organize a standing army of political mercenaries, to be paid out of the Treasury of the Government, who by organized action endeavor to sujugate the will of the people to their ends through the culti vating of a tyrannical party spirit.

In view of the grave circumstances at present surrounding us, we declare that the country cannot now afford to have any man elected to the Presidency whose very name is not conclusive evidence of the most uncompromising determination of the American people to make this a pure Government once more.

Our duty in this regard is plain and imperious. It suffers no trifling or equivocation. The worn-out clap-trap of fair promises in party platforms will not satisfy it; neither will mere fine professions on the part of candidates; not mere words are needed, but acts; not mere platforms but men.

We therefore declare, and call upon all good citizens to join us, that at the coming Presidential election we shall support no candidate who in public position ever countenanced corrupt practices or combinations, or impeded their exposure and punishment, or opposed necessary measures of reform.

We shall support no candidate, who while possessing official influence and power, has failed to use his opportunities in exposing and correcting abuses coming within the reach of his observation, but for personal reasons and party ends has permitted them to fester on; for such men may be counted on, not to uncover and crush corruption, but for the party's sake, merely to conceal it.

We shall support no candidate, however conspicuous his position or brilliant his ability, in whom the impulses of the party manager have shown themselves predominant over those of the reformer; for he will be inclined to continue that fundamental abuse, the employment of the Government service as a machinery for personal or party ends.

We shall support no candidate who, however favorably judged by his nearest friends, is not publicly known to possess those qualities of mind and character which the stern task of genuine reform requires; for the American people cannot now afford to risk the future of the Republic in experiments on merely supposed virtue or rumored ability to be trusted, on the strength of private recommendations. In one word, at present, no candidate should be held entitled to the support of patriotic citizens of whom the question may fairly be asked: "Is he really the man to carry through a thoroughgoing reform of the Government? Can he with certainty be depended upon to possess the moral courage and sturdy resolution to grapple with abuses which have acquired the strength of established custom, and to this end firmly to resist the pressure even of his party friends?" Whenever there is room for such a question (and doubt as to the answer,) the candidate should be considered unfit for this emergency. This is no time for so-called availability springing from distinction gained on field of action foreign to the duties of Government; nor for that far more dangerous sort of availability which consists in this—that the candidate be neither so bad as to repel good citizens, nor so good as to discourage bad ones. Passive virtue in the highest place has too often been known to permit the growth of active vice below. The man to be intrusted with the Presidency this year must have deserved not only the confidence of honest men but also the fear and hatred of the thieves. He who manages to conciliate the thieves cannot be the candidate for honest men.

Every American citizen who has the future of the Republic and the national honor sincerely at heart, should solemnly resolve that the country must now have a President "whose name is already a watchword of reform; whose capacity and courage for the work are matters of record rather than of promise; who will restore the simplicity, independence, and rectitude of the early administrations, and whose life will be a guarantee of his fidelity and fitness;" a man at the mere sound of whose name even the most disheartened will take new courage, and all mankind will say: "The Americans are indeed in earnest to restore the ancient purity of their Government."

—Gen. Green Clay Smith, the prohibitionist nominee for President, is a nephew of Cassius M. Clay; and his mother was a cousin of Henry Clay. So he is of the Clay family, and full of Kentucky blood. He is a Baptist preacher also. Rev. Sam'l T. Spear states that Kentucky excludes ministers from civil office on account of their ecclesiastical functions; but this would not affect a United States officer.

Political Notice.

There will be a mass convention of the friends of the American party in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 23rd, 1876. Commencing at 9 o'clock, A. M.

J. P. STODDARD, Chairman Central Com.

The following is suggested as a programme for the meeting and the gentlemen whose names are mentioned in connection with the several planks in our platform have been invited to attend and open the discussion on each plank in a fifteen minutes' speech to be followed by five minute speeches by volunteers.

1st. R. H. Pollock, Wooster, O.
2nd. Pres. J. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill.
3rd. Wm. Wishart, Ontario, O.
4th. Judge Zearing, Chicago.
5th. Rev. J. L. Barlow, Fenton, Mich.
6th. Rev. A. Lord, Elgin, Ill.
7th. Rev. H. T. Cheever, Worcester, Mass.
8th. G. W. Needles, Albany, Mo.
9th. Rev. J. M. Snyder, Wheaton, Ill.
10th. Laurie Tatum, Springdale, Ia.
11th. Prof. Rideout, Hillsdale, Mich.

Arrangements will be made in connection with this meeting for preparing electoral tickets for the different States and the transaction of such other business as may be required to make our influence against the lodge felt at the ballot box.

J. P. STODDARD.

Temperance.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ohio invites all other woman's associations, and all women, to unite in observing Friday, June 9th, as a day of fasting and prayer to Almighty God, that he may be merciful to our land, and cause wise and patriotic counsels to prevail, and a righteous choice to be made in the conventions held by their respective parties, at Cincinnati and St. Louis, on the 14th and 27th of June.

Results of Whisky War.

The following is the official report of the first year's prosecution of the whisky ring, the raid having begun the first week in May last: Returns for property seized, and in process of condemnation and sale, are necessarily slow. The final collection of at least a million more, that is now being proceeded against, is assured. The value of the property seized is $1,500.000; value of assessments, $1,400,000; suits in official bonds, $250,000; total, $3,150,000. From the above sources the cash turned into the treasury to May 1, 1876, is $600,000. The criminal indictments are as follows: Distillers and rectifiers, 95; supervisors, 2; revenue agents, 5; collectors, 2; deputy collectors, 8; gaugers, 30; storekeepers, 15; other persons, 19; total, 176. Convictions and pleas of guilty, 110; absconded to foreign countries, 12; tried and acquitted, 17. Total expense to the treasury department in detecting frauds and preparing cases for court has not exceeded $25,000.

International Temperance Conferance.

The international Temperance Conference which will convene in Philadelphia, in the Arch street Presbyterian church, June 13, for a three days' session, promises to be the most important World's Temperance Congress ever held. It will include a large number of well-known representative temperance men and women of our own country, and many distinguished foreign delegates. Papers will be presented giving a general history of temperance work in this and other countries, and of the various national temperance organizations; also carefully prepared papers by able writers from both sides of the Atlantic upon the Educational and Scientific, the Social and Economical, Legislative, Political, and Religious aspects. The following, among others, have consented to prepare papers, or to open the discussion upon various topics: Hon. Neal Dow, of Maine; Hon. Wm. E. Dodge, of New York; Rev. Dr. Cummings, of Connecticut; Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D., of Brooklyn; Rev. R. L. Stanton, D. D., of Ohio; Rev. Dr. St. James Frye, of St. Louis; J. H. Raper. Esq., of the United Kingdom Alliance; Robert Rae, Esq., of the London National Temperance League; Rev. Dawson Burns, London; Hon. James Black, of Philadelphia; Rev. Dr. Holbrook, of Syracuse; Rev. Dr. Thompson, of Chicago; Rsv. W. H. H. Murray, D. D., of Boston; Rev. S. K. Leavitt, of Cincinnati; Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D., of Boston; Hon. B. D. Townsend, of South Carolina; Hon. William B. Spooner, of Mass.; Miss Frances E. Willard, of Chicago; Miss Lavinia Goodell, of Wisconsin; Mrs. Helen E. Brown, of New York.

The Secretary of the International Temperance Conference Committee is J. N. Stearns, No. 38 Reade street, New York, to whom all communications should be addressed.

There is one objectionable feature in this convention, delegates are desired from churches and so-called temperance lodges on an equality. There should have been no striking hands like this, let it be all church or all lodge.

Prohibition Platform.

At the recent national convention the Committee on Platform presented a report reaffirming the prohibition plank of the platform of 1872, and presented the following additional ones:

The Prohibition Reform party of the United States, organized in the name of the people to revive, enforce, and perpetuate in the government the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, submit, in this centennial year of the Republic, for the sufferages of all good citizens, the following platform of national reforms and measures:

1 The legal prohibition in the District of Columbia, the territories, and in every other place subject to the laws of Congress, of the importation, exportation, manufacture, and traffic of all alcoholic beverages as high crimes against society; an amendment of the national Constitution to render these prohibition measures universal and permanent; the adoption of treaty stipulations with foreign powers to prevent the importation and exportation of all alcoholic beverages.

2. The abolition of class legislation, and of special privileges in the government, and the adoption of equal sufferage and eligibility to office without distinction of race, religious creed, property, or sex.

3. The appropriation of public lands in limited quantities to actual settlers only; the reduction of the rates of inland and ocean postage, of telegraphic communication, of railroad and water transportation and travel to the lowest practical point, by force of laws, wisely and justly framed with reference not only to the interests of the capital employed, but to the higher claims of the general good.

4. The suppression by law of all lotteries and gambling in gold, stocks, produce, and every form of money and property, and the penal inhibition of the use of public marts for advertising schemes of gambling and lotteries.

5. The abolition of those foul enormities, polygamy and the social evil, and the protection of purity, peace, and happiness of homes by ample and efficient legislation.

6. The national observance of the Christian Sabbath, established by laws, prohibiting ordinary labor and business in all departments of the public service and private employments, works of necessity, charity, and religion excepted, on that day.

7. The establishment by mandatory provisions in the National and State constitutions, and by all necessary legislation, of a system of free public schools for the universal and enforced education of all the youth of the land.

8. The free use of the Bible, not as a ground of religious creeds, but as a text-book of the purest morality, the best liberty, and the noblest literature, in our public schools, that our children may grow up in its light, and that its spirit and precepts may pervade our nation.

9. The separation of our government in all its departments and institutions, including the public schools and all funds for their maintenance, from the control of every religious sect or other association, and the protection, alike, of all sects by equal laws, with entire freedom of religious faith and worship.

10. The introduction into all treaties hereafter negotiated with foreign governments of a provision for the amicable settlement of international difficulties by arbitration.

11. The abolition of all barbarous modes and instruments of punishment, the recognition of the laws of God, the claims of humanity in the discipline of jails and prisons, and of that higher and wiser civilization worthy of our age and nation, which regards the reform of criminals as a means for the prevention of crime.

12. The abolition of executive and legislative patronage, and the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, of Senators, and of all civil officers, so far as practicable, by the direct vote of the people.

13. The practice of a friendly and liberal policy to immigrants from all nations, and the guaranty to them of ample protection, and of equal rights and privileges.

14. The separation of money of the government from all banking institutions. The national government only should exercise the high prerogative of issuing paper money, and that should be subject to prompt redemption on demand, in gold and silver, the only equal standard of value recognized by the civilized world.

15. The reduction of the salaries of public officers in a just ratio with the decline of wages and market prices, the abolition of sinecures, unnecessary offices, and official fees and perquisites, the practice of strict economy in the government expenses, and a free and thorough investigation into any and all alleged abuses of public trusts.

Reform News and Notices.

The National Christian Association, which has for its especial object the removal of those despotic, idolatrous and deistical associations commonly called lodges, will hold its Ninth Anniversary in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Ill., June 20, 21 and 22, 1876; the opening session being at 8 o'clock on the evening of June 20th.

The business meeting of the Association will be held in the Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison St., at 10-30 o'clock of June 20th. Members will find the office on the second floor at the head of the stairs.

The Board of Directors have selected Saturday, June 3d, as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret associations. Those who observe it are especially requested to remember the Convention in prayer. Ministers of the Gospel of that Saviour who is shut out from these secret lodges are requested to preach on the subject of Secretism on Sabbath, June 4th.

Opening Services at the Carpenter Building.

Last Saturday was the day recommended to be observed in fasting and prayer for the overthrow of the lodge. It was thought a most fitting occasion for special services setting apart the Carpenter building for the use of the reform, and arrangements were made accordingly as our readers have been aware from the notices given. The exercises were opened with singing the hymn "The Lord will Provide"—"Though troubles assail and dangers affright," followed with prayer by Rev. H. H. Hinman, Illinois State lecturer. Rev. J. W. Bain read Jeremiah 23d and Zechariah 5th, with brief and appropriate comments.

"Am I a Soldier of the Cross" was the next hymn sung and Hon. J. B. Walker addressed the meeting. He said that such a work as that now engaging us is most appropriately begun with prayer. All great reforms seem to have had small beginnings as we have experienced in the temperance and anti-slavery movements. In every right reform there are always a few who connect it with Christ. Every really onward movement in society has been in connection with Christianity. There are many whom we esteem and regard as good Christians who take no part in this reform, or at least, no active one. So it will not be by those known as Christians simply that it will be carried through, but by Christian reformers. There are three stages in reforms: martyrdom and persecution, silence and respect, success. God has helped us until we have a place to set up our Ebenezer, to plant our standard. Thanks be to his grace for this. The time of persecution is fast passing and our cause is obtaining the respect of all the better portion of the people. He spoke of Mr. Carpenter as one of those who spend their wealth in supporting Christian reforms. He was one of the earliest temperance workers in the history of this city. The older men are passing away and younger minds pushing up to take their places. In all this great work we recognize the presence and power of God. This is a point of great achievement, that we have here a center and a home for the cause. At the close of his remarks he offered a short and fervent prayer.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, General Agent, then remarked in brief on the measures taken to secure the House, and of the desire to complete the fund and secure the property to the N. C. A. without delay. Friends of the cause all over the country look anxiously hitherward and notice every thing done in connection with this building. The hand of a good God has helped us so far toward a successful completion of this work.

A consecratory prayer was offered by Rev. E. S. Cook, and after singing the opportunity for general remarks was eagerly improved. Rev's A. Wait and H. H. Hinman, Dea. Sylvanus Town of Aurora, Ill., Capt. Henry Bundy, Mr. E. A. Cook and Mrs. C. N. Holden of Chicago, spoke of various features of the work. Dea. Town referred to Mr. Carpenter and his long acquaintance with him. He was a member of the same church in Troy, N. Y., many years ago, and was joined with him in Sunday-school work for colored people. Here in Illinois they with Father Preston and Rev. F. Bascom helped print and circulate a sermon against secret orders preached by Pres. Blanchard when in Galesburg.

It was regretted that the state of Mr. Carpenter's health prevented his attendance. He has just returned from Arkansas, where he has spent some weeks at a health resort, but it is feared with no benefit. The power of a merciful Father can yet sustain him to help forward this great work, and to this end let prayer be offered by every friend of the reform.

We have not space to present the remarks of others though of great interest. The meeting was not largely attended, but the earnest and intelligent laborers in this work of the city and vicinity were well represented, among them Mr. Oliver March of Bloomington should be mentioned.

Marshall County, Iowa—From the General Agent.

CHICAGO, June 2nd, 1876.

Seven o'clock finds me again in this city surrounded by the busy workers in our reform. Letters read and incidents of note considered, I turn aside to say to those who read the Cynosure that I have had a very enjoyable and profitable trip to Iowa. My only stop was in Marshall county, where I spoke six times, found friends long-tried, and obtained some recruits who will be heard from in the campaign now fairly opened in one of the finest agricultural districts in the valley of the Mississippi. A postal card apprised Bro. McCleery of my coming, and he took me to his farm residence, three and a half miles from the city of Marshalltown, where I received every attention possible, and after a good night's rest we started together for a call on our old friend A. C. Moffatt, who is always ready to give a reason for the hope which is within him. He was soundly converted and thoroughly indoctrinated in the Anti-masonic faith forty years ago, and has never "fallen from grace." He has been sowing the good seed all around him, and many of the tender shoots have become sturdy plants under his culture.

Arrangements were soon made for a series of lectures, and the first given in Presbyterian church at Albion, Saturday evening. Here I met a number of friends, and there was so much interest apparent that it seemed best to continue the services at the same point. The pastor of the Presbyterian church although once initiated and never having renounced his connection with the lodge, yet gave his sanction and attended three of the services held in his church. I hope to hear that he has "come out from among them," and taken a decided stand for Christ in this controversy.

The grange in this place has had its day and is "a thing of the past" and a very contemptible thing in the eyes of those who have been swindled and robbed by its subtle arts. One man, once a granger, has been gathering up the statistics for Marshall county, and finds that according to figures which do not lie, the grange movement has cost that county not less than $70,000, a pretty round sum for one county, and if the other counties of Iowa paid in proportion somebody has made something out of this thing. But who? Not the farmer, who paid the bills, but those to whom the bills were paid. J. P. STODDARD.

From the Pennsylvania Agent.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Having been out of the lecture work since April, I have sent no reports of late. It is due to all Pennsylvania friends to say that no provision has been made for a State agent for the present year. The support of the agent last year (or rather partial support) was almost wholly furnished by the N. E. Pa. Association.

My heart sorrows over the thought that so many are found in even our most favored States who will scarce hear of our movement in the support of Walker and Kirkpatrick. The partisan papers, under lodge influence will not let the fact of our nomination nor the merits of our cause or candidates be known. If I had the means, I would like to place in the hands of each voter in five or six of our N. E. Pa. counties, one of the tracts entitled "The American Party," but poverty hinders. But truth's progress though slow is onward. God will prosper the right, and the lodges that Satan has forced upon the people, with all their corrupting influence and debasing power shall be overthrown. May the Lord hasten the day of emancipation from secret orders, and perfect the enthronement of Christ over men in all their interests, pursuits, and relations. J. W. RAYNOR.

Correspondence.

Letter from J. S. Hickman.

WELLINGTON, Ill., June 1, '76.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Enoch Honeywell, who is now visiting his son, A. Honeywell, Esq., of Hoopeston, called a few days ago and made us a very pleasant visit. This great worker in our reform is 87 years old and for one of his age unusually active mentally and physically. All who have read his tract addressed "To Young Men of America," well know that his tract exhibits or shows a strong mind. Mr. Honeywell says he purposes attending our Anniversary in Chicago in June.

Our banker, J. S. McFerren of Hoopeston, is putting up a new bank building of brick with stone basement, and it is reported that the Masons are to occupy the upper story; but understand, our banker has never been hoodwinked and cable-towed. When Mr. McFerren told me that the Masons were to have the upper story of his building, I replied that he need not be surprised if some fellow some night should fall through with nothing on but his shirt.

Near the present bank building we offered to sell to the ex-Worshipful Master of the Hoopeston lodge Ronayne's Exposition. We called his attention particularly to those pictures in the back part of the work entitled "Freemasonry at a Glance," assuring him that he would find it useful in refreshing his memory. It is not necessary to say that a "glance" was all he wanted of those "picters," as he had no doubt scores of times put poor victims through those sorrowful plights as pictured out by Ronayne. It was laughable to see how quickly he turned away from those pictures, and the very manner of his turning away from them said as plainly as words could, that they only pictured out the truth and exhibited to the eye the various phases of the lodge tricks.

About the 20th of this month the Masons are to lay the corner-stone of the new court-house to be built at Danville, to cost the county one hundred and fifty thousand dollars perhaps. It would be a grand affair if Ronayne could about the 15th of this month show up for three nights the hugeness of the lodge swindle in the large hall in Danville. The anti's are strong and fully able to meet all expenses—why not? J. S. Hickman.

Our Centennial Letter.

Visitors and Friends Increasing—A Long-deferred Testimony—Suppressed History—Hard Work.

Philadelphia, May 23, 1876.

To-day I have given out more tracts than any other day, and I think most likely as many as on any other two days; some to Canada, some to Nova Scotia, some to Minnesota, some to Connecticut, &c., &c. It is astonishing how many Anti-masons there are who I have reason to believe hardly dare speak of the matter at home, but are greedy to get these tracts, and glad to learn of what we are doing. I have been asking names of persons more or less prominent in their own communities: D. D.'s, L. L. D.'s, Reverends, Professors, Attorneys at Law, editors, historians, &c. Some of them you will hear from and I think the Cynosure will receive articles from some of them.

It is wonderful how my neighbors around my book case have become more than tame Whereas they were shy of me and my work, they now not only come right up and are sociable and send men and women to me, but advance my work. Thank God for victory over prejudice and fear of Masons.

Thirty-one copies of the Cynosure were brought to my stand to-day, from the U. S. Building in these Centennial grounds, by the mail carrier. The preparations for this work are now completed, so that now and forward you can send to me all you wish to send by mail through the Centennial Post Office, and it will reach me at my stand.

I learned to-day that Ezekiel Jewett, who was in command of Fort Niagara when Morgan was held in the magazine, and who was imprisoned for refusing to give testimony in the suits against Morgan's abductors, now says that the allegations preferred against those men were true. He now lives at Lockport N. Y. My informant says he was cognizant of a fact that has never come to the knowledge of the public and that he has the document in manuscript that was prepared for the New York Gazetteer some years back; and when shown to a prominent Mason by the publisher, the Mason said, "Publish that thing if you dare, and we will discredit your book and throw it out of market." And that article which was against Masonry was expunged and another put in its place.

He further told me he had Giddin's Almanac for several years, and a variety of other interesting matter. He also said I might go to his house in another State and transcribe all I thought profitable for our work from various documents he has; but wishes not to have his name come out at present, because of his business relations, being in government employ. I intend to try and open a correspondence with him; I have his name and home address, and through that way I can reach him. He was at the Centennial to-day, but goes to night or to-morrow, I think, to Washington.

I am kept very busy folding tracts, calling the attention of passers-by and others not passing, explaining the whole work in brief, and handing out tracts. I get very tired and sometimes almost think I shall be obliged to leave, because so worn down or at least lay off for a day or two and recruit. It is a work I like because I see it is doing good. I think many honest-minded men who are Masons have been convinced that Masonry is not what they had thought it to be. I get their confidence by kindness and showing them that we who are engaged in this work are a Christian body, doing a Christian work, and further showing that we know what it is, and holding their dark oaths, etc., right under the light of the word of God, till they see it and go away under an humble sense of their wrong.

Your brother, A. D. Freeman.

An Old Man's Observations.

Esteemed Friends:—It is my heart's desire to lend more efficient aid to the righteous cause in which you are so heroically combatting against fearful odds, if my means would justify the indulgence.

Again I will ask your indulgence for troubling you with so long a letter. My apology is the same as heretofore. That is, I find so few within the circle of my acquaintance that care to converse on this, to them, delicate subject, but to me of vast import. Professors of religion who in their hearts abominate the vile thing (under the pretentious and false cognomen of Freemasonry) express their views with bated breath, when crowded to say yea or nay on the question. This state of things is quite easily traceable to their proximate cause as the natural results of cause and effect.

In the first place the great mass of community are in fact ignorant of the true character of pretentious Freemasonry; and worse still, the pulpits, as well as the press, are either sleeping at their posts, or are giving uncertain sounds. The pulpit and the press, having failed in their duty to advise and warn men of danger are involved in a heavy responsibility. Then again individuals of the better class justify their apathy on the ground that agitation is useless, and let their own best interest as well as the best interest of communities go by default. For a consideration be sure, and what is it? They put in a plea somewhat plausible, that their pecuniary interests are at stake. As an honest confession is good for the soul, and to show that I am not brimming full of self-righteousness, the following confession is made: That were I placed in the same circumstances that hundreds and thousands are, throughout the land, struggling for an existence, with all they can do to make both ends meet, I might submit to the hateful gag, so far as to keep mum. The humiliation of making such admissions, only strengthens me to believe that I have made no mistake in my estimate of this murderous institution. It was adjudged and convicted by public sentiment at the ballot box (when that was much purer than now) a wilful murderer, and in proof of non-repentance is now glorying in its shame. And the strangest of the strange, and most lamentable of all, this same unrepentant murderer is fellowshiped in the most popular churches throughout the land, including the bloody district of the martyred Morgan, whose martyrdom was analogous to those of old, in doing his duty to himself, his country and his God, in telling the truth for which he forfeited his life rather than to recant. The laws under which he lived were bound to protect him in all he did, but were impotent to bring his executioners to justice, for the reason they were protected from harm through the strategy inherent in such a mammoth secretism.

Another plea quite plausible, stereotyped by the great Beecher and very convenient for common, every-day use, is couched in these words: "There cannot be much harm in Freemasonry, else there would not be so many good men in the lodge." They forget all that cry Lord, Lord, are not of the kingdom of heaven. They don't seem to care to know that to be a good Mason it is necessary to obey all signs and summons, to extricate a brother Mason right or wrong, as a Royal Arch Mason is bound to do, "murder and treason not excepted." A strict adherence to the laws and usages of any organization of men entitles them only that so adhere and obey, as worthy of the title and term of good, as a matter of course. If these premises are sound then a good Mason is a very bad man, and a good man is no Mason at all, except in name; and as long as he harbors their vile oaths in his bosom, no matter what his antecedents may have been, or his exterior outside the lodge, a discount should attach to his goodness in the degree he so adheres to its principles.

Suppose these good men pray devoutly in the sanctuary in the name of Christ Jesus, and alternately repair in a sneaking manner under cover of the dark mantle of night to the lodge room, and then and there, pray to the God of Masonry, or Mammon, when fairly analyzed, at the same time virtually rejecting the Saviour under an edict of the order. More than this, many a one of them has left a wife at home, to whom on his return he doggedly refuses to account for his actions in his absence, violating his marriage vow, the most sacred of all vows, on moral or Christian principles. If such as these are the good men that quiet the consciences of the people at large, the signs of the times are fearful indeed. With my best wishes for your welfare personally, I remain yours as ever in the truth and the right.

Wells Springer.

A California Congregationalist in Earnest.

Ceres, Cal., May 8, 1876.

Dear Sir:—Instead of desiring my paper "stopped," so long as it is what it now is, and I am able to pay for any paper, I shall take the Christian Cynosure. It has been a blessing to me spiritually and temporally. The former by seperating me more from the world's ungodly men, and the latter by keeping me from the grange, that has robbed the farmers of California in almost every instance in which they have trusted it. It has been done by the incompetency and dishonesty of its officials, by mismanagement in its attempts to do a little business for themselves, by fuss and regalia, by lost time in attending its meetings, its frequent dances and chicken eatings. I think there is not a grange in this or adjoining counties that has attempted to do business that is not a loser and in debt; the most of them to the extent of several thousand dollars.

A few days since a minister whose name is familiar to the members of nearly every Congregational church in California, told me that he never joined a secret society; that he had not read any anti-secret papers, but would read some if I would send them to him; had heard something of the revelations of seceders, but did not think it could all be true, etc. I think our ministers need light on this subject, that "the blind may not attempt to lead the blind," or through cowardice permit their members to fall into the ditch. I intend soon to send the Cynosure to about ten Congregational ministers. Will not others do the some until every minister that will read is taught the abominations of secretism? I will mail the tracts you sent me to every minister whose address I can learn. Will others do the same until the ministers understand this matter? We are expecting President Blanchard here this summer. I think one needed benefit he will confer upon us will be to impart a little of his boldness to our cowardly hearts. That is what is the matter; we are afraid of losing in our business or social standing by telling what we know of these orders. I am very truly yours, J. W. STETSON.

A Common Sense View of Sanctification.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

There is much said and written on the doctrine of holiness, and I think very little to the purpose. There is no doctrine in the Bible more plain to the true Christian than the doctrine of perfection or holiness as taught by the Saviour and his Apostles. The doctrine is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Saved how? Saved by being born again. What does this mean? Having passed from death unto life, into Christ, the hope of glory within me. Now the human heart is compared to a cage of unclean birds in its natural or sinful state; now when the sinner repents and comes to the Saviour with saving faith, that moment the Saviour forgives him and casts out the unclean birds, and takes possession of the heart to dwell there. And do you suppose he would take up his abode there without first cleansing this filthy cage? No, he that the Son makes free is free indeed, and there remains no filthiness of the flesh or spirit unless the person commit sin and lets this unclean bird in to pollute this cage or heart again.

After the spiritual babe is born it needs the most tender care and nursing. When we are born again we become as little children whose nursing fathers and mothers should take the most tender care of them and feed them on the sincere milk of the Word, till they grow and become stronger and can walk and talk. At first, they may be only able to lisp the name of Jesus, but if properly cared for they will grow from infancy to boyhood and to manhood, and to the perfect man in Christ Jesus. It is true we read of great men in the Bible, receiving great blessings the second time, and at different times. Peter, I suppose received a great blessing, but it was after the cock crew when he saw he had let in the unclean birds, and repented. So David received great blessings at different times when he had backslidden and repented again. When I look around and see these great second blessing advocates with their gold watches in their pockets, stuck full of costly diamonds and dressed in the best of broad-cloths, and carrying about in their hearts the most foul and abominable oaths that the enemies of God and man can administer,—when I see and know all these things to be so, my soul shudders over their awful condition. Christ said many shall come in my name and say, I am Christ, and shall deceive many. Are they not here plenty of them, and are they not deceiving thousands upon thousands by advocating false doctrine, by perverting Scripture, and getting up some show for themselves to court popularity? OUR MAIL.

Benj. Crumpacker, Coon Rapids, Iowa, writes:

"Your paper is always interesting and just as soon as I am done reading there is some one ready to read and hear of the anti movement. The people are getting waked up here on the subject of raising Hiram, the widow's son. There are a good many anti's in this county. We think of electing some of the officers this fall. These anti's are generally poor in purse but rich in spirit and in truth. They have been asleep for some time in regard to Masonic swindles and vengeance."

O. Breed, Avery, Ill., sends one subscription and writes:

"There are a good many here who like the tone of your paper. It is to get them awake to their interest. I think we can do better soon."

If every one, who could with a little effort, would do as well as this, that is send in one new subscriber, our list would be much longer than it is.

Van R. Carey, Freeport, Ill., writes:

"I have fifty-two names on my petition to the General Conference, and could have obtained more. I will do what I can for your paper. Our cause is doing well in Freeport, but we want two or three lectures."

These petitions are having an important effect. A Methodist Episcopal pastor of this city remarked the other day, that he had for some time felt that this war against secretism was coming on in his church, and he was preparing himself for it by reading books and other literature upon the subject.

Sam'l French, Chapin, Ill., sends $5 for our General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, and writes:

"I see he has had his home burned while he was out battling with the image of the beast Allow me to say that I think the friends should help him build it up again. I am still doing what I can to scatter light among the people."

Lesson for June 18.—The Seven Chosen.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts vi. 1-15. Commit 1-7; Primary Verse, 15.

1 And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration.

2 Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables.

3 Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business.

4 But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.

5 And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch;

6 Whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.

7 And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith.

8 And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia and of Asia, disputing with Stephen.

10 And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake.

11 Then they suborned men, which said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses and against God.

12 And they stirred up the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him and brought him to the council,

13 And set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place and the law:

14 For we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazereth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us.

15 And all that sat in the council looking steadfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

The seven were ordained to their office by the apostles in prayer and the laying on of hands. This is the first mention of such a ceremony in the New Testament. In the Old Testament such a rite was not unknown. "Joshua, the son of Nun, was full of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands upon him." Deut. xxxiv. 9; Num. xxvii. 18. Christ laid his hands upon children to bless them. Matt. xix. 13; Mark x. 16. Hands were laid upon the afflicted to heal them. ix. 17, 18; xxviii. 8. And after this it came to be the custom that has now universally obtained, to lay hands in consecration upon those appointed to sacred work. xiii. 3.

—The church is the natural mother of the poor. To whom else do they go in distress, and from whom else do they receive help. The charities that bless the needy largely come from her. They are left to her as a special and sacred legacy: "Ye have the poor always with you." Deut. xv. 7-11; Job xxix. 11-16; Prov. xix. 17; xxviii. 27; Is. lviii. 10,11; Matt. xxv. 40; Luke xiv. 13, 14; Acts xx. 35; Heb. vi. 10.

—So well did the apostles understand the danger that lies in the stewardship of riches that they insisted that the seven should be "full of the Holy Ghost and of wisdom." Full, that, first they might be tender of God's poor, and, second, that they might be superior to the temptations of their office. God's grace in special measure is needed by those who have the handling of wealth, either for themselves or for others. Ps. cxix. 36, 37; Matt. vi. 19; Luke xii. 15; Rom. viii. 5,6; 1 Tim. vi. 10; Tit. i. 11; 1 John ii. 15.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

—The kind of men, v. 3. "Full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom." Men "born of the Spirit" and under his teaching, and therefore wise to deal kindly, prudently, patiently, and with just discrimination towards the poor in their various phases of character, health, condition and necessities, spiritual as well as temporal.

A mere mechanical attention to the poor is often worse than no attention at all. The attention that the secret orders give to their sick and needy members is, in nine cases out of ten, a burlesque upon true benevolence and real kindness. It is a hand of iron controlled by mere machinery, and utterly heartless and incapable of smoothing the pillow, soothing the aching brow, or wiping gently the cold-beaded sweat from the brow of death.—Evangelical Repository.

SINGING TO COWS.

Cows are sociable, and understand more than we suppose. This is the way I came in possession of this choice bit of knowledge: Tim and I used to sing to our cows. They knew very quickly when we changed from one tune to another. We tried them repeatedly. When we sang sober church-hymns, they'd lop their ears down, look serious, and chew their cuds very slowly, reminding me—no irreverence meditated—of nice old ladies in church, listening to the words of the preacher, yet all the time munching cloves. Then we'd change to some quick air, "Yankee Doodle" or the like, and they would shake their heads, open their eyes, and blink at us, as much as to say, "Stop! don't you know we are the deacon's cows?" But when we would stop entirely every cow would turn her head, as if asking us to go on with our singing. If it was pleasant, we generally sang together through the entire milking. I love the dear animals that add so much to our comfort. Boys, will you not be kind to the cows.—Canada Farmer.

In raising tomatoes for profit, plant in rows four feet apart, alternating with rows of peas. The peas protect the tomatoes. The rows should be east and west. When the peas are picked remove the vines and take a light plow and turn a furrow away from the tomatoes. Raise the tomato plants in a seed bed, then set them in a cold bed, and let them get stocky, and finally take them to the soil.

The best way we know to circumvent cabbage worms is to hunt them persistently, being especially vigilant when they are in the chrysalis state. Remember that every one of the chrysalises which develops into the perfect winged state will leave a numerous progeny. Watering with soapsuds is useful. And we have heard of a man who raised a good crop, while his neighbors raised none, by dusting finely-sifted buckwheat flour on the cabbages.

Get the best hands, and keep them. When a man has become used to his work and employer, he is worth more than a stranger. There is a way to make men interested in their work, of satisfying their self-respect, treating them courteously and reasonably, giving them credit for success, while holding them strictly responsible for failures, and above all, by paying them promptly and liberally, that will make their work worth double what it would otherwise be. As land advances in price, more labor must be expended on it to make it pay a profit, and by and by we must have a settled laboring class. We are now in process of educating this class of men, and must do it by good management.

For chicken cholera dissolve one oz. of blue vitriol in one pint of water, and give three or four spoonsful of the vitriol water in some milk to the fowls to drink every day. It prevents them from taking the cholera, and will cure in most cases; also, buckwheat in the grain will cure the cholera if given to chickens.

The Durham Lawn herd of shorthorns, owned by Colonel Robert Holloway, of Alexis, Ill., was sold at auction lately at Dexter Park, Chicago. Buyers were present from all parts of the United States and Canada, and the bidding was spirited. Sixty-five head were sold, and a total sum of more than $70,000 was realized. The average price for cows was $1,136, and for bulls, $814.

Freemasonry at a Glance.

This exceedingly popular representation of lodge initiation, signs, grips, etc., will be given again in the Cynosure of June 22nd. Send on your orders now. If orders are sent after June 15th, there is no certainty that they can be filled. We furnish these extra copies at the following low rates: Three or more copies to one address, post paid at 3 cents each, single copies at 4 cents. By Express, you to pay charges, 2 cents each.

THE SABBATH OF THE LORD.

This is the title of a book or pamphlet of some thirty pages by JOHN MCKAY, an Elder in the Presbyterian church. It is published both in New York and Wick, Scotland.

It is indeed refreshing to meet this production of a mind thoroughly imbued with belief in God and in His law, as a living actuality on this earth. Such is this writing of Mr. McKay on the Sabbath. It also contains Mr. McKay's reply to the speech of Henry Ward Beecher in favor of opening libraries and reading-rooms on the Lord's day. Our readers will doubtless remember that speech of Mr. Beecher, cold and brilliant as the phosphorescent light of decaying wood. He parades his Puritan lineage as is his wont when about to deny all that the Puritans held and taught; boasts his virtues derived from a New England Sabbath, and then seeks to subvert the very ideas on which that Sabbath was founded.

This Mr. McKay shows with simple Scriptural vigor, and makes, indeed, a very strong clear case, and says to Mr. Beecher with Scotch directness: "You have rendered your name, and that of all who are deceived by your meteoric rhetoric, and who act upon your unscriptural and latitudinarian principles, liable to go down to posterity under the reprobating ban of the moral sense of Christendom."

Mr. McKay's little book can be had of the Publisher, John Reed, 43 Center St., New York. It will probably also be on sale at the Cynosure office.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AND THE PETITION AGAINST THE LODGE.

The Committee on the state of the Church, with Gen. Clinton B. Fisk of St. Louis as chairman, to which were referred the petitions to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference on secret orders has reported as follows:

That it is found that all the petitions design to be summed up in one petition, as stated by the originator of all these petitions and memorials. Your committee have had a very difficult task to perform, from the nature of the subject presented them. Being secret and oath-bound organizations, what your committee most needed was more light. From the light they have received they fail to find sufficient evidence that the "obligations and teachings of these organizations are essentially and designedly anti-Christian," since these organizations claim and publish to the world in their works that their fundamental principle is, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," and are mutually bound to carry out this divine precept. Therefore it should be left to each individual to decide in regard to uniting with these organizations. But while we do not express any opinion or judgment as to the propriety or expediency of uniting with these associations, we do most affectionately and earnestly admonish our ministers and members to carefully guard against allowing membership in or attendance upon these organizations to interfere in any manner with their religious duties or attendance upon the means of grace.

Your committee, therefore, beg leave to respectfully recommend that as to the prayer of the petitioners which asks the General Conference to "take such action as will require our members to separate from these associations or be subjected to disciplinary action, as also all members who may hereafter unite with such orders,"—that it be not granted.

Nail this up that all the world may read. Shall we? Or shall it be buried fathoms deep that no syllable ever appear to the shame of the churches of Jesus Christ. The committee needed not "more light" so much as more grace to speak the truth of the Masonic order and honestly use the light they had. There is no difficulty attending this question to an honest mind, for the evidences abound on every hand of the true character of the lodges. But plainly all the light they had was reflected from the baleful altar fires of Masonry, and they cared for no sunlight of God's truth.

Not "designedly anti-Christian?" Why did they not send out to any Masonic book store, and a half hour's reading would have been enough. Where did the committee find, we ask, the falsehood published that the "fundamental principle" of the lodge is "Love thy neighbor as thyself?" Ah! published "to the world in their works." So the lodge writings were brought in and studied? But where did they find such a claim? They could not; nor can it be found. On the contrary, they found the priest and Levite well and clearly drawn in the ground principle of all these orders —help those you have sworn to. There's no "love," no "neighbor" in secretism. Those ideas come from Christ whom this committee found the lodge casts out, and publishes that "to world in their works."

They express no "opinion or judgment as to the expediency or propriety of uniting with these associations." If these associations are good they ought to; if bad they surely ought to; and heaven holds them accountable for the privilege or duty.

But the advice, that following after the idolatry of the lodge should not be allowed to interfere, etc., is like the instruction of a Spartan father to his son, that it was honorable to steal unless he was caught. So this great council have endorsed the lodge abominations, and put their approbation upon them; for the only moral character these have, according to this report, is in an incidental interference with some other duties to which the committee adjudged no higher sanction.

But this report is an improvement on that presented four years ago—in that it is worse, more desperate and Masonic. Another declaration following the same line will arouse the honest Christian masses in the Methodist Episcopal church to a just rebellion against such leadership.

KNIGHT TEMPLARISM ON THE RAMPAGE.

The following account was telegraphed from Michigan the other day. It shows how men perform when deserted by the Spirit of God. With impenitent hearts and impious oaths these "Knights" have sworn to protect the Christian religion. How can such please God by the ceremonies here described? The great "Dr." McMurdy is an Episcopal clergyman formerly preaching at Hyde Park, a suburb of this city; during our State Convention here in 1874 he assumed to inform those present of their ignorance, but not succeeding left the room in disgrace. He was also, if we are not mistaken, one of Mackey's backers in Washington city, and one of the incorporators of the Masonic Hall Association there.

NILES, Mich., May 25.—The festival of Ascension day was celebrated in this city by Niles commandery No. 12 of Knights Templar and visiting Sir Knights, lodge No. 97, with many brethren from abroad. At 7 o'clock this evening the Knights Templar, in full uniform, marched to Trinity Episcopal church, where the form of service peculiar to the order on public occasions was performed. The church was densely packed, hundreds failing to obtain admission, and the streets adjacent were thronged with the interested and the curious. A large number were present from South Bend, Kalamazoo, St. Joseph, Buchanan, Dowagiac, Berrin, and other villages and cities surrounding. The address by Rev. Robt. McMurdy, D. D., LL. D., Past Grand Prelate of the Grand Encampment of the United States, was much more than ordinarily appropriate, and was listened to throughout with the utmost degree of attention, notwithstanding the fact of the church being crowded almost to suffocation. The service was arranged by Rev. Dr. McMurdy, while Grand Prelate of the Grand Encampment of the United States. The prayer was the form translated from the Latin used by the Templars in their dungeons hundreds of years ago. The hymn was from manuscript of the twelfth century, now in the British museum. The address was a succinct history of the Templars from their organization, their principles and deeds of valor, showing their direct connection with Freemasonry, and tracing both Masonry and Templarism to Jerusalem. The speaker showed that the feelings of the Templars were neither visionary nor superstitious. The fruits of chivalry were presented in the changing moral and political condition of Europe in maintaining the rights of the poor, softening the ferocity of war, restoring the fair sex to its present honorable condition, contributing to the world's civilization, checking the power of the papacy, and suggesting republican fraternity. It was suggested that the Templar banner might yet wave over Constantinople, relieving 7,000,000 Christians from the yoke of Mahometanism. Masonic Templarism clearly demonstrated to be far more than ceremony and symbol. It speaks of truth alone, and is a perpetual miracle. Every nation under the sun utters the same Masonic Shibboleth, and uses the same mystic signs. The Masonic body is the great army of conviction, teaching Scripture, morality, maintaining the existence and unity of God, making the Bible the corner-stone, proclaiming the resurrection of the body and diminishing the evils of sectarianism. While Masonry is religious from its very nature, yet it is not a religion. The address closed with an exhortation to each Templar and Mason to falter not, but cheerfully perform the duty to which he had been called.

Are you going to Philadelphia?

If so, do not fail to call and see Elder Freeman, and give a word of cheer. His stand is in the south-east part of the Main Building and you will easily find it by the beautiful Cynosure Banner, with the large bold letters, "OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES," on it. This line is also over the top of the book case. Any of our friends who pass through Chicago on their way will confer a favor by calling at the Cynosure office, if they can, especially if they can take a bundle of tracts to Elder Freeman. Do not forget to pray for Bro. Freeman. He is doing a work of immense importance and his strength is taxed to the utmost. Very few men seventy-one years of age could stand such severe labor for a week and not many for a single day.

Bro. Alexander Mackie at whose house Elder Freeman is now a guest writes: "The work in which he is engaged, to my mind, is a great undertaking for his years. It puts me in mind of a saying of Martin Luther's, 'That he would go and do his Master's work if every tile on the houses were a devil.' Nothing but the power of divine grace and a love for the truth can sustain a man under such circumstances." Pray for Bro. Freeman that his strength fail not.

—The Missionary Visitor for June, issued at the United Brethren Publishing House, Dayton, O., has brief and interesting sketches of the four bishops of that church, Glossbrenner, Edwards, Weaver and Dickson, with good portraits of each.

—The report of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows of Pennsylvania is not bad reading: Members at last report, 96,844; addition to the roll, 8,101; loss in membership, 10,053, of which 7,474 were from suspensions; present membership 94,892; loss 1,952. The pressure of the times is the reason given for this loss of nearly 2,000 members. No doubt it is a pressure of the times—pressnre of conscience and good sense. Such pressure will annihilate all the lodges in time.

—E. J. Chalfant of York, Pa., writes that a discussion on secret societies has been going on lately in the columns of the Baltimore American between "Veritas" a Freemason and "More Light" a Christian. From the representation the lodge champion is not getting on well in the argument. Welcome "More Light."

—The Knight Templar parade on last Thursday at Philadelphia is represented to be one of the largest demonstrations ever made by the order. The dispatches make the number in the procession ten thousand, which may be reduced considerably to allow for the Masonic jurisdiction of the press. One hundred and twenty-five commanderies were to take part; their whole membership will probably fall short of ten thousand. A letter from York, Pa., tells us that only thirty of the one hundred members of the commandery there were going to Philadelphia, and about the same proportion will probably hold good throughout. Five or six thousand is probably a more correct estimate of the number on parade. Gov. Hartranft prostituted his high office by parading as aid of the "Grand Captain General" of the order. Were the blasphemous ceremonies passed through by every member made as public as the parade, the haughty plumes of these pseudo-Knights would droop, and they would be hooted from the streets.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Northern Provincial Synod of the Moravian church is in session at Nazereth, Pa., the first time in that place for 119 years. The Moderator, Bishop de Schweinitz, is a lineal descendant of Count Zinzendorf, founder of the new organization early in the last century. He cordially and gracefully welcomed Dr. Chickering as a delegate from the still older body of American Christians.

—The American Sunday School Union reports for the year ending Mar. 1, 1876, 1,236 new schools established, 6,074 teachers newly enlisted, and 46,774 scholars gathered into the schools. Its missionaries have visited 12,957 families.

—Buddhism is said to be rapidly declining in Japan. In a single district or ken seventy-one temples have since 1873 been converted into dwelling houses or used for other secular purposes. During the last six years upwards of 600 temples have thus been diverted from their original object.

—A Presbyterian missionary at Oroomiah, Persia, says a remarkable change is taking place among the Mussulmans, who show an anxiety to converse with any Christian they can find. Many go to Deacon Pera, at the Bible Bazar, for Christian instruction, sometimes as many as eighteen or twenty at once. They also attend the public meetings of the missionaries.

—The parliamentary returns obtained by Mr. Osborne Morgan show that in 7,369 parishes of England, which have an aggregate population of 20,503,870 persons, there are 11,267 places of worship connected with the church of England, and 14,000 Nonconformist chapels. In these parishes there are 9,989 Anglican church-yards, 2,833 Dissenting burial grounds, and 539 public cemeteries. Returns were not received from 2,339 parishes, chiefly small ones. In Wales a report was given by 613 parishes, which have an aggregate population of 1 038,829 persons; in these there are 819 Anglican churches with 788 graveyards attached; 1,846 Nonconformist chapels with 663 burial places attached, and 25 public cemeteries.

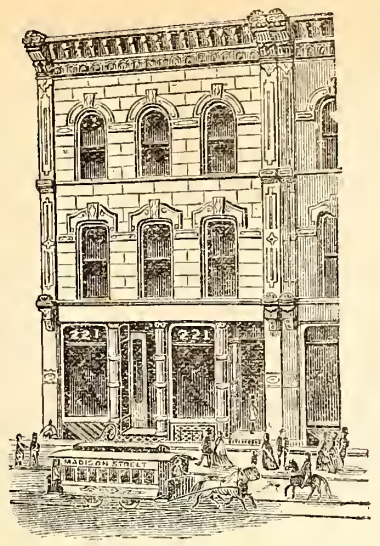
—The fearful effects of false religious forms are having their effect in Italy where the Romish church and more lately the lodge has had great power. It is said that infidelity and atheism are rapidly spreading among all classes. At a late trial in Rome, says the Free Church Record, the judges were greatly embarassed by witness after witness refusing to be sworn on the Gospel because they were freethinkers. To meet the difficulty thus raised, the prime minister has introduced a bill altering the form of the oath.

—The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church met in the Second church, Rev. J. B. Dales, pastor, Philadelphia, May 24th. Rev. James Brown, D. D., of Keokuk, Iowa, was chosen moderator. The report of the Permanent Committee on Narrative and State of Religion states that there is an addition of 21 licentiates, and 25 have been ordained. There have been 36 releases of pastoral relations by act of Presbytery, and one by death, and 59 installations. In the Presbytery of Egypt 8 young Copts were licensed to preach the Gospel. One Presbytery, Colorado, has been organized, marking the growth of the church in the Home Mission field, and 19 new congregations have been organized in various States and Territories, including one among the Warm Spring Indians of Oregon. About 7,000 persons are employed as officers and teachers in the Sabbath-schools, and 60,000 scholars all more or less regularly in attendance. In several congregations in the Delaware Presbytery a more than usual number of conversions is reported. The returns show almost 4,000 accessions by profession and nearly 500 adult baptisms Daniel Hill, secretary of the Friends Peace Association was present and made an address on the peace cause.

News of the Week.

City.

The Grand Jury has unearthed a desperate gang of swindlers in connection with the county poorhouse and insane asylum, by which the inmates were half-starved and half-clothed, and tens of thousands of dollars pocketed by the ring. Some of the county commissioners are likely to get into the penitentiary on account of it.——The quarrel over the city government will be decided by the courts this week. ——A large Bristow club has been formed here.



Congress.

After a long debate the Senate has decided in favor of jurisdiction in the Belknap impeachment case, and when the counsel get through their delays will proceed to the trial.——The House Judiciary Committee have got out some bad testimony against Blaine, and on demancing of him some private letters he refused on advice of his counsel. The matter has greatly damaged if not ruined his chances for nomination at Cincinnati.

Foreign.

Some 600 houses in one of the suburbs of Quebec were destroyed by fire May 29th. The houses were generally of the poorer classes, and the loss of $800,000 falls heavily upon them.—— Last week the situation in Turkey was materially changed by the dethronement of the Sultan Abdul-Aziz. This was effected neither by popular revolution nor by palace intrigue, but by the revolution of the Ministers. Matters were brought to extremity by the Sultan's absolute refusal to advance money from his private purse to the exhausted War Treasury, whereupon Sheik Ul Islam, in the presence of all the Ministers, informed the Sultan that the people were dissatisfied with his government, and he was therefore deposed. Directly afterwards the Sultan and his mother were forcibly conducted to the Topkapay palace. On Sunday the ex-Sultan committed suicide by opening his veins with a pair of scissors. The new ruler Murad Effendi makes fair promises, but is firm against outside intervention.

The next annual meeting of the corporate body will be held at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, June 20th, 1876.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

CENTENNIAL CHRISTIAN HOMES.—The great number of visitors in Philadelphia during the Centennial Exhibition, necessitates the opening of private homes for board and lodging. Many Christian families, who are unwilling to open their doors to a promiscuous public, have arranged a plan by which they give admission to Christians and their friends.

In order to have this select class the price of board is generally much lower than prevails by other arrangements, varying from $5 to $14 a week, and from $1 to $2.50 per day. Each family fixes its own price, and receives its pay direct from its guest. Those wishing to secure places under this arrangement will please write as long beforehand as possible to the Office for Centennial Christian Homes, Care of Rev. Edwin M. Long, S. E. cor. 12th and Berks Sts., Phila. Pa.

The Home Circle.

One Deed of Good.

If I might do one deed of good,
One little deed before I die,
Or think one noble thought that should Hereafter not forgotten be, would not murmur, though I must
Be lost in death's unnumbered dust.

The filmy wing that wafts the seed
Upon the careless winds to earth,
Of its short life has only meed
To find the germ fit place for birth;
For one swift moment of delight
It whirls, then withers out of sight.
—Spectator.

Covetousness.

For twenty years past a wretched-looking old woman has been sitting almost daily at the corners of the avenues and streets in Philadelphia, where wealth and fashion walk, playing a "hurdy-gurdy," and soliciting alms. Some time since she was taken very ill and died. She had received the pity and the small bits of currency from many people—for she always looked very, very poor and needy; and at times appeared to be hungry or ill. She had several children, who were early made to work, and early learned to care for themselves. The rector of one of our churches took a kindly interest in them, and to him the history and character, and the facts concerning the death of this old woman became known.

It appears that through these many years this strange character had been very mercenary, and had often denied herself the necessaries of life. She grew to be hard and cold to herself and to everybody else. She possessed, besides the little musical instrument, a hard cushion, black with age and dirt. This cushion was her seat on the flags by day, and her pillow in her wretched abode by night. She seemed to become as much attached to it as though it had been a thing of life, and dear to her by the ties of blood. It was not thought to be strange, therefore, when, a short time before her death, she requested her children to place the cushion in the coffin for a pillow, when her body was being made ready for the grave. The old woman died, and the children essayed to execute their mother's dying request. It was found impossible, however, to do so, after repeated efforts, without ripping the cushion and placing it in another way. Upon cutting it open some bank bills dropped out and, upon searching, this dirty old cushion was found to contain, in bank notes and certificates, nearly fourteen thousand dollars! She had starved herself, and braved snow, rain and cold, had denied herself everything but the absolute necessaries of life, to hoard this money; and at last hoped that it might be buried with her body, and with her body moulder into dust. It is certainly one of the most remarkable instances of the love of money, and of "the ruling passion strong in death."

It is not likely many of us will become misers. What most desire is to grow rich, spend like princes, and have persons know we are rich and honor us therefor. If we believe the words of Christ, let us beware. As wealth increases, give; as it increases more, give more.—Southern Churchman.

Hints to Young Christians.

Don't be afraid to "show your colors." A cowardly Christian is a misnomer. Shrink from no declaration, from no duty that Christ desires of you. The timid, vacillating course is the hardest and most barren. The brave, outspoken, faithful life is the happiest and most effective.

There are many things you do not understand as yet. But let no doubts or uncertainties prevent you from acting on what you do know. There are some spiritual facts clear enough, plenty of Christian duties plain enough to you, act immediately on these. Do faithfully all you know you ought to do, and the larger knowledge will follow in due time.

Use earnestly every means that will enlarge and strengthen your Christian life. Study the Bible. Pray without ceasing.

Make your life beautiful in the sight of men, and show them the sweetness and power of Christianity. Be conscientious in little things. Let the Master's spirit shine through every hour of your life. In school, in shop, in field, in society, the young Christian ought to be the most faithful, the most courteous, the most generous and kind, the noblest of any person there.

Follow Christ. Seek to reproduce His traits in your life. Do always as you would believe He would do if He were in your place; so you will have a growing, joyful, successful Christian career.—Selected.

Decision and Procrastination.

A young lady, who had had several religious talks with her pastor, intended coming before the church for admission. Two days before the appointed time she came to the minister to say that she had had an invitation to go to Saratoga on the day appointed for her to unite with the church, and it would be a great disappointment for her not to go, as she had never been to Saratoga. Would it do for her to defer her appointment with the church? Her pastor told her to make it a matter of prayer and if, when the time came, she could go to Saratoga without any scruples, to go on, but if conscience said, Meet your engagement with the Lord, be sure and heed its voice for it would certainly be the voice of unerring wisdom. She came at the appointed time to the church, and meeting her pastor with a smile, said, "I am here, and I find that the self-denial I have had to exert is far more joyous than a trip to Saratoga could possibly be." Ten years have now passed and this lady has proved an earnest, active, working Christian. Who can say this would have been the result, had she not at that time fulfilled her engagement with the Lord?

In painful contrast is the following: A young lady having stood up in the company with some others, for the prayers of God's people, went home fully resolved to seek and follow the Lord. She found an invitation to a dance awaiting her. She concluded to go this once and then bid farewell to these worldly pleasures. She did so, and now though ten years have passed she has had no serious thoughts or any desire to seek the way of salvation.

Was not this clearly the result of her procrastination? Oh, dear young friends, take warning and grieve not the Spirit of God by delay.—Am. Messenger.

The Passions that Induce Disease.

The passions which act most severely on the physical life are anger, fear, hatred, and grief. The other passions are comparatively innocuous. What is called the passion of love is not injurious until it lapses into grief and anxiety; on the contrary, it sustains the physical power. What is called ambition is of itself harmless; for ambition, when it exists purely, is a nobility lifting its owner entirely from himself into the exalted service of mankind. It injures, when it is debased by its meaner ally, pride; or when stimulating a man to too strenuous efforts after some great object, it leads him to the performance of excessive mental or physical labor and to the consequences that follow such effort.

The passion called avarice, according to my experience, tends rather to the preservation of the body than to its deterioration. The avaricious man, who seems to the luxurious world, to be debarring himself of all the pleasures of the world, and even to be exposing himself to the pangs of poverty, is generally placing himself in the precise conditions favorable to a long and healthy existence. By his economy, he is saving himself from all the worry incident to penury; by his caution he is screening himself from all the risks incident to speculation or the attempt to amass wealth by hazardous means; by his regularity of hours and perfect appropriation of the sunlight, in preference to artificial illumination, he rests and works in periods that precisely accord with the periodicity of nature; by his abstemiousness in living he takes just enough to live, which is precisely the right thing to do according to the rigid natural law. Thus, in almost every particular, he goes on his way freer than other men from the external causes of all the induced diseases, and better protected than most men from the worst consequences of those diseases which spring from causes that are uncontrollable.—Popular Science Monthly.

Money One Hundred Years Ago.

Two hundred years ago, students at Harvard College paid their tuition with live-stock and provisions. The currency of the Pilgrims was the first issue of paper money in this country. During the war of Queen Anne a paper currency was established, known as Queen Anne's war currency, which soon became worthless. In 1755, Virginia issued a paper currency, previous to which the clergy were paid in tobacco. In 1715, John Colman established a bank in Massachusetts, with land for capital, and began the issue of loans. Other colonies followed, and the amount of loans by the colonies finally reached to millions, which the mother country paid off at reduced rates to save the credit of the colonies. In 1775 Congress issued paper money to the amount of $300,000, to be redeemed in coin in three years. The colonies or States also issued paper money, and soon the whole volume of State and National currency amounted to $12,000,000. This money was taken without much question at first, and those who refused it were stigmatized as unpatriotic; but in the following year it began to decline, and in 1780 it was worth almost nothing. A barbar-shop in Philadelphia was plastered all over with Continental money, and dogs were tarred, stuck over with the same shin-plasters and let out to run the streets for the public amusement. To Robert Morris is due the salvation of the Revolutionary army. He lent his private fortune and credit to the government, and when all his money was gone and his credit had been liberally used, Washington said he must raise more money to carry out a war measure, the perfection of which only waited for the money. Morris, therefore, issued his own notes for $1,400,000. Washington gained the battle of Yorktown, and Cornwallis surrendered. Every one of these Morris notes were subsequently redeemed. In 1782 the Bank of North America was established at Philadelphia, with a capital of $400,000. This was the first bank of the National Government. The date of the first silver coinage was 1794, and of the first gold coinage 1794.—Selected.

The True Wife.

What do you think the beautiful word "wife" comes from? It is the great word in which the English and Latin languages conquered the French and Greek. I hope the French will some day get a word for it, instead of that dreadful word "femme."

But what do you think it comes from? The great use of Saxon words is that they do mean something. Wife means "Weaver." You must either be house-wives or house-moths; remember that. In the deep sense, you must either weave men's fortunes and embroider them, or feed upon and bring them to decay.

Wherever a true wife comes, home is always around her. The stars only may be over her head; the glow-worm in the night-cold grass may be the only fire at her foot; but home is wherever she is, and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than houses ceiled with cedar, or painted with vermilion, shedding its quiet light far for those who else were homeless. This, then, I believe to be the woman's true place and power.—Ruskin.

Sin is to be overcome, not so much by maintaining a direct opposite principle. Would you kill the weeds in your garden, plant it with good seed; if the ground be well occupied there will be less need of the labor of the hoe. If a man wished to quench fire, he might fight it with his hands till he was burnt to death; the only way is to apply an opposition element.—Andrew Fuller.

Children's Corner.

Eating Bread and Milk.

The daintiest, prettiest picture
'Twas ever my lot to see,
Was one of four little children,
On a door-stone vis-a-vis;
With eyes as bright as diamonds
And hair as soft as silk,
Out of an old-fashioned porringer
Eating bread and milk.

In the back-ground, near the door,
Sit the father and the mother;
And when the langh goes ronnd
They glance at one another.
What need is there for speech?
The eye so much hath said,
As they watch the little children
Eating milk and bread.

The household pet, old Bonnce,
Is sleeping in the clover,
And in his drcams again
The hunt he's living over;
When'cr the spoons click on the dish
He lifts his shaggy head,
And seems to say, "I envy you
Your sweet new milk and bread."

Through the trees, the low sun-shadows
Were sifting here and there,
Lighting up each winsome face,
With a beauty rare;
While the tired birds come trooping
To leaf-cots over-head,
Softly twittering good-night
To the girls with milk and bread.

What artist hand can catch
The smile-light, coming, going?
Or tint the restless tresses
On the dimpled shoulders flowing?
Or give the arching lip
So fine a shade of red,
As it takes a sip of milk,
And then a bite of bread?

Oh, happy little dreamers
Upon that door-stone step—
No shade of care has crossed
Their sunny paths as yet.
Oh, would their lives might ever be
So free from care and dread
As now, while twilight gathers,
Eating milk and bread.

Health better than Wealth.

Little Martin was a poor boy who had no father nor mother. He earned his bread by going on errands. One day on his way home, he sat down to rest, and to eat his piece of dry bread, near the door of an inn. As he sat there a fine carriage drove up, and the master of the inn came out to serve two gentlemen who were in it. One of them was very young—not much older than Martin—and Martin thought to himself that he should like to be in his place. When he looked at his own crust of bread and his worn clothes, and then at their fine things, he could not help saying aloud:

"Oh dear, I wish I had that young gentleman's grand coach. I wish I could change places with him."

The other gentleman, who was the boy's tutor, heard this and told it to his pupil, who made signs to Martin to come to him.

"So, little boy," said he, "you would like to change places with me would you?"

"I beg pardon, sir," said Martin, "I did not mean any harm by what I said."

"I am not angry," said the young gentleman; "I only wish to know if you are willing to change places with me."

"Oh, now you are joking," said Martin; "no one would wish to change places with me, and walk so many miles each day, and have nothing to eat but a dry crust."

"Well," said the young man, "I will give you all I have, if you will give me all that you have, and that I have not."

Martin did not know what to say; but the tutor told him to speak freely.

"Oh, yes," said Martin then; "I will change places with you"

But when the young gentleman stepped out, Martin saw that he was very lame. His legs were bent so that he had to walk with crutches. His face was pale and thin too, like that of one who is often ill. Martin then began to think that health was better than a fine carriage.

"Will you change places with me now?" asked the youth. "I will give you all that I have to be strong like you."

But Martin said, "Oh no; not for the world."

"I would gladly be poor," said the young man, "if I could run like you; but as it is God's will that I should be lame, I try to be happy and thankful as I am."—Church and State.

The Difference.

"Willie, why were you gone so long for water?" asked the teacher of a little boy.

"We spilled it, and had to go back and fill the bucket again," was the prompt reply; but the bright, noble face was a shade less bright, less noble than usual, and the eyes dropped beneath the teacher's gaze.

The teacher crossed the room and stood by another, who had been Willie's companion.

"Freddy, were you not gone for the water longer than was necessary?"

For an instant Freddy's eyes were fixed on the floor, and his face wore a troubled look. But it was only for an instant—he looked frankly up to his teacher's face.

"Yes, ma'am," he bravely answered; "we met little Harry Braden and stopped to play with him, and then we spilled the water and had to go back."

Little friends, what was the difference between these two boys? Neither of them told anything that was not strictly true. Which one of them do you think the teacher trusted more fully after that? And which was the happier of the two?

He Cares for You.

"Casting all your care upon Him; for he careth for you."—1 Pet. v:7.

Luther very strikingly says: "He who knows by experience the meaning of this Scripture, hath found a safe refuge. We might well learn a lesson from the birds which fly over our heads, for they sleep all night in their nests without any care, arise joyfully in the morning, perch on a tree, sing and praise God, seek their food and find it; they act as if they knew One cares for them whom we call our Father in heaven. Why cannot we do the same,—we, who can sow fields and reap them, plant trees and gather fruit, and provide for our need? Yet we cannot cast our care."

Luther is right. The little birds seem to have made more experience in the wisdom of this world than we have; they put thousands of Christians to shame. Whilst we sleep, God makes the seed to grow, and fills the ear as full of corn as he chooses. He provides for us as he does for all his creatures; he lays his gentle hand on us, and satisfies the desire of every living thing. It is true he gives us nothing without labor, but he gives the power of labor, so that all comes from his goodness and mercy; therefore we should not care, but cast all our care upon him.

Let us say, in all our need, we will trust our loving God; he is our Creator and we are his creatures; he has more provision reserved for us than we can want or enjoy; let us praise, serve and trust him who never permits a little bird to want; he has the heart of a father and will never leave us. Say with Augustine, "As God cared for me before I was, how much more will he care for me now I am what he would have me to be." Say with Melancthon, "Has care driven me to prayer? so will I drive away care with prayer;" and will note Luther's counsel: "He that cannot trust his body with God, cannot trust his soul with him." Work and pray, but care not.

What is a Boy Good For?

I saw in a newspaper a child's answer to this question: "They make men out of such as I!" It is really the best answer that can be made to the question. For, in a few short years, the present farmers, mechanics, merchants doctors, lawyers and ministers, will be laid away in the graves that are waiting for them, and their important places will be filled by those who are boys and young men to-day. And boys seem to realize this fact themselves. They are eager for the knowledge that men have; they love dearly to try their hands at men's work. They are not satisfied with the spreading fork—they wish to rake and mow and pitch. They are not contented with opening and shutting and cleaning the store, they want to trade. They will not stop with being driven, for they long to drive.

I love to see the bright face of a courageous boy, who is filling his mind and his heart with the knowledge that will fit him for the place of a man. I delight in the fearless energy of the young man who is ready to undergo hardships and self-denial in order to succeed, even according to his own crude conception of success; and I would not if I could, take from this youth a single one of his bright hopes. It is no doubt conducive to healthy growth to hold back a little, to keep from the child weighty care and anxiety. The bright sky, the gentle breezes, the glad songs of the birds belong to his life. Long faces, gloomy looks, and cross words can be omitted much oftener than some of us seem to think. And yet it is important, my boy, it is vital to a proper manhood, that you have a proper boyhood and youth.

How can you have a proper boyhood and youth? The answer is short and simple; they are the Heavenly Father's words: "My son, give me thy heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways." —Advance.

—The origin of the jury system has been popularly ascribed to Alfred the Great; but it really existed long before his time. During the Saxon Heptarchy, mention is made of six Welch and six Anglo-Saxon freemen being appointed to try cases of contested property, and being made responsible, with their estates, for false verdicts. It probably was one of the primitive institutions of the Germanic race.

Home and Health Hints.

Setting Milk.

To say how, or in what kind of pan to set milk, would perhaps be assuming too much, but I will say, without hesitation, that in my opinion, the poorest and most laborious way to set milk is in the six-quart pans so commonly used. In our dairy we use the "Empire State" pan, and have never seen any other kind for which we would be willing to exchange. Under ordinary circumstances thirty-six hours is long enough for the milk to stand before skimming; in cold weather it may be well to let it remain twelve hours longer. It is not advisable to let cream remain on milk too long, exposed to the air, simply to increase the quantity at the expense of the quality of the butter. There should be considerable milk skimmed with thick cream for churning. If you churn very thick, stiff cream, the butter will have a dull, oily appearance, while, on the other hand, if you have considerable milk with it, it will have a clean, bright look. When cream is kept from one skimming to another, add a little salt each time, and it should be well stirred as often as new is added. It should not be kept too long before churning, never longer than a week (four or five days is better); at any rate never after acidity developes itself. Deep tin pails are preferable for cream, as they are convenient for tempering it for churning. If the cream is too cold, it is easily brought to the right temperature by setting the pail in hot water, stirring continually, until the thermometer indicates 60 degrees, or if it is too warm put the pail in ice water, and cool it to 56 or 58 degrees, according to the weather.—Mrs. Ellsworth's Prize Essay.

An excellent article for offensive breath, when caused by decaying teeth, is prepared by mixing one ounce of chlorinated soda with twelve ounces of water. The mouth should be rinsed with the preparation two or three times a day, but do not swallow it. The most certain remedy is to remove the bad teeth, as they will taint the breath no matter what means are adopted to prevent it.

Watering Plants in Summer.

Plants growing in the open ground and fully exposed to the sun are frequently ruined by the very means taken to save—by watering in hot, dry weather. Generally moisture soon evaporates, leaving the soil dry and hard—almost impervious to air as well as to the dews. But this is not the only nor the greatest evil which results from the ordinary slight waterings which plants get. The temporary superficial moisture causes the roots to seek the surface, where, in the intervals between the waterings, the heat and drouth destroy them, and the plants become stunted or die outright. The remedy lies in a more thorough irrigation and in a different mode of applying the water. In the case of young and large herbaceous plants, the best way is to carefully scrape away the soil around them to the depth of an inch or two, forming a shallow basin into which sufficient water should be poured to moisten well in the ground as deeply and as widely as the roots extend. When the water has soaked in, the dry earth should be returned, which will prevent a speedy evaporation. Among small plants, which cannot be treated in this way, make holes with an iron rod or a sharpened stake several inches in depth, and fill them with water, which will thus reach the deepest roots. —Rural Cor.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The Relation and Duty of the Church and her Members toward them.

BY REV. J. G. CARSON, D. D.

Continued.

(3.) Their benevolence is limited to their own members. It not only begins but it ends at home. The difference between it and true Christian benevolence may be seen in the parable of the good Samaritan. While the priest and the Levite who found the man that had fallen among thieves, passed by on the other side, because he did not belong to their order, the good Samaritan stopped to ask no questions, but recognizing a brother's claim on his sympathy in the distress of a stranger or even an enemy, "he bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, put him on his own beast, carried him to an inn and there took care of him." And the injunction with which our Lord closes the parable, "Go thou and do likewise," stands on record as a withering rebuke to that narrow-minded selfishness which stops to ask, "who is my neighbor," and makes the world-wide difference between true Christian beneficence and that charity falsely called, which is confined to a particular order or caste.

Even this limitation, however, would not be so blameworthy if the doors of these orders were, like those of the church, opened wide for the admission of all classes. But it is not so. Most of them exclude women, minors, the aged, the poor, lame, halt and blind, those who are not able to pay their dues, or have no visible means of support, the very classes that are likely to become objects of charity; and when those who are members cease to pay their dues, even though unable to do so, they forfeit their claim on the assistance of the order at the very time when they most need it. Thus their boasted benevolence limited as it is to their own members dwindles down into a simple re-payment of what has already been paid for, like any other insurance policy, and that at a very dear rate of premium. An examination of their own reports will show, that while the larger proportion of the vast incomes of some of these orders is expended in mere pomp and show, it is a comparatively trifling amount that goes to the relief of the needy and suffering. The amount expended by one of the smaller branches of the church in this land for really benevolent objects far exceeds that of the strongest and wealthiest of these orders. So that the assertion that the benevolence of these orders excels that of the church is a false and a base slander.

Let it be remembered also that whatever is done by the members of these societies, even Christian members, redounds to the credit of the order and not to Christ. While the church of God teaches as the law of her Head, the duty of doing good to all men as we have opportunity, and actually exercises through membership all the benevolence worthy of the name that aims to bless and elevate suffering humanity, yet all the honor of it is cheerfully ascribed to Chirst, and not to any man or organization. Our Lord said to his disciples, "When thou doest alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets that they may be seen of men: Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward." This is just what these societies do, and doubtless this is one reason why we hear so much more of their benevolence just because the end and object of it is self-glorification. How can a Christian consistently lend his countenace and name to that which detracts from the glory of his Master, and seeks the praise of men and not of God.

[c]. Moreover, in the day of final reckoning only those good deeds that are done in the name of Christ and for his sake will be regarded as worthy of mention. And measured by this standard, love to Christ and to our fellow men for his sake, all the boasted charity of these orders will be cast out as spurious and worthless, being nothing more than a species of selfishness: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not to me." Thus the whole influence of these associations, as combinations for selfish purposes, in their selfish morality, and selfish benevolence, serves to foster and strengthen this principle of evil in the individual and in society and so instead of assisting the church it opposes an ever increasing barrier to the influence of Christianity through the church and upon the world at large. For this reason then Christians should have no fellowship with them.

4th. Fellowship with these societies is inconsistent with that separation from the world which is essential to the Christian character. This is of itself sufficient and conclusive reason why Christians ought not to have connection with. That these societies belong to the world will hardly be disputed. They cannot claim, they will hardly pretend to be of Divine institution; their origin is in the world; the principles of their organization are of the world; their morality and benevolence are worldly; their aims and ends are worldly and selfish, and their membership is largely, and we may safely say predominantly, from the world, composed of all sorts, men of all religions and of no religion a all; Jews, Mohammedans, pagans, infidels, ungodly and wicked men in equally good standing with Christians or ministers of the Gospel. Now there is nothing more plainly revealed in the word of God than this, that the world which lieth in the wicked one is the great enemy of Christ, and that whosoever is the friend of the world is the enemy of God. There is no duty more frequently insisted on in the Bible than that of Christians maintaining a complete and universal separation from the world. In the language of Mr. Moody, "With the Bible open before me I can not see what right any child of God has to go and yoke himself with unbelievers in business or in secret societies, or in any other society. If you say it is to do good, you can do more good without them than you can possibly do by identifying yourself with them; Abraham had more influence over Sodom away up in Hebron than Lot had there in Sodom." This is strong language, but is it not true? The people of Israel were expressly forbidden to make covenants of peace and friendship, or enter into any alliance whether by marriage with the surrounding nations, and nothing was a more fruitful source of corruption and consequent calamity to that nation than the neglect or disregard of this prohibition. The same principle applies to the church of God to day. The command, Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers has reference not merely, nor even principally to the marriage relation. But from the reasons assigned it is evident that the injunction applies with special force to just such associations as these fraternities which bring together in the closest bonds of fellowship, friendship and even brotherhood, Christian and infidel, believer and unbeliever, the friends and enemies of Christ: "For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols; for ye are the temple of the living God." Language could not more strongly impress the relation and duty of the church and its members towards these secret societies. While we are not prohibited from all intercourse with men of the world in the affairs of business, or in those relations of civil society, in which God has placed us, yet neither with individuals nor associations are we at liberty to form covenants of friendship or brotherhood. The attitude of the church to the world is that of constant, uncompromising hostility, and the obligation on the church and its members to-day is just as strict and imperative as ever to maintain a complete and entire separation from it, both in order to preserve their freedom from its corrupting influences and to maintain a testimony against its evils. The voice of Christ which is the voice of duty and the voice of wisdom, cries aloud to every Christian, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them;" and only by obeying this voice by the way of requiring her members to abstain from all connection with these societies, can the church of Christ "keep herself unspotted from the world," avoid compromise with its evils, and be free from its corruping influences and its final condemnation.

Thus I have presented considerations which apply to all these associations, from the very principles of their organization, the force of which every Christian heart will feel and appreciate—and which to every candid mind must appear conclusive: "That these associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, are in their very nature inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with them." I have dwelt thus long on this part of the subject because it occupies ground which I humbly conceive has not hitherto received the consideration which its importance demands, and because the considerations presented can be understood and appreciated as well by those outside as by those inside of these orders.

Their Secrecy.

5th. Another reason why these associations are inconsistent with the genius of Christianity is because the secrecy which they affect, and to which they bind their members by promise or oath, is unnecessary and so unwarrantable, dangerous, and ensnaring to the conscience, and therefore utterly opposed to that openness and publicity which Christ enjoines on his disciples both by example and precept. "I ever spoke openly in the synagogues and in secret have I said nothing." "Ye are the light of the world." "Let your light so shine before men," etc.

1. This secrecy is unnecessary for any good and lawful purpose. Let us carefully observe what secrecy is condemned and when. It is not denied that individuals, families and even societies may have secrets which they are not bound to disclose but these are private or personal affairs with which the public has no concern. These, however, are not private but public associations, claiming public patronage and approval, extending their influence through all the ramifications of the community in which they exist, whether it be a college or society at large; and yet secrecy instead of being the exception is the rule; it is not an incidental but an essential element of their organization.

Nor do we deny that even public bodies, legislative or judicial, whether in church or state, may have private or secret meetings, the proceedings of which it is necessary and therefore lawful and right for good and sufficient reasons to keep secret. But this is a very different thing from being organized on the principle of secrecy and no more justifies the charge of being secret societies than does the fact, that many of the meetings and proceedings of these associations are public frees them from that charge. We affirm that the secrecy which so universally characterizes these orders is not necessary for any good or lawful purpose where they have the protection of law.

We admit that when the prosecution of that which is good and right exposes to oppression and persecution and there is no protection from the law, then it may be necessary and proper to resort to secrecy for self-protection, as did the primitive Christians, the Covenanters of Scotland, and loyal leagues at the South during the rebellion. But when, as is the case at least in this country now, and as was true in the North during the war, every one can claim and enjoy the protection of law in the prosecution and accomplishment of every good and worthy object, there is absolutely no necessity for secrecy and it is therefore wrong. Truth and right under a free government never fear or need fear or shun the light; only that which is conscious of wrong doing seeks to hide itself in darkness. These individuals and societies which have objects in view that are condemned by law or public sentiment, such as the Ku Klux Klan, the Jesuits, and others, are indeed under the necessity of resorting to secrecy. "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved; but he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." So that the very resort to secrecy is in itself suspicious, and presumptive evidence of something wrong which will not bear the light. What would be thought of a church or congregation of Christians organized on this principle? Would it not deservedly meet with universal suspicion and reprobation? Even when necessary such secrecy is undesirable and fraught with many evils. We know how the secret meetings of the early Christians exposed them to undeserved, yet unavoidable obloquy and reproach, as being guilty of the most scandalous and horrible practices; and when the necessity no longer existed how promptly and joyfully they abandoned their secrecy and held their meetings in open day! An imperative necessity alone will justify such secrecy and only during the time such necessity exists. So that the plea that it is necessary to guard against imposition will not avail, seeing such necessity is not imperative, that is, there are other means of guarding against imposition which individuals and societies have employed and do employ with reasonable success without resorting to secrecy. Being therefore unnecessary for any good or lawful purpose:

2. It is unwarrantable for any one and especially for Christians. Christ has said: "Ye are the light of the world: No man lighted a candle and putteth it under a bushel or under a bed but on a candlestick and it giveth light to all that are in the house.

Now there are but two alternatives conceivable, either those things that are kept secret are good and valuable, important to be known, or they are wrong and sinful, or at best trifling and unimportant. In either case secrecy is unwarrantable. If they are wrong, if it be "a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret," as was the case with the secret societies in the Apostles' day, and as no doubt is the case with some of them in our own day, such as their indecent and disgusting ceremonies of initiation and also many "hidden things of darkness," which the great day alone will reveal, then there can be no question as to the Christian's duty not only to have no "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," but rather reprove them by exposing them to the light as many good men have done and are doing, and that too, even though they had promised or sworn to keep them secret. In reference to these the Christian should say: "Oh, my soul come not thou unto their secret; unto their assembly mine honor be not thou united." Even when the secrets are harmless and trifling, while at the same time they pretend to introduce the initiated to the knowledge of great and profound mysteries and valuable and important truths, the obligation of secrecy is unwarrantable for a Christian because it makes him a party to a stupendous fraud, and being deceived himself becomes the occasion and means of deceiving and misleading others.

But even on the most charitable supposition, viz.: that these secrets are what some pretend, important and valuable, worth all the money paid for them, still the Christian may not promise to keep secrets which may be of benefit and advantage to his fellow men, in the face of the express command of the Master: "What I tell you in darkness that speak ye in light, and what ye hear in the ear that preach ye on the housetops." "Let your light so shine before men," &c. No man or set of men, much less a Christian, has a right to monopolize for their own benefit anything the knowledge of which would be of advantage to their fellow men. Even in reference to inventions in the useful arts while the inventor has a right to a reasonable compensation for the fruit of his inventive genius, yet he has no right to confine the benefits to himself, nor after such reasonable compensation to deprive the public of the advantage of its knowledge by locking it up in a secret circle or combination. What would be thought of a teacher of science who should pledge all his scholars to secrecy as to the discoveries he had made and communicated to them? Indeed this is the great difference the heathen and Christian civilization, as Wendell Phillips has well remarked in his lecture on the "Lost Arts." While among ancient heathen nations all knowledge or learning in religion, science and the arts, was confined by strict secrecy to select circles, or classes, and so became lost to the world, when their families or classes became extinct, it is the glory of our Christian civilization that what is known to any individual becomes common property to all, and cannot be lost to the world; and what has produced this difference? Simply the teaching of the Author of Christianity, obliging his disciples to be light-bearers to the world, shining as lights in the world, dispensing to all whatever good or blessing they have received. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

On any supposition, therefore, secrecy in a society which claims and deserves the patronage and encouragement of Christians is unwarrantable, and so inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity. But further—

(3) Such secrecy is dangerous. While it is unnecessary and unwarrantable for any good purpose and those whose designs are open and fair will not resort to it, yet we know that those whose designs are sinister and selfish, and who are unscrupulous in the use of means for carrying them out, do find it necessary to cover them up with the veil of secrecy. And this gives them a great advantage not only over the public at large, but also over the honest and unsuspecting members of the society or association to which they belong. On this account it is that political parties can be preserved from becoming corrupt and mighty engines for evil in the hands of scheming demagogues only by subjecting them and their actions to the fullest and most open scrutiny by the public press. On this account it was that the society called Jesuits became so dangerous wherever it was allowed to exist and has been repeatedly suppressed in several countries of Europe, because it became dangerous to the interest of society and the state. Even the church of God if it should adopt the principle of secrecy would undoubtedly in a few years become corrupt and subject to the control of unscrupulous and designing men who could wield the influence of the whole body for the accomplishment of personal, selfish ends. As long as human nature remains as it is, any society, it matters not how good and laudable its object, nor how upright and sincere the intentions of its founders, if organized on the principle of secrecy, will necessarily fall into the hands and under the control of evil-minded, selfish men, who contrive, sooner or later, to obtain the monopoly of the highest offices and places of honor and power and so are able to make use of the resources of the whole order for the accomplishment of their own selfish aims. This might be illustrated by the history of secret order from the Jesuits down to the latest, and in some respects, most dangerous, the grange. The only security of liberty in the state, of truth and righteousness in the church, the only protection in any society which the many have against the tyranny, the dishonesty and oppression of the few, is by holding those entrusted with official power and influence to the strictest responsibility requiring them to give frequent reports of themselves and their conduct, to the many. But this cannot be done in these secret orders, where the inevitable tendency is to contract the widest circle into an ever-narrowing serpentine coil till it reaches the innermost, central ring or clique, called the highest degree, which dominates all others and is itself accountable to none. The only wonder is that the press of our day, which is so jealous or sensitive to the dangers arising from secret rings or combinations in church or state is so indifferent to the threatening aspect of this growing and deepening cloud of secretism, which at first no larger than a man's hand, now darkens the whole political and moral heavens with its shadow. To us it seems like the fascination of some spell, which, like that of slavery, holds both church and state enchained, until the cloud bursts, as that did in this country, in storm and tempest on our heads. How is it possible that the ministers and members of the church of Christ, who are set as watchmen to give the alarm can without great guilt spare to cry aloud and lift up their voice of testimony like a trumpet against this great and growing evil, to show men their danger, much more lend the influence of their words and example by membership in their orders, to encourage and increase the evil?

(4) The obligation of secrecy, whether by promise or oath, is ensnaring to the conscience, and so contrary to the express command of God: "Thou shalt swear,"—and the same principle applies to a promise—"in truth, in judgment and in righteousness." We are not now referring to the profane character of the oaths which some of these societies impose upon their members, and which will be considered in its place. The evil of the obligation of secrecy is the same whatever be the particular form of the obligation. whether by promise or oath. The Christian ought to be as circumspect in taking any obligation, which binds his conscience as in taking an oath. Moreover, the obligation of an oath, if it is an unlawful one (as all these extra-judical oaths are), is not a whit more binding or sacred than that of an unlawful promise. The addition of the oath is only an aggravation of the sin involving as it does the guilt of profanity, without changing the principle or character of the obligation. This cannot be too frequently or plainly asserted, because the impression is general, that there is some kind of sacredness in the form of the oath administered, which becomes the more binding, the more solemn and awful the appeals and imprecations with which it is offered. So that those who disregard their obligations even when convinced of their unlawfulness are considered guilty of perjury. This is a great mistake, as may clearly be seen in the case of Herod, who rashly promised with an oath that he would give to the daughter of Herodias whatever she might ask. Who will say that Herod was bound by such an oath any more than if it had been simply a rash promise? The sin was in taking, not in breaking it. To have disregarded it was his duty; while to keep it involved him in the additional crime of murder without in the least diminishing the original guilt of his conduct which was the same whether he kept or broke his oath or promise. The sin was in making it, and to keep it after he found that it involved him in doing wrong was only to add to the sin, not only by murder, but also by showing that he had more regard to his own word, or a false sense of honor, than he had to the authority of God. This fuuishes a sufficient answer to the common sneer against those who have seceded from these orders and revealed their secrets; that they are dishonored and unworthy of belief, because, either they say what is false, or are guilty of perjury in revealing what they have sworn to keep. It is not so. On the contrary those who continue to regard the obligation of secrecy as binding, after they are convinced that it was unlawfully assumed in the first place, are the guilty parties in God's sight, because, like Herod, they pay more respect to their own word, or rather their false notion of honor, than they do to the honor and authority of God's law. It is the keeping, not the breaking of an unlawful oath, or promise, which is sinful in God's sight. Why? Because the taking of it in the first place was the sin, and every moment of continuing it after the sinfulness of it is seen is just a coustant repetition of that sin.

LINUS CHITTENDEN ON FREEMASONRY.

The Author a Seceding Master Mason states his objection to the Lodge, drawn both from experience and observation, in a clear concise and forcible style,

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100, $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV, A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts]

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,

CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous teudency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illnstrations that have ever been given to the pnblic.

Lecturers aud others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

We have the pleasure of acknowledging one club of five, sent by J. G. Mattoon, W. Unity, O., who writes: "The credit of this club is due to our friend, A. Jones." We are expecting two more clubs but they have not come yet.

LATER.—Another club, twenty for three months and one for a year has just been received from Peter Minton, Millville, Ohio. We sincerely thank him, and unite with him in "hoping that others will do likewise." Keep up the list through the Summer and prepare to run it up to ten thousand next fall and winter. The cause demands a wide circulation of the Cynosure.

We have received a new subscription from Michigan and the agent who secured it orders the engravings "Signing the Declaration," and the Declaration itself. We want more such orders.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING JUNE 2d, 1876: from J. K. Allwood, J. L. Burrell, C. E. Brookhart, F. K. Bufkin, J. H. Carpenter, W. Crawford. J. H. Clark, G. W. Champ, S. H. Davidson, J. D. Fowler, Mrs. M. C. Gerrard, E. Gould, A. Jones, G. Johnston, T. Kingsworth, H. L. Kellogg, W. M. Love, A. Lord, J. Mathews, C. P. Owen, J. Reid, B. Smith, A. Sullivan, Mrs. M. J. Whe aton.

Union in Christ is an excellent union, undenominational, illustrated monthly; 50 cents a year, 30 cents to ministers and agents. Sent on trial three months for ten cents or to canvassers three months free with best terms to agents. Address H. A. King, 37 Park Row, New York. Box 2289.

FOR THE GENERAL AGENT.—A warm friend of the reform sends the following note to the treasurer with an enclosure:

"Enclosed please find ten dollars. I have received a little money to-day and want to share it with brother Stoddard. We owe the fund which secures the Carpenter house to his faithful services.

Please remit to him the enclosed sum as a recognition on the part of a friend who would do more if consistent with other demands. J. B. W."

The Common People is a large, live, healthy, first-class, illustrated, 16 page monthly, religious family paper, [size of Harper's Weekly, 33x46in.] full of good reading, true stories, pictures, music, incidents, poetry and common sense. No politics, sectarianism, controversy, advertisements, continued stories, puffs, pills, or patent medicines admitted. Agents wanted everywhere! Single copies 10cts.; $1 per year in advance; to ministers 60cts. Order of your news agent or of the publisher. Sent post paid three months to any address for 10cts, or to ministers free, by the publisher.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Entertainment and Railroad Fare.—In answer to enquiries in regard to entertainment of delegates and reduction of fare to the Anniversary the Committee of arrangements promise free entertainment to a large number. Reduced rates are provided at hotels if all are not otherwise accommodated. Efforts have been made to secure reduction on the railroads, as yet unsuccessful; but there is some prospect of securing return tickets at one-fifth fare.

Topics of the Time.

While discussing appropriations in Congress the Democrats in the House pounced upon the Marine Band as a needless accessory of government. Their attack failed through a speech from one of their own party, who humorously described the present function of that splendid piece of national extravagance to be playing before the White House on pleasant evenings while President Grant and his satelites sat with feet perched upon the railing "smoking their partagas;" and the gentleman wanted to save the band a while so that he and others might sit and smoke on the piazza with a Democratic President while the nation furnished their music. But the ridiculous scene got up at national expense is over-shadowed by the dishonorable use the Band has just been put to. When Congressman Hopkins of Pittsburgh went up the other day to Philadelphia to play the Grand Commander in the Knight Templar farce, the government of the United States sent the great Marine Band to play before him, as if to show the subserviency of the civil power to the lodge. Tthe country may consent to furnish its President with expensive music while he puffs in stupidity, but the menagerie band is never sent out to play for a side show.

A correspondent in a valued exchange suggests that it is now demonstrated that Washington was a Freemason, for his old lodge apron has been dug out of its decay and brought into the Centennial Historical Department; and wants somebody to hunt up the traditional hatchet to show the boys, whose mischievous tendencies might be thereby amazingly encouraged. It is be suggested also to the history-loving lodge, that it would be well fetch out the cherry tree he chopped up, and the lie he didn't tell. Old Israel Putnam is one of their Revolutionary lights; let them produce that hole where he shot the wolf. No doubt they can show any of these as truly as Washington's Masonic apron.

There should be blazoned, however, in earnest throughout all the land the memorable farewell words given to his people by the great Washington on leaving public life. However those warning words may to-day be interpreted, there can be no doubt of what their author meant, when Alexander Hamilton, his ablest staff officer in battle and most trusted counsellor in peace used them with such power as the testimony of Washington against secret societies; and when high Masons like Jackson and Livingston could on account of them refuse the thanks of the nation to the retiring statesman.

Not long since Senator O. P. Morton of Indiana, who faintly hopes to be nominated for President of the United States to-day at Cincinnati, made the following stroke at the secret political orders of Indiana, hatched by rebellion brooding over the Masonic nest: "The State was honeycombed with secret societies, formerly known as Knights of the Golden Circle, but at that time as Sons of Liberty. They claimed in 1864 to have 40,000 members in the State; were lawless, defiant, plotting treason against the United States and the overthrow of the State Government. In some counties their operations were so formidable as to require militia to be kept on a war footing, and throughout 1863, and until the final explosion of the organization in August, 1864, kept the whole State in an uproar and alarm." Mr. Morton was then Governor of Indiana and used his power with energy against these lodge myrmidons. Their character and tactics must have impressed a man of such shrewdness and judgment as Mr. Morton, as strictly Masonic and a natural outgrowth of that order. Nor can he be ignorant that the system of organized secretism, no matter what its local safeguards, is continually liable to such abuse against right government. Yet we are told that he adheres to this system, and as a Freemason must therefore in private action endorse that which he condemns publicly in Congress. Do Americans need such a leader?

Our African Colony, Liberia.

BY GENERAL J. W. PHELPS.

We have seen a complaint made by a Liberian writer, that "Secrecy seemed to be one of the bulwarks of the Liberian government."

This statement reminded us of the fact that President Roberts of Liberia, though a very able man, was also a Mason, and must have had, during his long tenure of office, six years as governor and twelve years as president, a powerful influence in giving his people a bias in favor of secretism.

How it is, or when it was that President Roberts became a Mason, it is difficult to determine; but perhaps he got his degrees in England, where Masonry originated. He could hardly have been initiated in the United States, for negroes were not admitted here to a participation in the benevolence (!) of the lodge before the war; and besides, he had not attained the age which the Masons prescribe for initiation into their religion at the time when he left the United States. He was born in Norfolk, Virginia, 1809, and went to Liberia with a widowed mother and two younger brothers in 1829, while yet lacking one year of being old enough to enter upon "the sublime degrees of Freemasonry," and its heavenly promises.

Since attaining to official position he has ever borne the reputation of being a man of great integrity, of extraordinary ability, both as a ruler and a diplomat, and of a pure and blameless private character; but we cannot see wherein Freemasonry could lend any desirable qualities to such abilities as he possesed. Indeed, we fear that his Masonry may prove an injury to his country. As a man born and reared till the age of twenty under the despotic rule of the slave-power, it is natural that he should have imbibed a taste for strong government, for mastership, and for that mystification by which the mastership of the few over the many is usually maintained, and hence, probably, he became a Mason.

Masonry, however, is a very undesirable element in the education of a new country. It is a relic of paganism that is as much out of place in opening a new continent to Christian civilization at the present day, as the gods of Laban, or the mystic arts of Pharaoh's magicians were out of place in the Holy Land. The object of establishing the colony of Liberia on the western coast of Africa, was to Christianize the whole African continent; and it was a great oversight, therefore, in the managers of the colony in admitting Freemasonry into it; for Freemasonry, being a system of paganish, frandulent arts, is utterly hostile to the genius of Christianity.

Being impressed with this fact, we have, as a laborer in the interests of Liberia, called the attention of one of our correspondents there to the matter, and requested him to suggest to President Roberts the importance of setting a good example to his people by a solemn and public renunciation of Masonry, holding up to him for this purpose the example of our illustrious Washington, who, in his will, provided for the manumission of his slaves, and in his farewell address warned his country against such associations as Masonry tends to generate.

We have never heard from our correspondent whether he showed our letter, or broached this subject to President Roberts; and we suppose that it has not been done. Even if it has been done, we are sorry to infer that it has had no effect, since on looking over the files of a Liberia paper, of recent date, we noticed an announcement of President Robert's death, and of his being buried with "Masonic honors," so-called.

Thus then, the news of the death of a distinguished man, a high official, and a Mason, comes in the same file of papers with a complaint that the government on which he has left his impress, for future good or evil, is a government whose bulwarks are secrecy, that is, it is not open, fair and intelligible, as a government designed for the people should be.

Where the people are rulers, why should there be any mystification, or secrecy? Who and which of the people are to be mystified and deceived by it? Why should a people play sly, and deceive themselves? or hide secrets from themselves?

We would wish to be among the first to pay our tribute of sincere respect to the memory of the late Joseph Jenkins Roberts, ex-President of Liberia, both as a man and as a member of the Methodist Episcopal church; but we should decline to have any part in the pagan mummeries that Freemasons made over his tomb—mummeries that the wondering natives from the woods might have looked upon and recognized as akin to their own. Little honor do Methodist ministers do to the cause of Christ, if, on the borders of a hundred millions of barbarians, they can commend to immortal life a deceased brother in connection with ceremonies as paganish as those which are observed by the barbarians themselves.

The Columbian Order.

Very few persons who consider themselves intimately acquainted with the history of the Tammany Society, or Columbian Order, which has its home or meeting-place in the imposing brick and stone structure on Fourteenth street, and with the influence it has wielded during the present century in the political history of our country, are aware that it was instituted in the first place as a benevolent institution. At its first organization its membership included men of different political opinions, for there were conflicting views in regard to public policy at that period (1789) as there are to-day.

The first constitution of the society, published at the time, says that its object was to "connect in indissoluble bonds of friendship American brethren of known attachment to the political rights of human nature and the liberties of the country." It pledged itself to the work of conciliating the savage tribes of Indians who were disputing with tomahawk and torch foot by foot the advancing steps of pioneer and settler. To show its abhorence of foreign manners and institutions it adopted for its ritual and ceremonies Indian customs, and divided the year into seasons of flowers, fruits and snows, and the seasons into moons. To carry out this native American idea more strongly, its officers were called sachems, sagamores and wiskinsies.

THE BIRTH OF TAMMANY.

Another strong reason given for the formation of the Columbian Order was the alleged anti-republican principles adopted by the Society of Cincinnati, of which Baron Steuben was at that time president in this State. As avowed by its founders, the Columbian Order was a rival of the Society of Cincinnati, and time has developed the ultimate purposes of both organizations. The Society of Cincinnati exists and is maintained in the same spirit in which it was first organized; while the Columbian Order, from a body organized for charitable purposes, has developed into a mere party machine, its council-fires fanned by the struggles of its factions, and its name held in contempt by the true members of the party it professes to rule.

Tammany Hall, as it is popularly called, or rather the society, was founded, as the old chroniclers have recorded, by William Mooney, an Irishman, who was a whig in politics and had acquired party distinction as a leader of the Sons of Liberty. Moony was the first Grand Sachem, and among the sachems were the eminent names of Philip Hone, Van Buren, Godwin, Greenleaf, Campbell and Furman. The first public celebration of the society was held May 12th, 1789, on the bank of the North River, two miles out of the city, or at the point where the foot of Christopher street is now. Here the brethren smoked the calumet in turn and held their feast, and returned to town in the evening.

RECEPTION OF CREEK INDIANS.

In the following year William Pitt Smith was elected Grand Sachem, and John Pintard, Sagamore. It was in this year (1790) that the society received a delegation of Creek Indians, which was one of the most interesting events of its history. The general government had endeavored for some time to form a treaty with this tribe, but all attempts had failed until Colonel Willet induced the delegation of about thirty chiefs to visit the city. The members of the Tammany Society at that time were accustomed to wear the Indian costume as a regalia, and received the Creeks with painted faces and clad in buckskin leggings, moccasins, &c., and were armed with war-clubs and tomahawks. The Creeks were delighted at the reception, and saluted their entertainers with such a war-whoop that it raised the hair of the gentlemen present, if it did not disturb the scalps. George Clinton, John Jay, and other gentlemen were present at the reception.

The Society took its name from St. Tammamend, a canonized Indian chief, who, according to aboriginal tradition, was a member of the Lenni Lenape confederacy, and a Delaware. At first it devoted some part of its work to charitable objects, in the way of extending relief to destitute patriots and their widows and orphans, but the records of good deeds of this character are few and far between. The first "wigwam" of the society was organized in a tavern known as "Barden's City Hotel," situated in the lower part of Broadway. The members at this time were intensely patriotic, and paid great attention to the celebration of the 12th of May, the anniversary of the organization of the society and of their titular Saint, Tammamend, and the Fourth of July.

OLD CUSTOMS.

On such occasions it was the custom of the Tammany "braves" to assemble at their "wigwam," and march to the old Presbyterian church in Wall street, which stood near Nassau street, and after listening to an oration and singing patriotic songs, to return to their council-room for a convivial evening. They sometimes went to Greenwich, a mile or two out of town, on the North River, and enjoyed a similar "pow-wow" in tents erected for the purpose. About this time, or in the second year of the organization of the society, some of the patriotic members, under the lead of one Gardner Baker, began the formation of a museum, for the purpose of collecting and preserving all objects and curiosities connected with the history of the country. The collection was first placed in the City Hall where it remained until 1794, when it was removed to a hall in what was called the Exchange, at the junction of Broad and Pearl streets. A year later the society relinquished its interest to Mr. Baker, and at his death the collection was sold, and, after passing through many hands, finally became the nucleus of Scudder's old museum in Chatham street, and later became the property of P. T. Barnum.

In the history of the Tammany Society, its various wigwams have been the scene of many shows, but this museum is the only one of a legitimate character of which there are any records.

THE SECOND WIGWAM.

The second wigwam of the society was established in a tavern in Broad street, near where its museum was situated; and the third place of meeting, to which it removed in 1798, was "Martling's Long Room," a low wooden structure situated at the southeast corner of Spruce and Nassau streets, the site of the present Tribune building. The entrance was in Nassau street, and as the society had at this time taken a decidedly antagonistic stand in opposition to the federalists, the wigwam was stigmatized by the latter as the "pig-pen." For a year or two after this the society did not flourish to any great extent, as President Washington's denunciation of secret societies in general had almost killed it. Moony, the originator of the society, however, managed to keep it alive, aided by "Brom' Martling" and a few choice spirits, until the beginning of President Jefferson's administration, when it became, what it is to-day, a strong and active political organization.

AARON BURR.

Aaron Burr is said to have been an active ally of the society, but there are no reports to show that he was ever a member. He, however, is credited with having used the society for his purposes. He was a leader of the Democratic party at the time, and he is said to have wielded the influence of the society so ably that in the political campaign of 1800 the federalists in New York city were completely overthrown. The result of that election, which was the first canvass in which the Tammany Society—or Columbian Order, as it was originally named—was recognized as a political power, made Thomas Jefferson President and Aaron Burr Vice-President of the United States. The tactics resorted to by the society to secure adherents at that day were similar to those practiced during our own time. Voters of doubtful political faith, but with a leaning toward the opposition, were brought into the wigwam on the very eve of election, and initiated into its mysteries. After the ceremony—if the managers of the society had any doubts of the stability of the newly conscripted members—committees of guardianship were appointed to conduct them to the polls.

OPPOSITION OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

From the organization of the society Alexander Hamilton was its most determined opponent, and when President Washington's farewell address appeared in 1796 he was the first to apply the reproof against secret societies contained in it to the Tammany organization. Hamilton favored the Society of the Cincinnati, of which he was the projector and acknowledged leader, and he foresaw the danger to the country which would arise from a corrupt use of the power of a series of secret political societies of which the Tammany Society, or Columbian Order, might be the head.

The result of the election in 1800 confirmed the wisdom of this view, and to avert the present as well as the possible danger in the future he went so far as to recommend the organization of similar societies to counteract the Tammany influence. The society of the Cincinnati was an association of gentlemen, and its meetings had no political significance. Hamilton's opposition to the Tammany Society continued until his death in the duel with Burr, which occurred the 12th of July, 1804.

The result of this unfortunate duel does not appear to have had any more effect on the prosperity of the Tammany Society at that time than the exposure of Tweed and his co-conspirators. The latter were cast out of the wigwam, and at once the Grand Sachem and his retainers became reformers. So, too, in 1804 the killing of Alexander Hamilton caused the overthrow of Burr, and gave the deathblow to his political aspirations, but Tammany stood from under and weathered the storm of indignation which swept over the land.

The second night after the duel the city was a scene of mourning, everywhere save in the Tammany wigwam. "Brom Martley's Long Room," which was the home of Tammany, was alone the scene of a feast held in rejoicing at the death of its most dreadful foe and in honor of the victor. But this season of rejoicing did not last, as the adherents of the society soon saw the drift of public opinion, and prepared at once to yield to it; and the Evening Post published on the next day contained the following notice:

"Brothers: Your attendance is earnestly requested at an extra meeting of the tribes, in the Great Wigwam, precisely at the setting of the sun this evening, to make arrangements for joining our fellow citizens and soldiers, in order to pay the last tribue of national respect due to the name of our departed fellow citizen and soldier, General Alexander Hamilton. By order of the Grand Sachem.

"JAMES B. BISSETT, Secretary.

"Season of Fruits, in the Year of Discovery Three Hundred and Twelve, and of the Institution the Fifteenth, July the 15th.

Aaron Burr, from the time of his election to the Vice-Presidency, had been distrusted by his party, but his political career did not end until the duel; and Tammany, his creation or offspring, waxed stronger on the ruins of his greatness.—Weekly Ithican, N. Y.

Letter to a Mason.

Rev. C. F.———

DEAR BROTHER: Since I became acquainted with you, I have felt a peculiar kind of anxiety in your behalf that as you profess to be called of God to preach the everlasting Gospel of his dear Son, my anxiety for you is that you may preach the pure Gospel in simplicity and godly sincerity, and that your motives, your actions, and all your associations may be of that kind which God's word approves and God's Spirit approves.

I knew you were young and quite sensible that you had not yet become acquainted with the devices of Satan, but were still ignorant of the variou ways and plans that the devil uses to ruin the usefulness of men and especially of ministers who are laboring to oppose his works. And among all o his devices, I know of nothing more fascinating and bewildering to the human mind, or better calculated to destroy the usefulness of a minister, than to get his feet fast in the meshes of the Masonic web. And I am also sensible that Satan knows this too; and besides this he knows that if he can get the church to fellowship the abomination, and hug it to their bosom as a harmless thing, he has got a double advantage over the Christian and the minister of Christ.

Now, these are some of the reasons why I, more than a year since, put forth my best efforts to save you from the fatal delusion of Masonry. I remember I appealed to you with a feeling heart, and begged you for God's sake, for Christ's sake, and for your own soul's sake, to keep out of the Masonic trap. But it now appears that the enemy has defeated me, and got the advantage, secured his victim, and got your soul fast in the meshes of one of the greatest delusions that ever bewildered the human mind. But you are not the only victim thus deluded; the unclean spirits of Rev. xvi. 13, are to-day busy in the same work of deluding and deceiving unsuspecting men, to gather them to the great battle of God Almighty. These spirits are now making many honest men believe that Masonry is actually a good and useful institution; this he has made you to believe, or at least to say you believe it; and to accomplish this deception he made use of your own father and other friends, and quite likely your own church members as agents in this ruse. And then after all this outside influence was made to bear upon you, you were made to say in your petition to the lodge for membership that "unbiassed by friends and uninfluenced by mercenary motives, you freely and voluntarily offered yourself a candidate for the mysteries of Masonry, and that you were prompted to solicit this privilege by a favorable opinion conceived of the institution, a desire of knowledge, and a sincere wish to be serviceable to your fellow creatures." Now the probability is that this whole petition, or nearly all of it, is a swindle, a ruse, a strategem, to deceive the unwary, and make men dishonest. You, sir, were certainly biassed by friends, and by their influence you were induced to "form a favorable opinion of the institution." And your motives too, were formed by the cunning craft of Masons brought to bear upon your feelings by the promise of some special advantages you might enjoy by being a member of the lodge, which others do not enjoy.

Now these motives were either of a mercenary and pecuniary character, or they are of a moral or spiritual nature; and in case the latter was a fact, one could scarcely be made to believe that a soundly converted man, a student of the Bible, could be induced to willingly yoke himself up with a clan of men, the majority of whom are wicked and profane skeptics and unbelievers; and all this for a "desire of knowledge and of being serviceable to his fellow creatures." I say it is hard to believe that a man tells the truth when he says this. And now, sir, I say it is far easier for an intelligent man to believe that your motives were of a mercenary character than to believe that your object was the spiritual good of your fellow creatures. And this probability becomes still more apparent from the fact that Masons openly profess, and bind themselves under strong obligations to "aid and assist all poor indigent Master Masons, their wives and orphans wheresoever disposed around the globe." Now this is a pecuniary consideration, and a mercenary motive placed before you by the Masons before you join, in order to induce you to become a member. Why then did you say in the petition that you were uninfluenced by mercenary motives?

But the above mentioned evils are not the worst features of the petition. You also said that "should your petition be granted you would cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of fraternity." Now we say, surely this was a large dose for an honest man to swallow; and and especially so, when it is certain that the patient knew nothing of the deleterious nature of the medicine taken.

But then again, for fear—on the part of the craft—that you were not sincere in this promise, or that there might be in your heart some "hesitation, mental reservation, or self evasion of mind," your Senior Deacon, in order that the medicine might have the desired effect, prepared two or three more doses of the same ingredients, only adding a few grains of "sincerity" and a little "honor," and then said: "Do you sincerely declare upon your honor before these gentlemen that you will cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of the fraternity?" And to our great astonishment, you, in a very short time gulped down the whole preparation, and that without seeming to realize that in taking this obligation upon your soul, you positively endorsed and quietly submitted yourself to all the practical abominations of a vile institution, of which you, of course, knew nothing.

Now, my brother, in view of your obligations to Christ and to the world as a minister of Christ, I ask in Christ's name, how could you do this thing? You say you had been informed by your father and other Masons, who you believed were honest men, that it was a good institution. Well, on the other hand, you had been faithfully warned and taught to let the thing alone till you had examined the evidences on both sides of the question. But you would not read, you could not get time to read the overwhelming evidences offered you; and now you have tamely bound yourself an abject slave for life, to the secrets of an institution, of which, if exposed to the light of God's bright sun, you yourself would be heartily ashamed; and all well-bred men would cry out, "O shame, where is thy blush!"

Now, can a Christian do all these things and be innocent? I think not. But, you say. I don't know that Masons are guilty of all these charges; but I reply, if any fact can be proved by human testimony these charges can be sustained by an overwhelming amount of valid proofs; and I stand ready at any day to produce it. I now ask you to meet me with a like amount—or even one-half—of such testimony to prove that we who never joined the lodge, do not know any of the secrets of the craft. Will you do it? If not, then we hold you guilty of our charges. An early reply is respectfully solicited.

Yours for the truth, A. OLDFIELD.

TME AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Political Notice.

There will be a mass convention of the friends of the American party in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 23rd, 1876. Commencing at 9 o'clock, A. M.

J. P. STODDARD, Chairman Central Com.

The following is suggested as a programme for the meeting and the gentlemen whose names are mentioned in connection with the several planks in our platform have been invited to attend and open the discussion on each plank in a fifteen minutes' speech to be followed by five minute speeches by volunteers.

1st. R. H. Pollock, Wooster, O.
2nd. Pres. J. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill.
3rd. Wm. Wishart, Ontario, O.
4th. Judge Zearing, Chicago.
5th. Rev. J. L. Barlow, Fenton, Mich.
6th. Rev. A. Lord, Elgin, Ill.
7th. Rev. H. T. Cheever, Worcester, Mass.
8th. G. W. Needles, Albany, Mo.
9th. Rev. J. M. Snyder, Wheaton, Ill.
10th. Laurie Tatum, Springdale, Ia.
11th. Prof. Rideout, Hillsdale, Mich.

Arrangements will be made in connection with this meeting for preparing electoral tickets for the different States and the transaction of such other business as may be required to make our influence against the lodge felt at the ballot box.

J. P. STODDARD.

Why and How.

The Presidential campaign of 1876 promises to be one of unusual interest. The field will be warmly contested and the winning aspirant will find ample scope for the exercise of all the graces and excellences he may possess after the conflict is over. There are hopeful omens in the political horizon it is true, upon the principle of that old adage that "when rogues quarrel honest men will get their dues," and it may be that the political "fuglemen" will be compelled to put forward some man who has either no record, or one that is comparatively honest, in order to satisfy the demands of the people and keep the old parties intact.

But an honest man forced into prominence against the wishes of those who suppose themselves commissioned to run the government and simply as a matter of expediency would have little power to resist and overcome the influence of his immediate surroundings. Neither the Cincinnati or St. Louis conventions will be likely to put men in nomination whom they do not expect to control; and judging from what appears in the papers no man need hope for a position on either ticket unless he is willing to pledge subservience to the men and the party from whom he receives preferment. To vote for a man in such a position would be to vote for the tricksters who were simply using him as a decoy to catch the votes of honest men in order to perpetuate their own power. Such movements are not reforms, nor do they look in the direction of reformation. They are simply gull traps to catch the unwary and the sooner they are repudiated by the people the better it will be for the country. Many unskilled in political arts know this and only want an opportunity to express their convictions at the polls and this sentiment of distrust is already beginning to crystalize into a tangible form that is destined at a day not distant to make itself felt.

The platform of the American Party sets the living issues of to-day in a clear light and presents a definite Scriptural Republican line of action in which all honest men can unite to overthrow those gigantic systems of misrule and fraud by which the country is cursed, and the success of these principles is only a question of ime. Their ultimate triumph is sure for God has spoken it.

Thinking that some who wish to aid in this movement might not be familiar with the necessary forms in constructing electoral colleges, I give the following synopsis of the constitutional provisions in such cases:

1st, Each State must have a certain number of men who shall compose what is termed an "Electoral College."

2d, Each State is entitled to a number of electors, equal to the whole number of its Senators and Representatives in Congress, who may be chosen from any part of the State.

3d, Senators, Representatives and all persons holding offices of trust or profit under the United States are excluded from being electors.

A recent number of the Chicago Tribune gives the following as the electors to which each State is entitled under the above constitutional provisions:

Colorado	3	Alabama	10
Illinois	21	Arkansas	6
Iowa	11	California	6
Kansas	5	Connecticut	6
Maine	7	Delaware	3
Massachusetts	13	Florida	4
Michigan	11	Georgia	11
Minnesota	5	Kentucky	12
Nebraska	3	Louisiana	8
New Hampshire	5	Maryland	8
Ohio	22	Mississippi	8
Pennsylvania	29	Missouri	15
Rhode Island	4	Nevada	3
South Carolina	7	North Carolina	10
Vermont	5	Oregon	3
Wisconsin	10	Tennessee	12
Texas	8	Virginia	11
West Virginia	5

Whole number of votes.....369
Necessary to a choice.....185

To carry out the above provisions let the friends in any given State (or so many of them as can conveniently assemble), meet and agree upon the persons who shall act as electors for the State, two "at large" and one for each Congressional District, and then have tickets prepared headed "American Party. For President James B. Walker. For Vice President Donald Kirkpatrick," and then insert the names of those persons who are to act as electors. This matter should receive prompt attention from the friends in the different States and provisions should be made to bring the merits of our reform movement before the people. Hitherto we have failed in most instances to secure a proper expression from our friends at the ballot box for want of an electoral ticket and suitable arrangement for carrying out the forms of law. Let not the errors of the past be repeated in the future. J. P. STODDARD, Chairman Nat'l Com. on Pol. Action.

The National Reform League.

[The following address "to the people of the United States" has been issued by this organization which, although it does not present the candidates of the American party, does its principles.]

It was the last expressed aspiration of our revered Washington, "That our Constitution may be securely maintained, that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that in fine, the happiness of the people of the States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete, by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and the adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it."

We are now in the act of a national invitation to the other nations of the earth to visit us at our first Centennial, to take the guage and dimensions of our national greatness, and to view us in perhaps the greatest of all our domestic duties as a Republic, the process of electing the Chief Magistrate of forty millions of freemen.

It is not to be denied, fellow countrymen, that grave doubts as to the success of our Institutions are creeping over the people of foreign lands; while at home the hearts of patriots are failing them for fear of internal poison in our body politic, on account of the appalling developments of official corruption and party demoralization during the last few years.

By reason thereof, at the present time, "The Nation sits bowed with shame, hiding its face, waiting for the opportunity to vindicate its honor."

People of the United States, must not that opportunity be now grasped by honest, unselfish American patriots of all parties! Having had painfully verified in our experience, the warning of De Tocqueville that "every government will be just as rascally as the people will let it be"— shall we not organize without longer delay, an effective revolt of the people against the controlling politicians and machinery of parties!

Events have proved that the bravest act in the life of our honored Sumner was his early and powerful protest against venality, partialism, personality and corruption in his own party. That protest fitly rounded his noble record, and showed that Charles Sumner, over and beyond the pure Republican that he was, was a purer patriot, and above a prtriot, a man loyal and true to immutable principles. From the hour of his entrance upon public life, till its close by death in the shadow of the National Capitol, he drew his inspiration from the unseen realm of ideas and principles.

"Since true politics" (he early said) "are simply morals applied to public affairs, I shall find constant assistance from those everlasting rules of right and wrong which are a law alike to individuals and to communities; nay, which constrain the Omnipotent God himself in self-imposed bonds."

Fellow countrymen, is it not representative men like Sumner and Wilson, statesmen and politicians in the broadest and best sense—weighed and not found wanting, foremost among the people for every virtue, the best and noblest of our citizens, who will fearlessly apply those everlasting rules of right and wrong to our public affairs, that we desire to call this Centennial year, to the Presidency and Vice-presidency of the Nation! In order to our national salvation must there not now be fairly represented (as for years it is admitted there has not been) the intelligence, the scholarship, the probiety, the patriotism, the best social life of the nation, in the names to be proclaimed as candidates, for the nex Presidency and Vice-presidency of the American Republic!

Holders of the elective franchise, citizens of the best republic under heaven; is it not fairly put to you "that the man who is to carry off the prize at Cincinnati must be a man who first of all, is distinguished for his robust and unflinching integrity, his conspicuous hostility to chicanery and fraud, and his resolute preference for honest and capable men, and for straight-forward and high-minded methods of doing things!

All local Reform Leagues, and determined patriots in every quarter, without respect of party, who recognize those qualities permanently in Charles Francis Adams of Massachusetts, and Benjamin H. Bristow of Kentucky, are invited to correspond with the National Reform League, N. Y., touching a People's Convention to be holden at an early date to consider the propriety of presenting these names or their equivolents—men whose character is their all-sufficient platform—as THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE FOR 1876.

N. R. LUCE, Pastor.

Brother Stoddard in Iowa.—Lectures in Albion.

MR. EDITOR:—The readers of the Christian Cynosure have seldom seen anything from Albion, Marshall Co., Iowa. This place was, however, represented at our late State Convention; and there is, and has been for some time, a sufficient interest felt here i the anti-secret reform, to sustain a club of seventeen copies of the Cynosure. Much of this interest is the result of the exertions of Mr. A. C. Moffatt of this place. This is one of the oldest towns in central Iowa, and there has been a Masonic lodge here for some years. But, I believe, heretofore there has never been a lecture delivered here against this monopoly.

Last Saturday (May 27th) Rev. J. P. Stoddard surprised us by his arrival, and the Presbyterian church was at once at his service, in which he gave a stirring lecture that night. On Sabbath morning he filled the pulpit for the pastor, Rev. W. R. Smith, and preached a powerful sermon without any allusion to secretism except that in his very opening sentence he gave one hint which to a thinking mind was more than an ordinary lecture. In that single sentence he gave his audience at once the proper view of the character of the boasted mysteries of Freemasonry—false mysteries.

By almost unanimous request his lectures were continued four nights (as long as he could stay.) Considering the shortness of notice given, the audience of the first evening was very good, and, notwithstanding the shortness of the nights and the busy season among the farmers, the church was soon filled and the audience increasing every night. This shows the drift of popular sentiment, and that with an awakening and a little training of the right kind it is all right. There is not the least doubt but that Bro. Stoddard's brief effort here will result in a lasting benefit to the community and the churches of Albion. And if he will remember this place and this Marshall county in his winter programme he will doubtless find here an open door for great usefulness.

This sneaking tyrant of Freemasonry has held his sway much too long already. Let the subject be agitated till the people will think for themselves and act accordingly. Then they will claim their liberties and assert their rights. Then our political conventions and elections will no longer be mere farces, and our officers foresworn partialists. Then our ministers at funerals will preach faith in Christ, not in Masonic symbols, legends and traditions. Then Christians will know whether they belong to the church or to the lodge. Then American citizens will know whether they are the subjects of a free republican government or of an absolute monarchy.

Footfalls Among the Wolverines.

June 5, 1876.

DEAR K.—Since my last writing I have been busy in Eaton, Barry and Allegan counties, dealing out such blows on the "old handmaid" as have rendered her, through God's blessing, somewhat less estimable among the people than she was wont to be. On Sabbath, May 14, I paved the way for my special work, by sermons at Assyria Center and at Section Hill school house in Bellevue, Eaton Co. During the week following I gave two lectures at the above-named school-house, which were well received and resulted in saving some from being caught in the meshes of the lodge-net. The grange in all this section has been strong—much stronger I do think, than it will be in the near hereafter. It is at best a silly, costly, burdensome affair, and secures no good to its initiates which may not be more cheaply secured by a fair, open organization; while it serves Masonic purposes by killing out whatever of Anti-masonic sentiment might have had a home in the hearts of its members, aforetime. I have found very many in different parts of the State who were until lately strong, outspoken Anti-masons, who since joining the grange have become as tongue-tied as the veriest Mason could desire. Truly, Grosh, Saunders, Kelley & Co., in hatching this Masonic egg were far-sighted; or did they build for their Grand Master better than they knew! But if the signs are not all deceptive the grange is a short-lived thing, and when it sinks will carry down with it more than its own flaunting banner. The old Masonic craft, with torn sails, sprung masts, strained seams and worm-eaten timbers cannot long stand up under so much deck load. She must be lightened or or she will topple over and go down in the heavy seas the breath of God's truth is raising round her. "So mote it be."

During the latter part of the week I spoke twice in the Advent church in though not without some curious opposition. All the trustees save one who had not been seen, had given consent for use of the house. One of the consenting ones was a Mason, Wilcox by name, who was most cordial in his consent and who promised to attend and did attend the lectures. As we neared the house on Friday evening we saw it all alight; but as we drove up the lights went out, and a wrathy sexton met us at the door which he tried hard to close, saying loudly, "There will be no lecture in this house to-night!"

A brother who had unlocked the house and lighted it, threw the doors open again, and bade us enter despite the sexton's protest. This we were slow to do until we should discover the source of this opposition. Dea. Poole, who had engaged the house for us, at length pointedly asked the now mad official, if the Masonic trustee had told him to shut the house. He replied at last on being hard pressed—"He told me I might if I felt like it"! And thus we were made acquainted with another instance of Masonic piety and duplicity. At length our gentleman came along evidently surprised to find open doors and lamps lit. We mildly suggested to him the propriety of calling a vote of the members present, as to whether we should go on, or not. It was finally voted that we might speak that night, our Masonic brother voting neither way. At the close of my remarks, which were apparently well received, I desired of course, to know whether I might speak there the following night and again called for an expression, which showed no opposing vote, so I went on and finished up the work I had promised. On Sabbath morning, May 21, our brother Poole hitched up and drove us over to eleven miles away where I preached morning and evening to the Baptists in their hall. On Monday and Tuesday evenings I spoke on my specialty to a full house, a fair sprinkling of the craft being there to spy out our liberty. The Worshipful Master is pastor of the Christian church. He is reported as having said that he was for the first time converted during a series of meetings in his church last winter! If that is so I can but pray that he may be no more converted, as it does not seem to agree with him, if I may judge from a remark he made while I was speaking, and loud enough for several to hear: "That's a d——d lie!" said by those who heard him to have been spoken with a vim. Soon afterwards the room became too hot, or otherwise too unpleasant, to hold our young convert, and so he rose and fled saying, "I don't want to hear the old fool any longer!" or words to that effect. Accordingly he came no more. "It is the covenant that makes the Mason!" So says his High Mightiness Rob Morris, and here was a specimen of its handiwork. How long shall such men profane the walls of Zion!

After close of my second lecture here Remington, myself, and Bro. Poole rode back to the home of the latter, which we reached past two o'clock, A. M., weary enough to rest a day or two as I gladly did, preaching, however, Thursday evening and leaving on Friday afternoon for n Allegan county, where I spent the Sabbath, preaching in the morning for the pastor of the M. E. church and in the evening for the U. P. pastor, in whose church I lectured on Monday and Tuesday evenings to large audiences who listened with clo attenti on as I held up Masonry as an anti-Christ in religion, and a foul despotism in government.

Here I found a home with David Wiley, Esq., to whom and his amiable femily I am under many obligations. The pastors of the M. E. and U. P. churches also gave me kindly Christian courtesy for which I hereby tender them my hearty thanks. More anon.

Our Centennial Letter.

A Friend indeed—The Work Growing—The Knight Templar Show—Tract work on the Streets—The Lodge watching for its Time—A Methodist D. D.—Hard Work and Health.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. May 28, 1876.

DEAR BRO. COOK: I am welcomed here at Bro. Mackie's. Arrived this evening. He handed me a note of welcome to the hospitalities of his house containing money to pay my fare to and from the Centennial ground for one month. Thanks to God who prepares our way before us. I tendered him my hearty thanks in behalf of the good cause we are engaged in.

There is a growing interest in our favor, and it has been achieved by Christian gentleness, kindness, and manifest earnest desire to do these seeretists good by throwing light upon their minds. Both they and others who were indifferent have been made to feel that we are doing an earnest, honest, Christian work.

May, 30, 1876.

I have to-day, I think, handed out more tracts than on any former day. Masons are getting very uneasy, and hang around near my stand and eavesdrop. Dr. Williamson called to-day, and said he had received a letter from you asking him to be interested, and said anything he could do to aid me he would most cheerfully do; said he would send me a man on the day of the grand procession of Knight Templars to assist in distributing "GRAND GREAT GRAND."

I am in hopes to get the young man who offers to sell the books in Bro. Stevenson's office, and a friend or two of his. Bro. Hubbard will, and I think most likely Bro. Mackie and son will help also. I am to-night with Bro. Hubbard, to bill the books I am to take away in the morning. Friends are gaining in courage, and Masons in soreness. One Knight Templar said to me to-day if Morgan said he took the oath he did he got his just due. "What need we any further witness? For we ourselves have heard of our own mouth." I do not know how long I can endure this strain upon my old frame. It sometimes seems I shall have to succumb. I pray God to support me, and I have endured much more than I thought I could. I had no idea what it would be till I got at it. Well, I shall endure just as long as I can. I cannot sit much but stand at my work to talk and hand out tracts and fold them. I can sit some at folding, but people coming I have to get up and wait on them and often have to interest them first. May God bless us all in the work.

June 1.

The great day of the "Knights" has passed. The great procession has come to an end. I did not see it; but our friend the foreman in the Christian Statesman office, sent out to the great concourse of witnesses six distributers of the "Grand, Great Grand" tract, and went himself. Brother Hubbard and his good wife also went to the work. Bro. H. took with him some 300 or 350 and his wife the balance of 500, and he, in going one block through the crowd gave out all he had and his wife gave hers about as soon, and thought they could have given out 3,000 if they had had them. I have not heard the report from Bro. Stevenson's foreman's party; but I think probably they gave some three or four thousand and possibly more. Whether there were other parties engaged in this work I am not informed. The procession did not come on the Centennial grounds. Their programme I hear did not include such a visit, but a march around the grounds. While this was going on outside, in the city, marching through the streets and toward and around the Centennial grounds, as I heard they would, I was inside battling with the enemy. Not without help; for God is with me all the time, and sometimes Anti-masons come along and lend a helping hand. One called to-day from near Mansfield, O., who did not speak with bated breath, but with a loud sonorous voice, with fearlessness, as if he wanted to challenge the attention of all to let them know that he lived in a free country. He said a Mason was employed in the post-office in his place, who had opened letters, abstracted money and told of it, and it was proven against him, and he still kept in his place, though application had been made for his removal, and once the matter became too warm for him and he fled; but the Masons fixed the matter up and he returned and keeps his office.

Masons are getting very uneasy. One came and we had quite a talk. He intimated that we were injuring our country and our religion, because we were helping the Catholics who are making common cause with us against Masonry, which alone is able to detect Catholicism and checkmate it, and prevent their overthrowing our country.

Another tried to intimidate me by saying "I had better look out, for I might be strung up," and by his jestures and motions intimated it might be done right there. I assured him very coolly and quietly that I had no fear, with which result he did not seem very well pleased.

They are feeling more and more interested in my work, and watch me very closely. One in one direction, another in another; a knot of two or three in a place are occasionally glancing at me. One came along to-day who seemed to get the impression from hearing the word Masonry uttered by some one, that I was working in its interest; who, when I asked if he was a Mason, answered affirmatively and at the same time drew his hand across his throat Masonically. He soon by our conversation discovered his mistake and seemed confused.

Well, I have very varied and curious experiences, much of which I cannot remember in detail, because coming in such rapid succession that they become mixed in my mind.

I sent our leaflets to-day to Moscow, Russia, by a Russian. I advised him to have them translated into his language.

Yesterday or day before I sent some to Hawaii, by an attorney at law, who went there from Oswego Co., N. Y., twenty years ago; and can now read the Hawaiian language as well as he can the English. He is a hearty Antimason. He says there are some Masons there, but he does not approve of the lodge. The knowledge of our work is spreading over the country, and by many it is hailed with joy, and Masons and other secretists feared and disliked; and the latter seem almost ready to say, "Did we not straitly charge you not to preach any more in this name, and behold you have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine?"

June 2.

Another marked case occurred yesterday. One of the ablest M. E. ministers, a D. D., in Connecticut came up and most heartily approved of our work at once, and proclaimed himself as an eleven degree Mason, and said that he had abandoned it as a corrupt institution, and gave me his autograph and place of residence, but wished me not to make any public use of his name. Another case of a prominent Methodist, who said he was a Mason, and if he told me his altitude in Masonry I have forgotten it; talked at first slightly in favor of it, but gradually declined till at last he declared it a huge fraud, and left saying, "You have not got my name;" as much as to say "You cannot report this against me to the craft," at the same time giving me a pleasant look of approval of our work.

I think more than half the secretists I have spoken with here have either declared themselves opposed to secret orders, or as totally indifferent to them, and probably these were as much opposed as the former, but indifference was as much as they dare indicate.

I cannot get a single subscription for the Cynosure. I might get a good many if I could see those people who call at their homes, or if they were not in such a hurry to see all the wonderful sights in the limited time they have.

I am almost ready to say, please call me home in two or three weeks. Perhaps you may think best sooner. I find all Bro. Mackie's family heartily in sympathy with our work as you may infer from his liberality, and may know by other means.

Our friends here who think they know the temper of secretists are very solicitous for my safety. They often speak of it. Not a day passes, I think, without some reference to danger. Still I cannot think that the leaders would be so unwise as to molest me or suffer it to be done by the less wise and possibly more vicious.

June 5.

I am quite unwell this morning and may not go to the grounds till afternoon. I think perhaps I may be obliged to return home in some two or three weeks, though it would be well to have some one here who can in a few moments talk up a short or outline history of our movement, and our paper and book business. It has to be done quickly for people have not time for long talks. Then it is necessary to call attention to it or probably not one out of a hundred of the few visitors who pass our stand would see it. As soon as I get through with one or a group of two or three or a half dozen as the case may be, I am on the look-out to get the attention of others. The place is so retired and secluded, and there are so many and apparently larger matters, and more attractive to the common masses, that it takes a good deal of effort to get people's notice. I do not admit that there is more than one exhibition here greater than this,—the Bible is first always. But we have both the truth and the spirit of the Bible given a certain direction in our work, while the Bible as a whole, has a broader field of operation. Ours is specific, while that is general. When I tell Masons that ours is a Christian work; that God is the great mover of this matter, that we work a benevolent work, that God's spirit is with us; they take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. Then the whole thing seems to take on another aspect in their minds.

I have taken no orders yet for the Cynosure. People in these hard times feel that they are expending about as much in making a visit here as they can afford. They take the tracts and say "We will read these and when we get home we can then order the paper." A. D. Freeman.

The Story of a Secession.

Oberlin, O., June 3d, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Sir:—In your issue of May 26th, an extract appears from the N. Y. Weekly Witness concerning secret societies, which was written without a thought that it would find its way to public print, but simply as a closing remark to a business letter, asking the change of address for my paper. As it has been published, and received some comment at your hands it may not be amiss to add some words that it may place me in a different light before your readers, or at least in a clearer light, although it will not have that result upon the minds of "lodge" members who may chance to see it as they have known me very well for some time past. In a word, then, that will need no explanation to you, and all those who are familiar with the workings of the system of Masonry, I am a poor, deluded "fanatic," a "crazy person," a "monomaniac" on the subject of Masonry.

For some time previous to this revelation in the minds of leading Masons where I formerly resided, it was evident apparently to some of them that I was not a bright Mason, in other words not to be trusted with the inner workings of the system; owing no doubt to the active part taken by me in church work and the little regard paid to lodge affairs. They saw apparently in this a dangerous symptom. One that would sometime in the dim future, work harm to the order, and they accordingly in a very quiet but positive way allowed the impression to go out extensively that I was a fanatic and an enthusiast on the subject of religion. The ground for this was mainly in the fact that I had dared to erect a family altar in a community where only the god of the lodge held full control; and in addition to this had taken the initiative step in erecting a house of worship in a village of some ten thousand inhabitants, where such a building had never stood. But this title or appellation did not seem to have the desired effect, for in spite of all opposition the church enterprise would grow, and the family altar remain. "Then sought they occasion" against me in other ways, but found none until a peremptory refusal to unite with them in the works of darkness, in corruption and dishonesty, led them to attack my business, overthrow it, and threaten me in every form with direat vengance. Since that time I have been followed with the most intense and unrelenting persecution, and everything held sacred and dear to me has been ruthlessly torn down and trampled under foot to appease their intense wrath.

It has no doubt occurred to the reader by this time that I must have been a Mason sometime in my life. Yes, that is true. After seeing what I thought to be the good influences of Masonry during four and a half years service in the late war, and being associated, before, during, and after the war, with Masons in the social relations of life, I was led in the spring of 1866 to take the first three degrees in Masonry in Jerusalem Lodge, No. 19, of Hartford, Trumbull Co., Ohio. Circumstances connected with that step, destroyed at once all active interest in Masonry, but I remained a nominal member of the order up to the past winter, at least claiming membership, although from what has since been made known to me, I was made the honored recipient by the lodge of what is known among them as the "Black Shirt" long before this.

An extreme degree of verdancy and want of perception must be my only excuse for not receiving knowledge of this much sooner than I did. This extreme verdancy on my part came very near getting me into serious trouble, however, on the foccasion of my visiting the old lodge in November last, and only failed on account of the small attendance at the lodge that evening and the faint-heartedness of those in attendance. At least I am fully constrained to believe that such was the case, owing to many things that have since transpired. Up to this time I had calmly rested in the assurance that the bad men in some places connected with the order tended to make it odious but have since learned, to my sorrow, that it is the system makes the men odious. Not only in some places is this true, but the tendency is in that direction everywhere. Previous to the war my residence was in Hartford, but since that time it has been in New York State, most of the time in the humble village of Salamanca in Cattaraugus Co., well known as the junction of the Erie with the A. & G. W. Railway.

It is in this latter place that Masonry met me face to face, and from a worldly standpoint may be said to have gained a great victory over me. This much has been said because of the accidental publication referred to at the opening. If your readers would be interested in a longer narrative it may be given at some future time should my life be spared. Masonry thirsts for my life as it does for that of many others in this day of perjury on the part of its members. But while life shall last, be the time long or short, I shall do all that lies in my power, for the overthrow of such a giant evil, and I believe that one of the great evils connected with the system and from which they derive great power, is in the nominal membership of so many good and honest men of our land, who do not know the power they are exerting in that connection, or who are held by a wrong estimate of the obligations they have taken. I would that they might read your paper a short time, it seems to me their views would change and they would take a stand for liberty and honesty.

The plan adopted by Mr. Ronayne, in giving the lodge work publicly, will do more to break down this vile system I believe, than almost any other way. He must be a very bold, fearless man, and I earnestly pray that God may sustain him in his great work. I wish he might go into western New York and open the eyes of the blind there, but there is need enough of him in all parts of that, and in all States; even here in Anti-masonic Oberlin, he would be very unwelcome to a large number.

With an earnest wish for your success in spreading the truth through all parts of the land and making the true light to shine in dark places by your publications,

I am very truly yours in faith,

Seward S. Palmer.

Suggestions from an Old Reformer.

Harrisburg, Ind.

I lived in Pennsylvania during the Morgan excitement, and moved to Indiana near forty years since, and had accumulated a fine property but lost it some fifteen years since by Masonic deceptions and perjuries. Some two or three years since Mr. Merchant Kelley [now dead] informed me of the Cynosure; I took it and have been well pleased with it and its merits would justify of the American people 5,000,000 subscriberz, and we must have it spread broad cast, or its equal, or we will retrograde into despotism and heathenism.

I find that people have to be educated up to a high standard before they will act in the Anti-masonic cause. Secret societies are generally popular, because those that belong hide their sinfulness, and they tell their neighbors and relatives that they are good societies, and they believe them, because they are ignorant of the facts in the case.

Mr. Kelley and I bought many books and tracts and gave them to those who would read them, and when we thought the proper time had arrived, we got Mr. Kiggins to lecture for us. The audiences were generally good until the time to organize the county, and then but few "put in an appearance," each, as it were, dodged behind the fence, and there waited to see what his neighbor would do before he would act in the matter. The secretists were very busy—reported Mr. Kelley and I crazy, and they also got up many parades, etc., evidently to hold and control the current of popularity, and they succeeded. Mr. Kelley got Mr. Wallace to print the Herald, and now Anti-masonry is more unpopular here than ever before (in my opinion). I have reflected much upon the matter, and have come to the conclusion that the present procedure will not win. We scatter our forces over too much territory, our attacks are too weak and we can't follow them up vigorously as they should be.

I suggest the propriety of massing our forces upon a small territory and push the secretists to the wall, annihilate their false pretensions, and educate the people up to the acting point, and then Anti-masonry would be popular and Masonry unpopular. The people would then take the Cynosure and help the cause liberally. This would enable us to go forth to other places "conquering and to conquer." I hope that you will give this suggestion due attention and reflection. The glory of the principles of our government is that they place us equal before the law, but the glory of Freemasonry is to place Masons above our laws.

A few days since I was telling a Freemason (of great business and wealth) that Judge Whitney, Master of a lodge at Belvidere, Ill., undertook to bring Keith to justice, a Master Mason of his lodge, for murder, and that the Masonic officers would not take him, but hid him a few days and then run him off. That the Judge then appointed officers who pursued and took Keith, and brought him back, and for thus doing the Masons of his lodge planned to murder him in the lodge. This Mason replied (and with great earnestness), "They ought to have killed him, he deserved to be killed." I then said, "You place Masonic obligation above law." He answered, "I do, it is above law." This shows clearly that a Freemason is disqualified to act as witness, juryman or judge in any case where one party is only a Mason.

There is another feature I dislike, that is for lecturers to treat the subject in a light or jocular manner. Secretists and their jacks say that if it is thus simple and childish, it is no part of wisdom to meddle with it, and are enabled to set in motion a breeze of contempt upon the Anti-masonic cause.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

MR. EDITOR:—Please allow me, through your columns to thank Mr. Avery and other friends at Galesburg, Ill., for the books and tracts treating on secret societies, which they sent me for the library at Bidelle Institute. I have circulated them among the students, and I trust that some of them have had their eyes opened upon that subject. One young man told me that the Masons had agreed to pay all the expenses of his initiation if he would join them, and that he had expected to have joined them the coming summer, but that he will not do it now. Truly,

R. M. HALL.

Elder Freeman's Work.

WHEATON, Ill., June 4, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:

I have just been reading A. D. Freeman's correspondence from the Centennial, Exposition and feel as though I want to express the pleasure it gives me, and my gratitude to God for this blessing so evidently bestowed upon brother Freeman, and the work in which he is engaged; and especially to say that I rejoice to hear that his time is so occupied in distributing tracts, books, and papers that he cannot "keep the many readers of the Cynosure informed of the interesting features of the great Exposition as they occur." Being one of the many readers of the Cynosure, (and that from the first issue) I feel intensely interested in the facts he has given, and if he can by the blessing of God continue to give us the same kind of facts and features, I for one shall be perfectly willing to get general information from other sources. I feel that he has undertaken a great and good work in the name of the Master, and that he especially needs that Holy Spirit which Jesus said should be given to his disciples to teach him what he should speak. He has my hearty sympathy, and shall have my prayers for his success. Yours truly,

JACOB GROVE.

OUR MAIL.

Zeri Hough, New Vienna, O., of the Society of Friends, writes:

"I am very sorry that we are not showing a bolder front against a sin that is largely influencing the church of Christ for evil. No man can serve two masters. The lodge is thoroughly anti-Christ, and the true follower of the Lamb should disclaim all connection with the works of darkness."

Andrew Mitchell, Philadelphia, Pa., writes;

"I am an enemy to secret societies and have been for more than fifty years. I took great interest in the abolitionists. I have signed many petitions to the British Parliament against slavery and have done what I could here since 1831. I am also a teetotaler. I have not taken a glass of liquor for forty-six years and I never tasted lager beer in my life."

J. H. Carpenter, Rockton, Ill., writes us that the Masons have been invited to lay the corner-stone of the new Court-house at the city of Rockford, Ill., on the 22nd day of June next. We have sent him a petition and a request that the invitation be withdrawn, to be circulated for signatures. Let us not allow this order to disgrace our public buildings with their heathenish rites, without doing all we can to prevent it."

John H. Clark, North Mills, Pa., writes:

"The people here are wedded to their idols. They are now as they were in the days of slavery, their eyes shut and their ears dull of hearing; and they have charity enough to cover or excuse anything that is popular, either in the church or out of it. Our last fall prohibition tickets were sent to a Presbyterian and to a Wesleyan brother and they left them at home for fear our present governor might be defeated. The churches do not come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. I want to vote the American ticket."

Luther Birge, Farmington, Ill., writes:

"I wish Mr. Ronayne could come here again but the expenses fall heavily on a few. Still it paid pretty well when he was here before. It opened blind eyes and softened some prejudiced minds; on the whole it did a great deal of good. Who ever saw anything more absurd practiced by sensible men than these rites practiced by Freemasons. Of all cursed institutions Masonry is the worst. One of my neighbors said to me if that was Freemasonry the Lord deliver him from ever joining them. I believe this would be the language of every one could they but see the absurdity of the thing."

Mr. Birge also writes that he has discontinued the Advance because it will not publish anything against secret societies.

C. C. Read, West Salem, O., writes:

"I am doing what I can for the downfall of all secret societies and the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom on earth; and for this glorious reform let us never cease to pray."

W. J. Dallas, Salineville, O., writes:

"I have ever been an enemy to slavery and secretism. I have spoken against them as a reproach to Jesus Christ and his cause, and because I have done this the hydra-headed monster put his horns against me and has brought ruin upon me so far as finances is concerned, but yet I give not up the ship. O God, how long! Break thou these cruel horns! The majority of business men belong to some secret order and a man who does not belong has but little chance; especially if he says aught against them. But God will break this evil yet by means of the Gospel I verily believe, and I trust through the N. C. A."

T. K. Bufkin, Lynnville, Iowa, writes:

"Send me the American Party tract I believe they are the thing, and I hope I can gain some votes by distribution for Walker and Kirkpatrick. The craft say I am doing a good thing for them, but I tell them they are getting neither good church-members nor Sabbath school scholars. One of my neighbors who joined them last winter has already become profane and refused to pay his church dues. Of course Masonic dues must come first now."

Jas. Reid, Simsbury, Conn., writes:

"My daily prayer to our Heavenly Father is that you and all associated with you in this reform may have grace and courage to persevere till all secret societies shall be a thing of the past. I am trying to help to bring this about and to introduce the Cynosure by giving it to my neighbors. I have not found a subscriber yet, still I believe it will find its way into some families here, and I know it will do them good. I am deeply conscious of the deadly evil of Freemasonry everywhere, especially among the professed followers of Christ; and I do believe some of them of my acquaintance are ashamed of it, but the oaths they have taken so terrify them that all seem afraid to renounce the monstrous iniquity, and try to content themselves by saying they have not been in the lodge for two or three years."

Too much Illustration.

That illustrative teaching is growing in popular favor is evidenced by its growing use in our public and Sabbath schools; and, by the way, the uniform testimony of history attests this truth, that wherever teaching is rescued from a selfish aristocracy to a broad, humanitarian institution, just so far does the study of life and nature go and grow together. In the grand old Hebrew economy this was especially seen; every parent being a divinely commissioned teacher, and ordered to present, not the simple, abstract rule of right and wrong, but its practical working in the past history of their fathers. And Hebrew teaching abounds in illustrations, comparisons, parables, so that the books of which they are composed are, and have ever been, the delight, the consolation, the enlightenment, of even the humblest minds, until no other words can compare with them for the hold they possess upon the Christ-loving heart the world over. What would have been the effect, if, instead of the pathetic history of Joseph, we had only the cold philosophy of his wonderful life? Had King David merely sung of abstractions, instead of comparing the Lord to a loving and careful shepherd, would a multitude of humble souls have taken to themselves the infinite consolation of those words? And what cold-blooded soul would have omitted the glowing comparisons of Isaiah?

Blessed indeed was it for Judea that to the "land which sat in the shadow of death light sprung up," when the greater Teacher came who taught "not as the scribes"—because "the common people heard him gladly."

An analysis of the parables, illustrations, and comparisons of our Saviour is a work of surpassing interest, for by reason of their wonderful presentation of actual, every-day life, we may view the daily life of the Jewish people, and by the lessons they teach, obtain a view of what man has been by nature, and may be by grace. The parables, illustrations, and comparisons of our Saviour are one hundred in number, and as we desire to know the proper character, limit, and aim of true object and illustrative teaching, we can surely find instruction in examining the highest model and most perfect example.

Regarding the character of these utterances, we find that of these one hundred illustrations, only six were concerned with visible objects: The Well in Samaria; The Little Child; The Feeding of the Multitude; The Fig-tree; The Washing of Feet, and the Supper. As a narrator, we find that Jesus related sixteen stories. Of direct comparisons there are thirty-five, and of indirect, forty-three. We find, then that Jesus appealed less to eye-gate than to ear-gate—the fewness of the visible objects used by him being very suggestive. It would truly appear that there is manifest danger in too frequently appealing to the eye. It may well be queried if the visible Levitical service did not more often materialize than spiritualize those who were often led astray by the very frequency of the exhibitions.—*Natl S. S. Farm and Garden.

Grapes are the most reliable and important of all the home fruits—not taking apples into the account. In my household of eight or nine persons and a good many visitors, we feast on grapes without satiety from their earliest ripening in August, until after the holidays in winter—six months in all; and making up thereby in large degree for the failure of peaches which quite often happens, for we use grapes also for canning and for jelly. But in order for all this there must be plenty of vines and diversity of kinds, so as to suit the various tastes, and by frequent change of sort at table prevent palling the appetite. To this end I would have not less than a hundred vines and nearly a quarter of an acre of grapes for my family vineyard. But we see most families, even where plenty of ground can be afforded, content to do with less than half a dozen vines, and thinking that one variety (Concord) is all they need to grow.

The Concord is truly "the grape for the million," because it will grow in all soils and bear all hardships and neglects; but the quality of the fruit is such as soon satisfies the appetite, but does not sufficiently meet the desire for a refreshing acid, nor give one a grateful sense of the blessing God conferred on man in the gift of the vine. The Delaware is a much better, though smaller grape, and the vine is less vigorous, requiring better soil and culture; but it is quite hardy and very productive; in fact, liable to overbear, so that the fruit needs to be thinned, especially while the vine is young. Next I would choose several of the varieties known as Rogers' Hybrids, as his numbers 3, (Massasoit), 4, (Wilder), 9, (Lindley), 19, (Merrimack), and 15, (Agawam), also Salem. The Eumelan I have found quite early, productive and good, though sometimes it is said to mildew, as is common with most of the finer grapes. This can be remedied mostly by dusting the foliage once a fortnight during hot weather, with flour of sulphur.

The Catawba is an excellent grape where it will thrive and ripen, which is very rare in Northern Ohio; but in southern parts of the State it commonly does well on dry and clayey soils, especially against the side of a building. It is one of the best varieties for late keeping and for jelly; but for these purposes, as well as for its pure and good flavor, the Iona is the best of all. It has done quite well on my own grounds, but a majority of those who have planted it complain that the vines grow poorly, and the fruit fails to ripen well. It needs good soil and culture, like the Delaware. Of the white grapes I would plant Allen's Hybrid and Croton, relying on sulphur to protect from mildew; and would get a vine or two of Lady, a new variety, seedling of Concord, which is remarkably early, of fair quality, and giving promise of entire reliability. The cost of the Lady is its only drawback, being one dollar to one dollar and a half each, while all the others can be had for fifteen to twenty five cents—much less by the dozen.

Old grape-vines in many cases fail to produce healthy crops, and there seems to be no remedy but to cut them away and plant new ones. A mixture of wood ashes in the soil at the time of planting, or worked in about the roots of bearing vines, is very beneficial as a fertilizer and a preventive of disease of grape-vines.—M. B. BATEMAN, Sec. O. State Hor. Soc.

Freemasonry at a Glance.

This exceedingly popular representation of lodge initiation, signs, grips, etc., will be given again in the Cynosure of June 22nd. Send on your orders now. If orders are sent after June 15th, there is no certainty that they can be filled. We furnish these extra copies at the following low rates: Three or more copies to one address, post paid at 3 cents each, single copies at 4 cents By Express, you to pay charges, 2 cents each.

DIRECTORS MEETING.—The Board of Directors N. C. A. will meet at the Carpenter Building, 221 W. Madison St., on Saturday, June 17th, at 10 o'clock A. M. Every member is urgently requested to be present to finish the important business of the year.

By order of the chairman.

Do the readers of the Cynosure read the Apocalypse? Prof. Stowe used to advise his students to read it, as they looked at pictures, without trying to ieterpret particularly its sublime symbols. The se symbols are photographs of scenes and events given by an angel to John; on the principle that animals are often used to represent men and things in politics, to instruct the popular mind. "The Image of the Beast," far more accurately represents Freemasonry than the Democratic 'tiger' does that political party.

BISHOP EDWARDS IS DEAD!

"Know ye not that there is a Prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?'

This great and good man was born in North Wales, May 5, 1816. He died at his residence in Baltimore City, Md., June 6, 1876, just after completing his 60th year. Brought to this country by his parents at five years of age, he was soon left an orphan. At eighteen years of age he embraced Christ as his Saviour; was licensed to preach about a year afterwards, and preached nine years as an itinerant in Scioto conference. In 1845 he was elected for one term editor of the Telescope, and four years later, 1849, he was chosen bishop, which office he held by re election till he died. Of his services as a shepherd and overseer of his great and interesting denomination, the United Brethren in Christ, The Religious Telescope, the organ of that body, is much more competent to speak than we; and we shall be happy to give our readers the benefit of its writing. We speak of him as connected with the cause which the Cynosure represents.

In May, 1868, Bishop Edwards appeared at our first National Convention at Pittsburgh. He was chosen moderator of the Convention and president of the National Christian Association then and there formed. The church of the United Brethren in Christ had been opposed to slavery and secret societies from its foundation by the labors of Otterbein, which began in Lancaster, Pa., and vicinity, as early as 1752. He was a German Reformed minister, but as that denomination had become formal at that day, and a great revival following his labors, the result was a new denomination which influenced and was influenced by the Methodist connexion, which it somewhat preceded in this country. From its origin the church of the United Brethren set itself openly against the anti-Christian corruptions and evils in human society.

In 1829 the General Conference adopted the rule:

"That in no way or manner shall Freemasonry be approved or tolerated in our church;" and not leaving the matter there they say: "Should any member of our church who may now be a Freemason continue to attend their lodges, or as a Freemason attend and take part in their processions, or if any member join the Freemasons, such member by such an act excludes himself from membership in our church."

Two prominent members of the Conference had been Freemasons and knew what they were voting upon. The vote of the Conference was unanimous.

In the year 1845-6, I lectured against slavery in Pennsylvania, and made the acquaintance of this interesting people. They treated slavery as summarily as they did Freemasonry. Two of their preachers became slave-holders by marriage. Conference ordered that "Unless they do manumit and set free such slaves within six months, they are no more members of our church."

In 1821 under the head "Liquor making," Conference ordained, that "no member shall be allowed to carry on a distillery."

In 1825 the Conference refused to re-ordain bishops, to avoid the pretense that they are a higher and separate order. They re-elected bishops every four years for the same reason. They wanted simple traveling overseers, after the pattern of Paul. And such was Bishop Edwards when he came among us, and became the first President of our National Association.

In the language of a Friend Quaker: The lodge had been snaking its way into the Brethren churches."—

"Still as the breeze yet dreadful as the storm."

It was the entrance of Satan into Eden. The first effect of an aggressive national movement on the lodge, like the touch of Ithuriel's spear to what appeared to be a quiet, whispering toad; was, to make it blaze up into a devil. At the next General Conference, Lebanon, Pa., after Bishop Edwards became our President, the issue was made and fought out by a handful of secret society men and religious worldlings, with a courage and constancy like that of the hunch-back Richard the III. on Bosworth field. Against the law and constitution and history of their church, for four mortal days they fought for darkness like devils transformed into angels of light. Bishop Edwards sent us in pencil, daily the progress of that fight; and when, at last, Christ triumphed, the good man's soul poured itself out in hallelujahs and hosannas to God. He presided next year at our first annual meeting in Farwell Hall. He attended and presided at the political meeting in Chicago where our platform was adopted.

His clear and comprehensive mind saw with great distinctness that no one denomination as such could resist the encroachments of these orders by mere denominational influence and rules. None could be louder in denominational professions than those who were destroying the Brethren church, and turning it into the common herd of Christians conformed to the world; and seeing the danger hanging over the church he had so long loved and served, he used to say of the National Christian Association: "This movement has not risen an hour to soon for the salvation of our church."

I went to visit him at West Sonora, Ohio, and spent a couple of days at his house. I shall carry the remembrance of that visit fresh till I meet him above. His house was a Mahanaim, where the angels of God met him. His little daughter once lay sick and supposed to be dying. She brightened up; said she saw bright and beautiful ones around her, and she said to her father: "Pa, they say to me, 'Not yet, not yet!' What do they mean Pa?" "They mean, my child," said the Bishop, "that you will not die now, but get well." "Did she die?" I asked. "She lives in the house yonder," said he, pointing to a house within view from his window. His religion was taken from the Bible, where "the powers of the world to come" meet and mingle with the persons and scenes of time.

He had the strength of a giant; the simplicity of a child, the heart of a patriot, and the nobility of a man. "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail from among the children of men." Let us humble ourselves under this stroke which has taken him from us in the midst of his usefulness. And let us pray that his mantle may fall from the chariot of fire which has taken him up from our midst.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

AT HOME FROM A PLEASANT TRIP.

I went down to preach at Oneida, Ill., to a church which I helped to form in the prairie grass, in a house which I assisted to dedicate. I was among familiar names and faces, and felt a joy to find how many of my old Knox College students have kept out of the lodge. But I had scarcely settled in my pleasant lodgings with an excellent family before I could perceive on all hands the "trembling" in the "host of the Philistines." The lodge-men expecting that I would "pitch into" and "abuse" them, when really in our smaller cities and villages there are very few Masons who understand the system and are only useful to the order for the payment of dues and by giving it the credit of their character and standing in society. Of course, such Masons do not need "pitching into" or "abusing," but enlightening. If they could see what portion of their Grand Lodge "dues" go to such wretches as Albert Pike, now at the seat of our Federal government, they would soon be "dropped for non-payment of dues."

The Congregational church in which I preached is prosperous, and united in their pastor, Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, but like its sister churches, it is being worm-eaten by the lodge. If anything can exceed the wonder that plain mechanics, artizans and village merchants should be willing to support such monsters as the "secesh" traitor and guerrilla Pike, and his confrere "Sublime Princes," it is that Congregational ministers and churches in Illinois do not see that when they harbor adhering Masons in their communion they are under the virtual control of the lodge. Their minister must be silent concerning its nature and principles, while wordy and gassy Masons are drawing in the young men of the town; and will ultimately but surely bring that church down to the level of their deism and hatred of Christ! If the subject could be fairly and fully opened and examined before them there would not be two opinions among the people of Oneida concerning the foul and horrible nature of the lodge.

At Galesburg I saw the old picture-gallery of faces of good men; and met for a moment Dr. Newton Bateman, the President of Knox College, and was glad to see prosperity returning to an Institution where prayers of godly men and women are yet to be answered. Dr. Bateman is a very courteous and capable man; and though, while depending on our Springfield Legislature for his office, he consented to act sometimes as Grand Orator for his "order," he now stands aloof even from the funerals of his Masonic brethren; while breathing no word against the lodge. I make all possible allowances for the man who can write and speak for Christ and Christian education as President Bateman did in his inaugural; but if this writing chances to meet his eye, let me urge the following thoughts on his understanding and heart:—

My Dear Brother:—1. You are a Freemason; have been their orator; and, unless slandered, you have advised enterprising young men, anxious to rise in the profession of teacher, to join the lodge as the road to promotion. Yet you are a professed follower of Christ.

2. Is, then, your sustaining this double connection consistent with true manliness and the fear of God?

3. The lodge is either what its friends or its enemies believe it is; either truth or falsehood, worship or blasphemy, good or bad; there is no middle or third supposition.

4. Is it right for you to confess yourself a Mason, as you do; to be quoted as such by the Galesburg papers; to keep, in short, a hidden connection with the lodge, to please Masons, and shrink from it in public to please the Anti-masons?

5. Is your influence over your young men right in the sight of Christ and your own conscience?

6. Are you not exposing every one of them to be sworn and swindled into the lodge? And can you meet those young men at the judgment seat of Jesus Christ with a clean conscience? If they miscarry, and lose their souls by the sorcery and deism of the lodge, how will you answer the question of their hopeless agony: "President Bateman, we loved and trusted you; and you had been in the lodge, why did you not warn us to escape its cursed meshes?"

Again; is not your known adhesion to the lodge a standing menace and defiance to the Congregational ministers of Illinois, who have for thirty years been voting square against the lodge? Are you not weakening their influence with their churches, which is already too weak? Is not your example fatal to them if they follow it, and fearfully obstructing them if they do not? And are you not, by your standing as a Freemason, obstructing and hindering the great popular movement for Christ which God is accomplishing by Mr. Moody? In Philadelphia and New York Mr. Moody expounded the text: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," as applying to the lodge; forbidding Christians to belong to it. But if they come away from the lodge, they leave you in it. Either you are in the lodge or you are not. If in the lodge, are you not deceiving those who hope you are forsaking it? If out, are you not deceiving the lodge? But you do not hesitate to admit and profess yourself a Freemason. You thus confess the god of the lodge before men; and that god is not Christ.

My respected brother, allow me to hope that you will shake this viper from your hand; that you will strengthen, not weaken, the hands of the Congregational ministers of Illinois, and especially the hands of the evangelist, Mr. Moody, by, at least doing as much as Bishop McIlvaine of Ohio did, who put in the papers the fact that he had now no connection with the lodge.

IN PEORIA,

I saw some of Christ's faithful ones, who assured me that our great State meeting there is still working like leaven in the mind of the city, and they are in good heart and hope.

In the cars home I met an old Knox College student, member of an Episcopal church in Chicago, who is in extensive insurance business. He has not only kept clear of the lodge himself, but assures me that he meets many respectable men who are Masons, who make no secret that they loathe it, and advise him to keep out of it. This he considered the best symptom of the reform.

I must not forget to mention a good brother and former student of Knox College who drove some miles over the prairies to bring his family to hear me preach at Oneida. He is himself an Episcopal Methodist, who has a daughter in Hedding M. E. College at Abingdon. This daughter lately, with the advice of her President, gave an oration against secret societies. We hope to get the manuscript and give it to our readers. One of the professors of Hedding College is openly and decidedly opposed to secret orders. Surely Christ will destroy that "wicked one by the brightness of his coming." This incident must encourage our Methodist Episcopal brethren much; and as Hedding and Knox Colleges are in the same county, and Monmouth is near by, we hope college education at the center of our State is to escape from the folds of "that old serpent who rules the world's darkness."

The Tract Work.

Our faith that God would send the money to pay for all the tracts that Elder Freeman can distribute at the Centennial, is being freely realized and we wish that brother Albert Honeywell's suggestion about distributing tracts on railways and steamboats might be carried out. We feel sure that the money for the tracts will be sent. Shall we have volunteers to distribute them? Bro. Honeywell of Harrisburg, Ind., sends us 46 copies of "Finney on Masonry," for which we credit him $11.50 for the Centennial Tract Work, and writes:

"I think that there should be an arrangement to distribute tracts on railways, steamboats, etc., at the Centennial. We must educate the millions and especially the young. The secretists are a demoralized set; like runaway horses they cost more than they are worth. Give me credit for Centennial Tract Fund." ALBERT HONEYWELL.

Let us not forget to pray for Bro. Freeman who writes that he fears he will have to give up and come home on account of the severity of his labors there. He has wonderful vigor for a man of over three score and ten, and we have suggested to him a way of performing his duties with less labor, and we hope that God will give him strength to continue in his great work. If you are not able to call on him and give him words of cheer, you can both write to him and pray for him. His address is Elder A. D. Freeman, Main Building, Centennial P. O., Philadelphia. You will find his stand in the south-east corner of the Main Building.

—Father Chittenden wishes to correct the figures showing his losses by the failure of manufacturing enterprises in this State, given two weeks since. They should be $1,500, instead of $115,—a severe loss for one of his age and state of health. His feebleness he fears will prevent his coming to the Convention next week; but his heart will be here and his prayers bring a blessing.

—The Grand Lodge of Indiana has come to the conclusion that the popularity of the craft will be increased by stringent temperance regulations. So last month an order was passed forbidding subordinate lodges receiving any members who used intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

—The New York Grand Lodge just met, has also had a spasm of virtue. They adopted a resolution prohibiting the sale of malt or spirituous liquors in their great temple in the metropolis. In regard to the implied fact that liquors have been allowed around the building for the use of thirsty members the Daily Witness says: "We have often seen it asserted by the advocates fo Masonry, that no intoxicating liquors were allowed in lodges, and supposed that this was the universal rule."

—The Free Methodist has the bad news that Rev. B. T. Robert's home at North Chili, N. Y., has been burned up, with a loss of $1,000 to its owner. As "General Superintendent" of the Free Methodist churches since their organization his labor, for them have been arduous and without salary; so they are justly helping him to re-build and so fulfilling Christ's law of burden-bearing.

—The number of Odd-fellows lost to the order in Illinois during 1875, was over 2500, and a lodge paper estimates the whole number throughout the States at 14,000 or 15,000, probably one half or more of the number initiated during the same time. The order appears to be only a caravansary, where travelers got lodged for a night and want no more of it; or, as the ranks of an army under fire fall and are filled up with new men, so under the cannonade of truth this secret organization melts away and is renewed from the young men. It is a testimony that no boasting or falsifying or parading can break down, that yearly $15,000 men in these United States get tired of the Odd-fellow system. After promising life-long fealty, paying a heavy tax, and submitting blindfolded to an hour's ridicule, the web seem, to be sufficiently strong to hold ordinary men, but 15,000 witnesses a year prove that the apple so fair-looking is rotten and bitter under the skin.

Religious Intelligence.

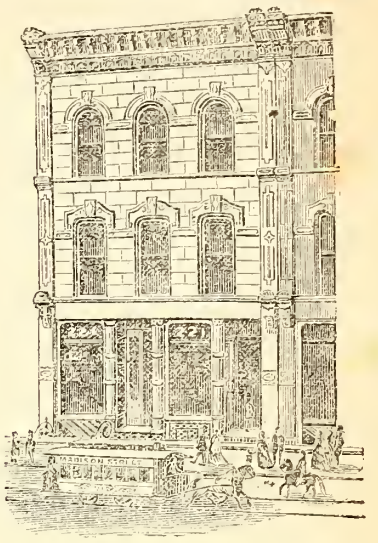
—Bible colporteurs are diligently and systematically scattering the Scriptures throughout the mountain religions of Spain.

—A register for all foreign missionaries for all countries will be opened at the Centennial Exhibition, in the Bible Pavilion, and for officers of societies also, in which to record their temporary residence in Philadelphia.

—The total receipts of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Union for the year ending March 31, were $258,678, or $7,528 in excess of the year preceding.

—According to the report of the Methodist Episcopal Bishops, the Sunday-schools now number 19,287; with 207,182 officers and teachers, and 1,406,168 scholars. This is an increase during the last four years of 1,732 schools. 13,203 officers and teachers, and 138,456 scholars.

—Bishop Stevens, the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Pennsylvania, has issued a circular to the clergy and laity of his diocese, requesting them to take a special collection in the churches upon the Sunday preceding the Fourth of July, as a Centennial thank-offering. The money will go to the Board of Missions.



—The New Orleans District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South has passed a series of resolutions condemning church fairs on several grounds. First, that they ignore the duty of the congregation to pay church debts as other debts are paid, second, that some of the methods of raising money resorted to at fairs are of doubtful morality; third, that fairs frequently create dissensions in the church, and fourth, that as a matter of financial policy, they are not the best means of raising money.

—On Friday and Saturday of last week Mr. Moody addressed Christians on the work of the Holy Spirit. Farwell Hall was filled each day, and the preaching was with marked effect. Mr. Moody, in no boastful spirit, but like Paul, told his experience, how the Holy Ghost had anointed him for his Master's service, and the expression of the congregation was almost unanimous when called on to seek personally the same blessing.

—The Illinois Agent spoke in Saybrook to full houses last week, and on Sabbath in the Presbyterian church at Pontiac, from thence he goes to Smithdale and perhaps Lyndon.

—Mr. Ronayne after successful meetings in Washburn returned to this city to work for the National Convention. This week he spends three days in Saybrook, Ill., 14th to 16th.

—Rev. L. N. Stratton is on his way to the Anniversary and reports of good meetings in Jackson, Mich., have reached us.

"Can Ye Drink of the Cup."

BY ANNA S. FISK.

Mark x. 38; Ps. lvii. 4; Ps. lxx. 10.

My foes have pressed me sore,
And their poisoned darts have thrown;
When I seek relief in prayer
I can only weep and moan:
For their hearts are hard and cold,
All my fondest hopes they chill;
But they cannot say me nay
If it be the Master's will.

Like a captive bird I pine,
And I beat my bars, and cry,
Then I feel each thought of mine
Hath a reader in the sky;
Then the lion's mouth is shut,
And the raging storm is still,
For they cannot say me nay
If it be the Master's will.

Have my chosen ones been false?
Ah! the wounds my Savior bore
In his house—the house of friends—
Did they plot the blow of yore.
He hath tasted every grief,
And hath borne my every ill:
And these cannot say me nay
If it be my Master's will.

Did He tread the press alone?
Were His garments dyed with blood?
Did His mockers wag the head,
As before His cross they stood?
Oh! then let me drain the cup
Which His foes and mine shall fill,
For they cannot say me nay
If it be my Master's will.

The Holy Spirit and Ministers.

When Christ commissioned his apostles to go and preach, he told them to abide at Jerusalem till they were endued with power from on high. This power, as every one knows, was the baptism of the Holy Ghost poured out upon them on the day of Pentecost. This was an indispensable qualification for success in their ministry. I did not suppose then, nor do I now, that this baptism was simply the power to work miracles. The power to work miracles and the gift of tongues were given as signs to attest the reality of their divine commission. But the baptism itself was a divine purifying, an anointing, bestowing on them a divine illumination, filling them with faith, and love, with peace and power; so that their words were made sharp in the hearts of God's enemies, quick and powerful, like a two-edged sword. This is an indispensable qualification of a successful ministry; and I have often been surprised and pained that to this day so little stress is laid upon this qualification for preaching Christ to a sinful world. Without the direct teaching of the Holy Spirit, a man will never make much progress in preaching the Gospel. The fact is, unless he can preach the Gospel as an experience, present religion to mankind as a matter of consciousness, his speculations and theories will come far short of preaching the Gospel.—Memoirs of Charles G. Finney.

Amusements—Are They Sinful?

I am not disposed to find fault with every modern innovation, with progressive ideas in the right direction; neither do I discard all changes or innovations in the church of my early choice, though they bear no mark of olden times. But that there are practiced many things to-day in the church, which I cannot fellowship, I frankly confess, such as Masonry, church-fairs, festivals, raffling; and last, but not least, playing croquet, backgammon, euchre, and the like. I would that the sanctuary of God were not invaded by these pleasure-seekers!

How would it grate on our ears to find it recorded in Wesley's or Asbury's journal; "Thought it good, to day, to rest awhile from incessant labors, and have a jolly time at a game of whist, with Bro. McKendree and Bro. Whatcoat"! When do their "sons in the Gospel" obtain leisure to practice what their forefathers and foremothers in Methodism would revolt at! Suppose ye, there can be found a Methodist preacher in the State of Illinois, professing holiness, who would be guilty of playing croquet? Can one be found in any place, who plays croquet or backgammon at the social gatherings? A festival was recently held not a thousand miles from our home, for the benefit of the preacher, at which one cake was raffled off for the sum of eighteen dollars; and I am told that a section-hand on the railroad was relieved of eight dollars in the Christian (?) operation. Is this right? Bro. Brooks, will some one in your next issues, define the difference between "raffling" and "lotteries"? We have fallen upon evil times. Zion bleeds and sinners are posting to hell, while many church-members look idly on, nor rush to the rescue. Let the alarm be sounded from every pulpit in the land, "No time for mirth or trifling;" for even now the Judge is at the door!—Banner of Holiness.

How to Study the Bible.

BY D. L. MOODY.

I once visited Mr. Prang's Chromo Establishment, in Boston, and saw the process of a picture. The first stone made hardly an impression on the paper. The second showed no sign of change. The third no sign. The fifth and sixth showed only outlines of a man's head. The tenth the man's face, chin, nose and forehead appeared. The fifteenth and twentieth looked like a dim picture. The twenty-eighth impression stood forth as natural as life. It looked as though it would speak to you.

So carefully and prayerfully read the Word of God. Read the same chapter again and again, and the twenty-eighth time Christ Jesus will shine forth. You cannot read the Bible as you do other books. The newspaper tells only what has happened; the Bible tells what will happen—the most interesting of all news.

I study the Bible topically, and spend two or three weeks on a subject, as "Love." Get a Cruden's Concordance, and a Scripture text book by American Tract Society. Scripture interprets itself. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned. You see God's love to you from Genesis to Revelation. Love always descends as a mother's to a child. So take faith. It is our privilege to know that we are saved. Take the promises. God's children are rich. Not one in trouble that God does not have a promise for.

He that overcometh shall inherit all things. God has no poor children. We are all rich.

Two or three weeks' study on such a topic as the promises would fill you so full you could not hold your tongue. Some people have nothing to say in a prayer-meeting. You cannot get water out of a dry well. The pump will squeak, and that is all. We shall draw the world to Christ when we are filled with religion.

Another way to study the Bible is to take one book at a time. Don't be in hurry. Read it over and over, and God will give you light. The sixty-six books are sixty-six battering rams for Christians to conquer Satan with. Try different ways of studying the Bible till you succeed.—Selected.

The Arithmetic of Life.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Smith in addressing the Senior class of Lane Seminary on Commencement day gave this graphic view of the opportunities of life:

Do you remember the inexorable logic of that remarkable arithmetical speech, which Thomas De Quincey made to himself and to some imaginary friend, when standing precisely where you are standing to-day, at the beginning of his work of life: "My friend you make very free with your days; pray, how many do you expect to have? What is your rental as regards the total harvest of days which this life is likely to yield? Let us consider." Then follows his arithmetic, which I give without his language. Seventy years of life yield 25,550 days. Remember, now, that twenty years have gone before beginning; before having attained any skill or system, or any definite purpose in the distributing of time.

Deduction No. one, for twenty years before beginning, 7,300 days; remainder, 18,250 days. Out of this remainder you have to deduct one-third at a blow, for one item, sleep. Deduction No. two, 6,080 days, leaving remainder No. two, 12,170 days.

Once more De Quincey says, on account of illness, of recreation and the serious occupations spread over the surface of life, it will be little enough to deduct another third. In the case of the minister it will be more, rather than less, for as I understand him, the time occupied in public speaking comes in here, but call it one-third. Deduction No. three, 4,060 days, leaves remainder No. three, 8,110 days.

Finally, he says, for the single item, which the Roman armies grouped under the phrase "corpus curare," attendance upon the animal necessities, eating, drinking, washing, bathing, and exercise, deduct the smallest proper amount from the last remainder of 8,110 days, and you will have less than 4,000 days in a long life, left for the direct development of all that is most august in the nature of man. After that comes the night when no man can work.

Four thousand days; one solid mass of time, amounting to eleven and a half continuous years. This, brethren, is your intellectual and spiritual working life to-day. Does it look small? It is priceless. Its value is incomputable. To what could I compare it? To the sparkling crown jewels of the Tower of London? To the glittering treasures of the Saxon Green Vault? To the massive jewelry of the walls, even of the Apocalyptic city? They cannot represent its value. Nothing can so well picture that as the Master's own Parable of the Pounds. This is the glorious inheritance which, in the name of the Master, I commit to your hands to-day with his own great charge! "Occupy till I come."

Curious Features of Japanese Houses.

The houses are one or two stories high, or partly one and partly two, and usually consist of verandas, a vestibule, an entry or entries communicating with various rooms and containing the principal staircase, and often a back entry, with one or two escaliers de service. The partitions are of movable screens covered with paper or matting. These screens are about six feet high, and in sections of a yard or so wide. At the foot of each partition a rail about four inches thick is laid across the floor, with a groove in which the bottoms of the screens rest. From the level of the top of the screen to the ceiling is a fixed frame or upper partition; and a slot in the bottom of this receives the upper ends of the screens, which being slipped into the slot, can be lifted enough to clear the rail at the foot, and allow the lower edges to drop into the groove, where they rest firmly like the shutters of a shop window. Thus at any moment any partition can be taken down, and two or more rooms, or the whole house, be thrown into one large apartment, broken only by the posts which marked the corners of the rooms. Doors and windows, as we use them, there are none. So much of the outer wall as is solidly built is unbroken by any openings. A screen left out anywhere gives a doorway, and the windows are simply screens covered with translucent paper. The frames or partition tops over the screens are plastered in the poorer houses; but in the better are filled with wood carved, often very richly, in open work, and sometimes of various kinds and colors. The outside of the veranda is open during the day; but at night is closed in with broad shutters put up in sections like the partition screens, completely filling each bay between the slight posts which carry the roof, and barred on the inside. These board screens of the verandas are closely packed by day in a kind of box or closet which is built at one end of the piazza, and at night are taken out and slid one by one into position until the last one, barred, completes a close wall all around. * *

The unit of measure of the house curiously enough, is the floor mat. These mats are always made of uniform size—about three by six feet; they are some four inches thick, so as to come to the tops of the rails in which the partitions are set, and are made of straw solidly tied or woven together with twine, and with a facing of fine-woven straw-work. The edges have a cloth binding of three-quarters of an inch wide, so that when they are laid down a cloth band of about an inch and a half defines their joints. Every room, and therefore, of course, every house, is planned to be floored or carpeted with a definite number of these mats. A twenty-mat room is considered in Japan, as it would be here, a good-sized room; and it is common to speak of a three-hundred mat house or five hundred mat house. All the partition and window screens, likewise, are of exactly one size, and also the board screens of the verandas, so that from one end of the empire to another any mat or any screen, shutter or window will fit its place in any house. Mats, screens, windows and shutters, in fact, are considered as furniture, not as fixtures. Houses are usually sold or let without them; and when a tenant quits or a proprietor sells a house he takes them all away, and leaves to his successor only a solid roof and floors, held together by a strip or two of plastered wall and a few slender posts, through and through which all the winds of heaven may dance.—American Architect and Building News.

He who cannot find time to consult his Bible will find one day that he has time to be sick; he who has no time to pray must find time to die; he who can find no time to reflect is most likely to find time to sin; he who cannot find time for repentance will find an eternity in which repentance will be of no avail.—Hannah More.

Children's Corner.

Shut the Gate.

Thought is action's ready gate,
Swinging to and fro;
Open early, open late,
Thousands come and go.

Shut it, latch it, friend inside,
Lest some tramp of sin
Think the gate if open wide,
Bids him enter in. —Wide Awake.

Slavery and Freedom.

A talk with the children who read the Cynosure.

BY EZRA A. COOK.

Children, what would you think of a boy that would allow a blacksmith to fasten an iron ball and chain, such as some criminals wear, to one of his legs; even if it was not very large or heavy? Suppose that after it was fastened and all could see that it hindered him in walking and running, he would say: "I don't care." What would you think of such a boy?

Suppose that by and by he grew larger and the band that held the iron ball began to pinch his limb so as to make him lame, and yet he kept it on until it hurt him so much that he could not get his lessons at school, or run and jump with his playmates. Would he not be very foolish and wicked thus to abuse his body?

Suppose that some people called him manly to bear the slavery of the iron ball, and that other boys began to follow his example and to call it fashionable to wear iron balls on their limbs, making them walk lame and slow; would that make all of you want iron balls fastened to you?

Now are not the bad habits which you allow Satan to fasten to you worse than such a ball-and-chain bondage of your limbs?

Is not a boy who begins to swear more foolish than one who would allow a ball to be fastened to his leg?

It makes all his conduct lame, and worse than all, by swearing he disobeys his loving Heavenly Father, who cannot hold those "guiltless who take his name in vain." Certainly it is a heavier ball than any made of iron. Is it fastened to any of you? Have it removed! Christ waits to help you.

Do any of you prefer to spend your time in learning to smoke and chew tobacco, rather than in gaining useful knowledge and acquiring cleanly and healthful habits?

Look out for the ball and chain. Tobacco makes slaves of its victims. Many a time I have heard a man say that he did not approve of using tobacco, but he began while young and now could not live without it. What would you think of the owner of a nice house who would chop up his chairs, tables, bedsteads and other furniture and burn them up and then, by degrees, chop down his house and burn it up in his stove and leave his family homeless, all because he was too lazy or too wasteful to provide suitable fuel? He would be a grief to his friends and a reproach to his Maker and would certainly receive punishment for his sin.

But what difference is there between such a man and one that wastes money enough for tobacco in twenty years to build and furnish a nice house? Many a young man wastes enough on cigars in ten years to pay for a handsome cottage; and worse still at the end of that time he is as truly a slave as ever a negro was in Georgia. Nor is this all. His mind becomes clouded by tobacco and he is less able to see his duties to God and to his family or neighbors than he would be if he was not stupefied with tobacco poison.

It is possible for you, children, to grow up slaves in this land of liberty, slaves to wicked words, bad appetites, pride, bad temper, and to laziness, slaves to Satan. There is another way in which older people become slaves. They join secret societies, promise to obey the command of their officers and thus are compelled to conceal things from persons who ought to know them. The society may be only a secret temperance society and possibly they may get into one which really does something for the cause of temperance. But the Bible says, "He that doeth good cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." Many a young man in Chicago has taken his first step towards ruin by joining the Good Templars or Sons of Temperance. Often have I found that membership in one of these societies has kept a young man or young woman away from Christ, because they said, "Good Templarism is a good enough religion for me." It has religious ceremonies and prayers. It is a kind of religion invented by men, not commanded by Christ. Hence it is a false religion, as bad as a heathen religion. Christ says: "In vain do they worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Wicked men often act as chaplains in all these secret orders and there is nothing in their rules against profane, vile persons thus having this position.

Secret Trade Unions have kept men out of work while their families starved or begged. When some of these men have attempted to work they have been murdered.

The Freemasons and Odd-fellows cast out Christ and often shield their members from punishment when they have committed crimes.

Some people say, "Freemasonry cannot be so bad when so many good men belong to the order." Good people have at different times been connected with great wickedness. Many Masons have a picture of George Washington dressed up as a Masonic Grand Master and you would suppose he must have been an earnest Mason from what Freemasons say about him. But the fact is that a few years before his death he wrote to Rev. Mr. Snyder, an old friend who had written to him about "presiding over the English lodges of this country:" "The fact is, I preside over none, NOR HAVE I BEEN IN ONE MORE THAN ONCE OR TWICE WITHIN THE LAST THIRTY YEARS." A man who attended church only once or twice in thirty years would not be a very good church member. Washington was not a very good slaveholder, he freed his slaves, and he was about as good a Mason. In his farewell address he warned the people against partial and selfish combinations.

With good reason we rejoice that our fathers a hundred ago had the courage to declare that this nation is, and of right, ought to be free and independent. But the country will not remain free if the people who form it one by one become slaves.

Do not let Satan fasten the iron chain of evil habits to you; but give your hearts to Christ while young and the truth shall make you free.

A Liar Struck Dumb.

In the South London Press an account is given of a soldier who was a prisoner in the military prison at Aldershot. He was performing some prison duty under charge of a warder, when the latter accused the soldier of speaking in violation of the prison rules. The soldier denied the charge with an oath, at the same time calling upon God to strike him dumb on the spot, if he was guilty; and sure enough he became dumb on the spot, and was unable to articulate a syllable. "Before communicating this statement," says the writer, "I made it my business to inquire about the case from those who are in a position to inform me correctly, and I find it strictly true. I inquired if it was not possible the man was feigning, or, to use the military phrase, malingering. I was informed that could not have been so, as he had been watched in his cell at night, and on all such occasions he was found bitterly weeping, which he continued to do day and night when he was not aware that he was watched. The army doctor told him that all he could do for him was to recommend him to pray to God to give him his speech back again. After remaining dumb for upwards of a week, his speech was restored to him." Surely "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord."

Home and Health Hints.

SAVE YOUR SOAPSUDS.—Who would throw away a barrel full of soft soap or a box of hard soap? Were it not otherwise useful it would be of great value as a fertilizer, if spread, in its raw state, about our fruit trees or berry bushes. But, after being dissolved in water and passing through the wash-tub, gleaning the imperceptible elements of the best manure from soiled linen, its fertilizing power is vastly increased. Indeed we may almost say that the average soapsuds from the kitchen and laundry is worth more than the soap which produces it. Do not, then, allow your soapsuds to run away, wasted, while you have trees which it might benefit.—American Garden.

FLOWERS ON DINING TABLES.—Nothing can equal the beauty and appropriateness of flowers at meal time, and during this season they should never for once be absent. It is a custom which should become universal among rich and poor. Even grasses and leaves and ferns add cheerfulness to the room, and to the hearts of those assembled around the board. Very pretty ornaments are made by uniting fruits and flowers. Such fruits as have long stems or grow on slender branches are better suited, such as strawberries, cherries, currants, gooseberries, etc. But no matter what the flowers and fruits are, or what may be used to put them in, let them be found upon the tables at this floral season. Set the children to preparing the dinner-table bouquets; it will prove a useful lesson to them, and beget a love for flowers and floral ornaments.

Perspiration of the feet, and the unpleasant odors arising from them, may be successfully treated by bathing them twice or thrice a week in warm water to which has been added a quart of bran to a gallon of water. When woollen stockings are worn by persons whose feet perspire profusely, they should be changed every day, and the feet washed every evening in cold water, and the soles vigorously rubbed with a coarse towel.

Warts may be removed by touching them three times a day with a stick of moistened pencil caustic. To cure catarrh, purchase a nose douche at a drug store, and with it apply every morning and evening, tepid water in which has been dissolved salt in the proportion of two tablespoonsful to a pint of liquid.

AN EXCELLENT CEMENT.—The following cement has great adhesive properties, and is said to be used by the Turks for fastening diamonds and other precious stones to metallic surfaces; and may even be used to unite the surfaces of polished steel. Dissolve five or six bits (tears) of gum mastic in just enough alcohol to render the gum liquid. In a second vessel dissolve a sufficient amount of isinglass glue (previously softened in water) to make a two ounce vial of strong glue. Add to this two bits of gum ammoniac (each about the size of a pea), which must be rubbed until dissolved. Mix the whole with heat, and when wanted for use, put the vial in hot water.—Sciences of Health.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicongrapher, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.

By Jeremy L. Cross, Grand Lecturer.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

The Relation and Duty of the Church and her Members toward them.

BY REV. J. G. CARSON, D. D.

Concluded.

Thus the obligation of secrecy, or to obey a code of unknown laws, is ensnaring to the conscience whatever be the form of the obligation, whether by promise or oath, because the Christian is placing himself in a position where for aught he knows, he may be under the necessity of committing sin, either by doing that which he feels to be wrong in order to keep his word, or by violating his word or oath in order to avoid doing it, and no man has a right voluntarily to place himself in a position where he must choose between two moral evils. If such an obligation were attempted to be imposed upon us even by lawful authority, whether civil or ecclesiastical, we should resist it to the utmost of our power as an infringement on our rights of conscience which God has left free from the doctrines and commandments of men. How much more inexcusable is it for any of Christ's people thus voluntarily to surrender the liberty they have in the Gospel, and without any constraint put their necks under this most grievous of all yokes of bondage.

But it may be said that every candidate before joining these orders is assured that his obligation will not conflict with his duty to his God, himself, or his fellow men, and that we have the testimony of many good men that they have found this to be true. It is sufficient to reply to this that we have testimony of many men equally good, that they have found that the obligation does conflict with their duties, as Christians, and accordingly have thrown it off; and so the one testimony will off set, and more than offset the other—just as one positive will more than outweigh a hundred negatives. But even were it otherwise, were there no such conflicting testimony, yet the assurance of any man or number of men, unless they are infallible, cannot justify another in surrendering his own right of private judgment. "Every one must give account of himself to God," and no one who is capable of judging for himself has a right to surrender his conscience any more than his understanding and his will to that of another, unless that other be infallible. Indeed this is the very essence of popery, which subjects the consciences of private members to the priests and ot the whole church to the Pope. But as Protestants, we claim that each individual has a right, and is bound to judge for himself as to what is right and what is wrong according to the only infallible standard—the word of God. The injunction, "Prove all things," is addressed to every individual, and no one can comply with it without having submitted what he is called to receive and obey, to the test of God's word. In this matter we cannot, we dare not, rest our faith on the judgment, or say so of any man or set of men. They may assist us in arriving at a correct judgment as to whether any given action or thing is in accordance with the Divine will. But we repeat, no one who is capable of judging for himself can, without entangling his conscience or surrendering his liberty, accept and act upon the simple assurance of another as to what is right or wrong in any given case, unless he know beforehand and have an opportunity of judging for himself; so that any promise of secrecy, or obedience to a code of unknown laws is utterly inconsistend with the genius and spirit of Christianity and no Christian who has any regard to the purity and liberty of his conscience can lawfuly assume such obligation.

Thus we have shown that the secrecy that belongs to all these associations is—

(1.) Unnecessary for any good purpose: (2.) Unwarrantable, incompatible with the character and position of Christ's followers as lights in the world: (3.) Dangerous to the interests of society and the purity of the church; and (4.) Ensnaring to the conscience, and so incompatible with each one's personal responsibility to God.

III. Anti-Christian and Profane.

What we have hitherto said applies to all associations or fraternities which impose on their members a promise or oath of secrecy or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws. The objecton we come now to notice, applies with particular force to such societies as the Masonic fraternity which, however, is the mother and model of all of them. While some of them may not be liable to all the objections which we present under this head, yet inasmuch as they imitate many of its anti-Christian rites and ceremonies, they are so far conformed to their model, partake of its characteristics, and must share in its condemnation. Therefore, we say that these associations are inconsistent with the genius an spirit of Christianity and church members ought not to have fellowship with them.

6th. Because the religion they profess to practice is anti-Christian, and many of their rites and ceremonies are shockingly profane.

That these societies have a religion is susceptible of demonstation, and is even admitted and exultingly claimed by their own writers and advocates. They have their religious rituals for different occasions, such as funerals, dedications, &c,—call their buildings temples, that is, places of worship; they have their hymns, prayers, altars, priests, some of them even sacraments, and profess to prepare their members for the lodge above, meaning heaven. Now what is this religion? It must be either Christian or anti-Christian; it cannot be neutral or indifferent. That it is not Christian is evident, because the very name of Christ and everything distinctively Christian is studiously and of set purpose excluded from its authorized services. We say authorized services, because whatever may be the practice of particular individuals or lodges, different from what is prescribed in their manuals, whether written or oral, can no more be ascribed to the order, than the crime committed by individuals or lodges without the approval or sanction of the society can justly be charged to that society. Now what is the religion taught in their manuals, and prescribed by the authority of these orders as such? We answer, simply bald deism. The God they worship, the Supreme Being whom they recognize is no more the Christian's God, the Triune Jehovah, than he is the God of the Jews, Mohammedans, or pagans. He is an imaginary being in whose worship Jews, Mohammedans, infidels and pagans, those of the most opposite opinions and beliefs, all, except Christians, can consistently unite. Indeed it is their pride and boast that in their temples and at their altars there is the utmost liberality, where all except Christians, can meet on a common level. They say, "except Christians," because they leave out their peculiarities as Christians, and so cease, for the time to be Christians while officiating or participating in these Christless ceremonies where there is no mention of the name of Christ, no recognition of sin, of atonement, or reconciliation by blood, nothing but a kind of heathen morality and worldly benevolence which their members are taught to believe will commend them to God and procure them admission to heaven or the lodge above. Thus in the language of the prophet Ezekiel, 43:8 verse: "In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, and their wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations." If, as is claimed in some of their degrees there is anything introduced peculiar to Christianity, it is only by way of imitation or caricature, producing a kind of mongrel mixture of paganism, Judaism and spurious Christianity, which like the religion of the colonists of Samaria is even worse than pure deism. This compromising of truth with error, of Christ with Belial, of the temple of God with idols, is the worst form of anti-Christ, and renders the religion of these societies near akin to popery, if indeed it is not even worse. How any minister, or member of the church of Jesus Christ can lend his countenance or encouragement to such a religion, even by his presence, much more by officiating, or taking part in such ceremonies, miscalled religion, so dishonoring to his Master and directly opposed to the very primary and fundamental principles of our holy religion, is, and must forever remain a most inexplicable mystery!

We have said that many of their rites and ceremonies are shockingly profane.

1. They profess the name of God by ascribing those titles to their officers which belong peculiarly to God and Christ, such as Most Excellent High Priest, Most Puissant Potentate &c.

(3.) They profane the Bible by perverting its meaning, and using the Book for purposes for which it was never intended. The employment of it as a symbol of Masonry, as an instrument to swear by, and carrying it in processions along with the sword of the civil magistrate can only be regarded as a superstitious, unwarranted and so profane use of that holy book. Their extracts and quotation from it in their lectures and elsewhere, are often garbled, mutilated, and most grossly perverted and profaned by leaving out the name of Jesus Christ wherever it occurs, and applying what has sole reference to him and his church, to their own orders. This can be easily verified by an examination of any of their authorized manuals.

Finally: The most sacred symbols of the Divine presence and divine worship are employed in such a way as can only be regarded as idolatrous and profane. Thus we find among the furniture of some of their lodges the ark of the covenant, the breastplate of judgment, Aaron's rod that budded, the brazen serpent, the white stone, the altar of incense, and many others, which where it was lawful to use them, were to be handled with the utmost reverence, and the imitation of which was forbidden under the most dreadful penalties: and yet which are now by these societies imitated, caricatured, and used for purposes for which they were never intended, with a blasphemy and profanity that is absolutely appalling. These things are done in their public processions, funerals, dedications and celebrations of various kinds, in the light of day, and in the face of the sun. Alas! that we should have to say it; with the silent consent or the active co-operation and unblushing approval of those bearing the name of Christians and even Christian ministers!!! And if these things are done in the green tree what may we suppose is done in the dry—in their secret conclaves, in their chambers of imagery where like those seen by the prophet Ezekiel, as recorded in the 8th chapter of his prophecy, they are found worshiping toward the east with their backs to the temple of God; i. e., worshiping the sun, and where, as we are gravely informed by some of their writers the worship of Tammuz and the Greek Adonis is revived under the name of Hiram Abiff! If a heathen temple were erected in our midst, alongside of our churches, with its sacrifices and ceremonies of idolatrous worship, it would excite such horror and indignation in a Christian community as would loudly clamor for its removal or destruction. But we have among us all over this Christian land, close beside our churches, built at vast expense, temples rivalling in splendor that of Solomon, where a worship is maintained as truly and really idolatrous as that of ancient Greece or Rome; and yet the churches of God are either indifferent spectators or active abettors! "Tell it not in Gath!" Is it any wonder that some of us feel, like Paul at Athens, our spirit stirred within us, to cry out with voice and pen against this great, growing idolatry, and especially to say to Christians, "Come out from among them and be ye separate and touch not the unclean thing." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." "For what fel lowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? or what communion hath light with darkness; and what concord hath Christ with Belial; or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel; or what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?"

Considering therefore the principles of selfishness which characterize all their organizations, their secrecy, and their anti-Christian and profane character are we not warranted in saying that they "are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity and church members ought not to have fellowship with them."

SECRECY

In its relations to the Family, the State, and the Church.

Address of Rev. M. S. Drury, before the Iowa Anti-Secrecy Association, at Western College, Iowa, April 26th., 1876.

Secret societies are enemies to the social compact, the state and the church. Socially men are brothers —"made of one blood to dwell on all the earth." The ties of brotherhood are therefore universal and inalienable. Neither selfish nor circumscribed.

Sworn or solemnly pledged systematic secrecy of one part of a community invades the rights of other parts, and disturbs the friendly relations between them, and therefore becomes revolutionary.

True friendship is essential to prosperity.

All the members of a community are in some way dependent upon each other by natural relations. But these true relations are broken when one part meets in seclusion and darkness from time to time, without the consent of others, equally interested; no matter what the avowed object, nor how smooth the apology may be. Just suspicion rests upon the acts which are hid, especially when criticism is shunned and investigation forbidden.

1st. The family is most nearly and sacredly bound together with ties of equal interest and tender affection. Who is too dull to see that these ties are weakened when the husband and father arbitrarily withdraws from the loved home to attend the lodge, and returns with sealed lips. Yes, it is arbitrary to go where wife and children are forbidden by darkened windows, locked doors, and palsied tongue. There is not one well informed and true wife in a thousand that will be satisfied with the frequent absence and doubtful associations of her husband. If indeed she is his equal, and not his slave, she has a perfect right to accompany him, and to know for herself the character of his associates, and the quality of his actions. The Freemason's mouth is nailed shut from his own wife; and the nail is tightly clinched with the penalty of death!

Even the grange obligation enjoins perpetual secrecy under a penalty of eternal expulsion and everlasting disgrace! No allowance for change of views, nor is there any provision for mercy. Will these things foster friendship and promote domestic and social happiness? It is not wonderful that men keep their families in ignorance of their lodge connections as long as possible, and often at the expense of truth. May not many of the divorce cases be traced to grievances occasioned by the virtual breaking of marriage vows in lodge connections?

But what of the example of lodge men who are often absent when home burdens and sympathies are needed? The children are approximating manhood and womanhood. As the father keeps late hours and doubtful company, why may not they? Is the safety and happiness of the social compact fostered by open and wise example, or by one of doubtfulness and proscription? When asked by a Freemason my objections to Masonry, amongst other reasons was given this one: that the marriage vows were morally broken by Masonic obligations. After hearing the arguments in the presence of his family, he retired; when the wife said with interest and deep emotion, "You have touched my husband in a tender spot. Now do all that you can to save him."

2nd. Does secretism interfere with the duties we owe to the State? Good citizens will be law-abiding. They will also produce as much as they consume. The best of citizens will produce more than they consume. Will Freemasonry bear the test of these plain truths?

The testimony of Daniel Webster is of undisputed merit. In a letter dated Boston, November 20th, 1835, he said, "I have no hesitation in saying that however unobjectionable may have been the original objects of the institution, or however pure may be the motives and purposes of the individual members, and notwithstanding the many great and good men who have belonged to the order, yet, notwithstanding, it is an institution which in my judgment is essentially wrong in the principle of its formation; that from its very nature it is liable to great abuses; that among the obligations which are found to be imposed upon its members, there are such as are entirely incompatible with the duty of good citizens, and that all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another and are bound together by secret oaths, are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government. Under the influence of this conviction it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths, and the formation of all such obligations, should be prohibited by law." The good sense of every American concedes the truth of these arguments of Mr. Webster.

It follows therefore that secret societies are enemies to civil government, and should be abandoned. An institution is known by its laws, "The virtue indispensably requisite to Masonry," (says the Craftsman, page 216) "is secrecy."

I will quote part of the oath of a Master Mason: "I will keep a brother's secrets as my own, when committed to me in charge as such, murder and treason excepted. I furthermore promise and swear, (or affirm) that I will not be at the making of a woman a Mason, a young man under age, an old man in dotage, an atheist, madman, or fool, knowing them to be such. That I will not wrong a brother, or deprive him of his good name, or suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it; but will apprize him of all approaching danger, so far as it shall come to my knowledge. That I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, daughter, sister or mother, knowing them to be such."

Now it is seen that this oath obligates the initiate to befriend his brother in all crimes less than murder and treason, by keeping them securely in his own breast, and apprizing him of all approaching danger.

The Craftsman further says, on page 216, "That so great stress is laid upon it— secrecy—that it is enforced under the strongest penaltics and obligations." He also swears "not to wrong a brother nor deprive him of his good name." But it is no Masonic offense to defraud and slander those who are not Masons. And is there not a general license given by necessary inference to all Master Masons to abuse all women excepting only relatives of Master Masons, and even them only when known to be such? Does not this excel Mormonism, and drive civilization back to the dark ages? The license here given is more corrupting than treason, and the crime committed under this license often as cruel as murder! Let no Freemason complain of licentiousness; seeing his very oath by forcible implication, inaugurates and protects libertinism!

But the Royal Arch degree must be examined. In this degree the candidate swears to assist a brother Royal Arch Mason "When in any difficulty, and to extricate him from the same, whether he be right or wrong," under the penalty of having the skull smote off and the brains exposed to the scorching rays of the sun. See J. Q. Adams' Letters on Freemasonry, pages 328 and 329. Can good citizens take these obligations, add the weight of their influence to the fraternity continually, and remain good?

The question may be asked, "Are there not some good traits about Masonry?" Yes, it may be answered; at least there is a gloss about it that looks well from a distance. A Masonic clergyman said to me lately: "Take away the help given to Mason's widows and orphans, and you take away all that is valuable in Masonry." But is this not Christianity to care for the unfortunate? It is therefore stolen by the fraternity and used for the purpose of advantage, and is therefore selfish. Benevolence is a Christian and not a Masonic virtue.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pagenes,

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved huudreds of yonng men from the lodge, bnt there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Frec Tracts.

Dnring the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitonsly sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but fnnds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be gladto circnlate thonsands of pages of Antimasonic literatnre if they conld have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosnre Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20ccnts. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimitednnmber of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is anexcelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has fnrnished the public over 150.000 pages ofthese tracts during the past year.

Gain in one week, 48

The month of May was full of hard work for almost every class of people, but especially for the farmers. A farmer's wife said the other day, "It is wonderful what a power of work has been done on the farm this spring."

But the work does not crowd so hard just now, and we hope our friends will try the rest there is in change and work for the new subscriptions.

Where the agent does not want commission, club rates may be an inducement as they make the paper very cheap (See last column sixteenth page). We have this week received a club of five frrm S. P. Poole of Bellevue, Michigan. He writes: "I mean, by the grace of God, to put the Cynosure into at least TEN FAMILIES THIS YEAR."

Are there not one hundred readers of the Cynosure who will make a strong effort to send at least ten new names this Centennial year; and leave our press OUT OF DEBT January 1st, 1877?

Orders come in for the photograph engraving "SIGNING THE DECLARATION" (see advertisement) and we hope to fill them in a few days.

Does your subscription expire in June? Please renew promptly. In July? Can you secure a club to forward with your renewal?

We are glad friends remember that we have bills to pay. The "debt" grew considerably in May and stood the first of June at $1,679.61. Debts are worse than weeds Keep them down this summer. We are doing our part. Are you?

One friend sends $6.45 towards the Centennial tract fund, one renewal, one new subscription, an order for books and writes: "I have spent one day in trying to get subscriptions for the Cynosure with the above results.

* * I felt an especial interest in the Centennial tract business. It seems that there is no other place where a dollar could do so much missionary work and my heart exults in a glorious hope."

This was a good day's work. Can you put in a day occasionally? These "day's works" help along wonderfully.

We are willing and glad to allow those who work for the paper commission on the subscriptions they take, see "TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE" in another column.

Topics of the Time.

The Sunday School Times made a popular stroke in preparing an exercise for its constituents appropriate for this Centennial time, and not the least of its merit are the communications from President Grant and Gen. Howley of the Centennial Commission. The message of the President makes us wish to forget his horse-jockey proclivities and remember him rather for these words: "My advice to SUNDAY-SCHOOLS, no matter what their denominations, is: Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of your liberties; write its precepts in your hearts, and PRACTICE THEM IN YOUR LIVES. To the influence of this book are we indebted for all the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future. 'Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people.'"

Rev. S. A. Mowers, delegate to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference from the church of the United Brethren in Christ reports his fraternal visit at length and marks the many cheering features of the great meeting. One point he mentions however places the Conference in a serious light. He says: "Their caucusing and filibustering detracted largely from the dignity of the body. I have never attended any political conventions; but I cannot see how they could exceed this body in some instances at least. Some of the elections to important offices were carried by this political trick. This element, as I conceive, contributed largely to the defeat of one of the best editors in their church." This is a partial explanation of the appointment of Dr. Fowler to the editorial chair of the New York Christian Advocate, the leading paper of the denomination, which has been ably conducted for twelve years by Dr. Curry. Many could not understand why the brilliancy of the new editor should out-weigh the homelier but stronger graces of the old But in a game of wire pulling the former has the advantage of the Mason's "grip"; and since he was not above using his influence for the advantage of the lodge while in this city, it is not too much to presume that he would lose lodge influence for his own promotion in Conference.

—The last and stormiest of the Republican National Conventions adjourned last Friday at Cincinnati, after nominating Gov. R. B. Hayes of Ohio and William A. Wheeler of New York, for President and Vice President. At no time in the history of the party has the struggle over rival candidates been so sharp or long. When men of such positive natures and long practice in political arts as Blaine, Morton and Conkling run for such a prize the contest does not lag. Bristow was a no less decided character but his efforts for the nomination were on the part of the people alone. As is often the case, these aggressive men who stood at the fore front were, after seven ballotings, dropped and one less demonstrative chosen. Mr. Hayes is well known and popular in Ohio, where he is now serving for the third time as Governor, and where he was elected last fall against the combined forces of Romanism, Democracy, and soft money to which it is presumed he is opposed on principle. Mr. Wheeler is a native of northern New York, in the vicinity from whence sprung the eminent Nathaniel Colver. He has been many years in public life, yet has the highest respect of his immediate constituency. He is best known for his service in settling the Louisiana difficulties of two years ago. The measures originated by him as chairman of the Congressional committee were the basis of settlement in that unfortunate affair. The ticket thus presented is an exceptionally strong one from the absence of many objectionable qualities usually found in candidates.

While the final result at Cincinnati has been the defeat of party machinery and a repudiation of the corrupt practices at Washington, yet the secret society development there was alarming. The sudden appearance of anti-Catholic organizations last year was soon forgotten, but they did not die so soon. A New York Times reported that the Blaine delegates made good use of their claim that in Ohio were from five to seven thousand Democrats, members of these orders, who would vote for their candidate, and in New York were one hundred thousand bound to Blaine by the same secret tie. The Tribune stated lately that gentlemen on the Tilden ticket in that State last fall admitted that if the election had been ten days later, the secret orders in connection with the school question would have defeated them. These indications mean that party rule is being transferred to more dangerous head-quarters from which political reformation will never spring.

Day of Promise Coming!

AS SUNG BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

Behold the day of promise comes,
Full of inspiration!
The glorious day by prophets snng
For the healing of the nations!
Old midnight errors flee away—
They soon will all be gone;
While angel voices seem to say,
The good time's coming on!
O the good time—the good time—
The good time's coming on!

Already in the golden East
The glorious light is dawning;
And watchmen from the mountain tops
Can see the blessed morning.
Throughout the land their voices ring,
While all the world is wondering!
And e'en lodge-men begin to spring,
As they hear the thnnders rnmbling!
O the good time—the good time—
The good time's coming on.

The captives now begin to rise
And burst their chains asunder!
And politicians stand aghast
In anxious fear and wonder!
The boudman shall no longer sigh
Beneath his galling fetters:
He's seen the dawn of Freedom now,
And reads the golden letters.
O the good time—the good time—
The good time's coming on.

And all the devil's distilleries
Shall burn and fall together;
Tobacco, brandy, beer and wine—
And all snch whatsoever!
The World e'er long shall feel the fire,
And soon the poor besotter
To save himself from burning up,
Shall jnmp in the cooling water!
O the good time—the good time—
The good time's coming on!

And men redeemed no more shall bow—
To oath-bonnd clan or cabal;
Nor trade rings shake the nation's good!
But truth shall make all stable;
And rum, and ring, and cable-tow,
Sword, apron, sash, and buckle
Shall all at last to limbo go,
While honest hearts shall chuckle!
O the good time—the good time—
The good time's coming on!

Societyism, Secret and Other.

Odd-fellows know how to make a display, and of course theirs was an imposing celebration. "Four thousand Odd-fellows in Line—Brilliant Parade—Speeches at Ford's Opera House—Banquet at Masonic Temple"—that is the way the report of their demonstration is head-lined. No doubt it was brilliant and all that. No expense is spared to the pomp and ceremony of the order. It has the money and it has an object in spending it thus. Immense sums are paid into its treasury, and only a moiety is spent for the professed objects of the institution. There is enough left for the leaders to make a good thing of it, and for brilliant parades and grand banquets besides. And these gorgeous displays pay. They attract and captivate the multitude, and draw in members and money. People like shows, and in many a breast the ambition is thus aroused to become showmen also.

The speeches reported are about of the usual tenor. Boasts were made of the "colossal organization" and its "helpful benevolence," though the proportion of the amount received that was paid out in "helpful benevolence" is not reported. "Odd-fellowship," it was said, "is a great secular institution; it does not supercede with religious teaching," whatever that may mean. But the same speaker who made this last remark, probably intended to remove religious scruples, also, after answering the question why women are not admitted into the order by saying "woman is instinctively charitable, humane and good, and needs the influence of no association to evoke those sentiments in her bosom," also made this closing exhortation: "Let us, my friends and brothers, by the adoption of all the means that good fortune has placed in our possession, lighten the burdens of humanity, and the measure of our well-doing will increase our happiness on earth and insure our happiness eternal." All of which he would have us believe, "conflicts with no creed"—an opinion which perhaps some professing Christians who are Odd-fellows blindly accept.

The "Protestant Episcopal Brotherhood" made no great show beside the secret society demonstration. But there were some noticeable things at their meeting for all that. There were speeches there also, and their tenor was in opposition to secret societyism, which is particularly gratifying as emanating from Episcopal clergymen. One of them said: "Christians should rise in their strength and do the work that these secret organizations are doing. One result of allowing these secular societies to do the work of the church, was that the minds and hearts of their beneficiaries were losing their religious convictions. When a member distributed the charity of the lodge, comforted the widow or educated the little ones, nothing was said by him about religion. The speaker said that it was his conviction as a Christian minister that notwithstanding members of secret orders "might be faithful in all the relations of life, they rarely ever entered a church, and were fast losing the conviction that there was any necessity for a belief in Christ." All of which is undoubtedly true. Another expressed it as his conviction that the "warfare against secret societies must in the end be successful," then went on to say: "The Protestant Episcopal Brotherhood goes forth as the agent of the church of God. It was for the laity to band together in this beneficial association of the church of Christ, and thus take the place of the secret organizations, which were an obstacle to the ministers of the Christian religion, which tended to evil and to lead to a distaste for the church."

This all seems well. It is highly gratifying that the evil of secret socie tyism with its deistic principles and Pelagian practices is recognized in its hostility to the church of Christ. But we cannot suppress the question; Why all this societyism, even in the church? Why must there always be an association other than the congregation of saints to do the saints' work. The remedy for the evil is not in aping Rome with its numerous orders; not in the formation of an aristocracy in the church; but in arousing the church herself to do her work in the Lord's name and give him the glory. The congregation of believers is society enough.—Lutheran Standard.

How do you Outsiders Know?

BY D. B. TURNEY.

How are outsiders to know anything about the secrets of the Masonic order? This question is gravely propounded by more than one adhering Freemason. as if to settle all controversy concerning the claims of their institution.

Well, I admit that the orations, sermons and eulogies which adhering Freemasons have published, teach us nothing of the secrets of the craft. They do not even contain the oaths that are required of all who join. These publications are of no value. They are written for the purpose of beguiling young men into the mystic ranks, and their bombastic twaddle is merely nauseating to those who have correct information concerning the origin, growth and design of the order. It will not be difficult at all to show the utter ignorance or the gross dishonesty of the men who have eulogized Freemasonry, when we come to examine the character of the institution under the light of clearly established facts. I, then, discard the written works of adhering Freemasons. The points of Freemasonry that need to be understood, to test the moral tendency of the order, are the very points that these men do not and dare not publish to the world. They are under oaths that enslave their pens as well as themselves. And the oral testimony of adhering Freemasons, cannot be taken; for they, too, are sworn by the blackest oaths to conceal the secrets of the order. The late President C. G. Finney, commenting on this fact, remarks:

"When adhering Masons are asked if the books in which Masonry has been exposed are true, they will either evade the question or else they will lie; and they are under oath to do so." That is Finney's testimony.

Still, how are outsiders to know? That is the question, and I will endeavor to give it a suitable answer. I am an outsider myself. I never have been a Freemason, and have never wished to be. But I probably know what Masonry is, better than some of the fraternity.

1st. I have studied the published testimony of those who have taken the degrees, but who afterward, from conscientious motives, have renounced Freemasonry as a deadly error. These renouncing Masons concur in giving the same kind of testimony as to the abominable nature of the oaths, the terrific penalties, and the disgusting items of initiation, etc. These men, at the hazard of their lives, declare with one accord, and many of them under the sanction of judicial oaths administered by legal authorities, that Morgan, Bernard, Ronayne and others have correctly revealed Freemasonry. These men who have thus testified on oath to the essential correctness of the expositions of Freemasonry as it was and as it is, have been some of the most conscientious men of the nation. But when we point to the exposures of Freemasonry, we are told that the persons who wrote and published those exposures of the order thereby perjured themselves. Hold! This very accusation is an admission that these renouncing Masons have published the truth, and every adhering Freemason who accuses them of perjury, thereby admits that they have published truly and correctly the secret of Freemasonry. Moreover, by accusing the revealers of the order with the charge of perjury, they violate their own oaths of secrecy by admitting that these renouncing witnesses are entirely credible, and have revealed Freemasonry just as it is; for unless these revealers have really published the secrets of the order, there has been no violation of their oaths of concealment, and those who accuse them of perjury, have merely given breath to words of falsehood and slander against their brethren of the cable-tow mystery. Let this be remembered. By their own conduct, in thus hurling the charge of perjury, the Freemasons in this country unwillingly have testified to the correctness of Mr. Ronayne's revelations; and if it be so that it is perjury to reveal the secrets of Freemasonry, it follows that every Mason who denounces Mr. Ronayne as a perjured man does, by that very accusation, become a perjured man himself, since he thereby admits the truthfulness of Mr. R.'s revealments and violates his own oath to conceal and never reveal.

But has Mr. Ronayne committed perjury, by publishing the mysteries of Freemasonry to the world? Not at all. What is perjury? Is it not the disregard and violation of an oath regularly and lawfully administered for governmental and judicial purposes? Masonic oaths are extra-judicial, in every possible aspect of the case. The lodge has no lawful right to ask, and the "Worshipful" Master has no authority, civil or judicial, to administer an oath. And the candidate himself, under the circumstances, has no moral right to take an oath at all, since it is wrong to bind any man in advance of his knowledge concerning that by which he is to be bound. "Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, than shall he be guilty in one of these."—Lev. v. 4. Those adhering Freemasons, therefore, who accuse Mr. Ronayne of perjury, merely beat the air and foam out only their own shame.

Renouncing Freemasons are competent witnesses. A personal knowledge of the subject enables them to give true and faithful testimony, and they can have no motives for deceiving us, when testifying at the admitted hazard of their own lives. They are credible witnesses, too; for their testimony is voluntarily given against themselves. They confess their own sinfulness in taking those base vows of oath-bound concealment; they admit that they did wrong by giving their countenance to Freemasonry; and they acknowledge themselves to have been guilty of some part in sustaining a dangerous institution. Besides, they give their testimony with the full knowledge that they will reap a harvest of unrelenting persecution, understanding that adhering Freemasons are under Masonic oaths to pursue them with reproaches and visit condign punishments upon them. It is a fact that cannot be denied, that adhering Freemasons have persecuted, and still defame anybody who reveals the secrets of Masonry, just as far as they dare. Now, certainly, we may very well credit witnesses who testify under such circumstances. With no conceivable motive for deceiving the public, they have testified to things that have imperiled their own lives, because the testimony was wrung from them by the upbraidings of a Bible-enlightened conscience. It is mere madness to discard their testimony.

Besides, no Freemason has ever dared to deny under oaths of judicial administration, involving the pains and penalties of legal perjury, the credibility of the books revealing Freemasonry, and if such a reckless man could yet be found, hundreds and thousands of other men would confront him and prove him to be guilty of perjury. But hundreds of renouncing Masons have gone before the proper courts and civil authorities, and have sworn, under the penalty of legal perjury, that the oaths and other secrets professedly revealed in these books, are truly the oaths and secrets of Freemasonry correctly exposed. And the records of the Legislature of Rhode Island soon after Morgan's disappearance, and Hon. John Quincy Adams' letter to Mr. Livingston, prove that adhering Masons admitted on oath that the oaths published by Morgan, Bernard and others, were truly the oaths taken by themselves and other Freemasons. From these sources, outsiders may know full as much about the secrets of the Masonic order as the adhering Freemasons themselves. I know, although the great mystery of abomination does her work shrewdly:

1, That the credibility of the books revealing Freemasonry, has been fully, fairly and clearly established—and the Freemasons know the same fact.

2d, That any Freemason who says that the secrets of the order have never been revealed, is either to be pitied for his ignorance, or to be shunned for his untruthfulness—and many thousand American citizens sanction the correctness of this statement.

3d, That when Freemasons deny on oath that their oaths, etc., have been correctly revealed by Morgan, Bernard, Finney, Ronayne and others, it will then be time enough for them to pretend that outsiders do not know the secrets of their order—and others know this fact, too.

4th, That Freemasonry is at variance with the fundamental principles of a Republican government—and the Freemasons are the self-bound serfs of the mogul of mystery, as must be admitted.

5th, That the awful profanity and blasphemy of many Masonic oaths ought to induce every conscientious man to escape from the entanglements of that order at all hazards.

But what of all this? Masonry is entrenched and fortified. It controls our conventions, and locks the wheels of our general conferences. As a representative to the last General Conference of the Methodist church, I presented a very mild resolution against Freemaaonry, which was voted down before it could be discussed. We have but one course left us. We must carry this fight into politics, and drive Freemasonry before the suffrages of the ballot-box into that obscurity which it so justly deserves.

Let the American party put a State ticket into the field. It will have more votes than anybody thinks. All are not slaves. All are not sold, soul and body, to the lodge.

WOBURN, Ill.

Moral Principle Shattered by the Lodge.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have thought it might cheer your readers and encourage you to know that such letters as the following can now be published in a spirited country paper, having a circulation of 1,500, (Meigs Co. Telegraph, Ohio), in a section of country where one year ago Anti-masonry was unheard of, and the lodge thought to be quite impregnable. W. T.

WILKESVILLE, O., May 24, 1876,

Before entering further on the argument in respect to the influence of Masonry on morals, let us observe that there are four things which are essential to good moral character: 1st. There must be the principle of rectitude, or honesty in business matters; 2nd. Truthfulness in statement or representation; 3rd. Such a recognition of one's relations to God as shall produce a fear of him or reverence of his name; 4th. Benevolence, or a regard for the welfare of others—call it charity, if you will. The State, which does not claim to be over-religious, requires all this of its public servants. If then, an institution requires or inculcates even the occasional practice of fraud, falsehood or profanity, or if, by its direct influence, it dries up the fountains of charity and nurses human selfishness, then it must weaken the moral principle, it must injure the moral character of those who belong to it, of those who are educated by it, or who adopt its moral principles, or come under its influence. And all this Freemasonry does in the ceremonies, oaths and instructions of the lodge; and the principles taught and practiced there are too often carried into practice out of the lodge, as we have seen. For example, the Entered Apprentice's oath is obtained by fraud. When the candidate stands in the ante-room these words are addressed to him: "You seriously promise upon your honor, before these gentlemen, that you will cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of the fraternity;" to which an affirmative response is given. But this is the trap by which the green, unwary youth is caught—the net in which he finds himself entangled. If he knew that on his making that promise, the order will be given to "proceed to take off your clothes," and of the humiliating ceremony he is about to pass through, and the profane oath he is about to take, "never to reveal any of the secret arts, parts or points of Freemasonry which have been, or may at any future period be communicated to him;" and of the horrid penalty of having his "throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots, and his body buried in the rough sands of the sea," and finally perdition to his soul, he would rarely give that promise which is given in the ante-room. A minister in an adjoining county, understood to be an adhering Mason, and who is certainly being used as a stool-pigeon for catching wild game, said to me in reference to those penalties, "I don't like those imprecations, and I never would have taken them if I had known what was coming." It is because the poor dupe does not know what is coming that he consents to take the profane and wicked oaths, nearly naked, blindfold, on his knees, and with a cable tow about his neck, repeating word by word from the Master's lips.

2. Falsehoods are uttered in the ceremonies of the lodge, and almost without end: such as that Masonic oaths "do not interfere with one's duties to himself or his country, or his God;" that the greatest and best of men in all ages have been encouragers and promoters of Masonry; that King Solomon was Master of a lodge; that Hiram Abiff was murdered for refusing to give the Master's word, buried in or near the sanctum sanctorum of the temple, and an ingenious and costly monument erected on his grave, of which a minute description is given; that Moses returned from Babylon, found the lost Bible and with it the lost Master's word; that the Apostle John was a patron of Masonry!—a thousand years before the simplest and rudest lodge of operative Masons was set up, and nearly two thousand years before speculative Masonry was invented! The Apostle John, the disciple of Him who said "I ever spake openly to the world and in secret have I said nothing," and who had received the charge from his Divine Master, "That which ye have heard in the ear, proclaim ye upon the housetops," he a Freemason and patron of Masonry! It cannot be that a majority if any of the Masters believe these stories, when they mouth them to the newly made brother. Nor can we call the whole ceremony a mere theatrical performance, for the ceremonies are profusely mingled with prayers, oaths and religious instructions. These stories and many more are sheer falsehoods, got up to give respectability to the institution; and the lips inured to the utterance of such things in the lodge, easily learn to equivocate and bear false witness out of the lodge. Thus I found when I circulated copies of the Master Mason's oath, (old work,) because the wording is slightly different from that used in the new work, though the substance is the same, Masons were found to deny that any such oath is ever taken by them. I am glad to say, however, that there are some Masons in this neighborhood who do not deny it.

3. Masonic oaths and many other parts of the ceremonies are profane and wicked. I cannot here go into any discussion of the nature of an oath; except to say that it is an appeal to God as the Righteous Judge. But if an oath is ever lawful, it is when and only when some great interest is to be defended or the performance of some great and important duty secured, and which would be endangered by the omission of the oath. The oath does not create the duty. It is simply a bond to insure the performance of the duty—as of a payment of a debt, when the ordinary sense of obligation is deemed insufficient. Hence a needless oath is trifling with the name of God. Much more is an oath ministered or taken for the purpose of substantiating a falsehood or securing the performance of a wrong act, profane and wicked. Such an oath is in contravention of the command, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain;" nor can such an oath possibly be of any binding force. Now apply these principles to a Master Mason's oath in which he invokes not only the horrid mutilation of his body, but the damnation of his soul, if he ever reveals any of the secrets of Freemasonry; if he ever knowingly talks with a clandestine made Mason on the secrets of Masonry; if he fails to support constitutions and obey laws and edicts of which he knows nothing; if on the witness stand and in behalf of his country he shall ever reveal any secret of a Master Mason given him as such, murder and treason only excepted; if he ever fails to the extent of his power to relieve a brother who makes the sign of distress, though that brother were a criminal fleeing from justice; if he ever says Ma ha-bone except on the five points of fellowship or above a whisper; if he shall ever knowingly wrong a brother Master Mason to the value of one cent. If this is not taking the name of the Lord in vain, if it is not trifling with the name of the most High, what would be such trifling? Or if the duty not to wrong a neighbor to the value of one cent is so important, and the duty not to violate the chastity of a neighbor's wife so uncertain of fulfillment as to require an oath, what right has one in the taking of such an oath to discriminate in favor of, or attempt to limit the obligation to a Master Mason and a Master Mason's wife? What would be thought of me, and of the church under my care, if in receiving members I should say, "You solemnly promise that you will not cheat a Presbyterian? You solemnly promise that you will not commit adultery with a Presbyterian?" The fact is, not only are Masonic oaths, and many other parts of the ceremonies, profane, unlawful and wicked, but the entire system of Masonic morality, as defined by its covenants, is constructed on the principle of "honor among thieves."

4. That the institution is void of charity, and a nurse of human selfishness, is apparent from the fact that it excludes from participation in the few benefits it confers, all women, all the aged, the young, the poor, the lame, the blind; in fact all the real objects of charity. A greater falsehood is hardly conceivable than the parading of the good Samaritan amongst the emblems of Freemasonry. The tendency, moreover, of the whole thing everywhere is not to strengthen but to weaken or destroy confidence between man and man.—Warren Taylor.

Disgraceful Favoritism.

The regular New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says of the tax system of that city: "Among the inconsistencies of the assessment is the fact that Masonic Hall, which cost nearly a million, is exempt, notwithstanding the fact that there are in in its ground floor, two stores, each worth $2,000 a year, while the grand-lodge room is let for lectures and exhibitions. The property which occupied this corner prior to the erection of the present hall paid a large tax, and there is no good reason why this exemption should be made. Our laws exempt religious institutions, but the hall does not come 'under this head'". The writer notes the fact that such exemption causes a burden to fall from others with tremendous weight. It is fortunate that the country is becoming awake to the outrages of brazen-faced cliques, and also to the fact that things which are called religion by many are not regarded so by candid minds. It is a fact which is not generally known or exposed as it deserves, that the Masonic halls all over the country are exempt from taxation, though it is not certain upon what grounds they are free. In California churches are taxed, while Masonic halls are exempt. Not even President Grant seems as much exercised about taxing such halls as he is about church taxation.—Religious Telescope.

Our Word or His.—A proposition clearly stated is half proved. I met an illustration of this in my reading to-day. The writer was trying to show that it is wrong to keep a promise to do wrong. Even if one has taken an oath, as Herod did, he ought to break his oath rather than commit a crime. He says: "God would rather have us break our word than his word." How clear and conclusive! Our Maker has said to us solemnly: "Thou shalt not." We have said hastily and foolishly to a fellow-man, "I will." Shall we keep our rash promise and violate God's holy law? or shall we repent of our rashness and refrain from the guilt to which it had pledged us? In other words, shall God have his way, or shall we insist upon having ours.—Dr. C. E. Babb.

TME AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

The Religious Political Element.

OVERLOOKED IN THE CALCULATIONS OF POLITICIANS.

The apparent inability of politicians to comprehend the power of religious principle in politics is easily explained. But the explanation opens one of the most curious chapters in the history of practical revolutions.

Not in republics only, but in kingdoms and empires, the religious sentiment of rulers and people is the most important factor in political calculations.

Yet there are few with sagacity equal to its comprehension. And in a republic like ours it is almost wholly ignored. For this oversight there are two causes, and it will not hurt politicians or church men to lay them to heart.

1. Religious men are so largely unt faithful to their profession, that they are not half the power in politics they should be.

A profession of religion entitles a man to a standing among religious men but it does not always follow that he is true to his profession, nor that he can claim any weight in the community on the strength of it. Politicians know, for they see it every day, and especially every election day, that some men hold their religion subordinate to their politics.

Many good men are governed by the rule "of two evils choose the least;" and an this principle they vote for one bad man in preference to another.

Again: when a bad man represents their side in politics, and a good man is on the other side, they claim that it is better to have a bad man in office who is sound in politics, than a good man of the other party. This is a dilemma on either horn of which we do not care to be hung. If it is never expedient to do wrong to elect bad men to office, then it is never right nor expedient to vote for them. And further; if religious men would assert and maintain this doctrine at the primary meetings and the polls, they would secure candidates for whom they could consistently vote, without a sacrifice of either their religious or their political principles.

2. But the true and chief reason for the inability of politicians to understand the power of the religious element is to be found in the fact that they, we mean professional politicians, who make it a business to tell us whom we are to vote for, and what taxes we shall pay, and what laws we shall have, these men do not know what religious principle means. They never felt it, how should they know anything about it? To them religion is as much an unknown matter as the hieroglyphics on an Egyptian obelisk, or the figures on Assyrian temples. To say, "It is all Greek to them," is to say very little. If they profess the Romish faith, the priests do their religion for them. If they are nominally Protestants, they are only that. As to any consciousness of what it is to be a religious man, bound to the unseen God, and therefore acting in his fear always, they know nothing about it. They have no fear of anything beyond the loss of office and the gain that comes by it. And they have no other interest in heaven than the "least erected spirit who fell," who saw there naught to admire but its pavement made of gold. These men cannot understand spiritual things, and they will not admit, in the caucuses they manage, that the religious element is of any conceivable account as an element in political calculation.

Because religion is conservative it is slow in being roused to action. It suffers long and is kind. But it is thoughtful, deep, and has in it a power tha overcomes. When it has patiently endured the wrong until patience is a virtue no more, it rises in its mightt with faith, energy and purpose inspired of God; and then—then the craft of cunning men, the combinations of thieves, the wiles of Jesuits, the schemes of selfish contractors and corrupt rings, are swept away as chaff on the wings of the storm.—N. Y. Observer.

Coming to the Light.

June 16:—As the Presidential campaign waxes stronger the political atmosphere grows murky and sulphureous, and the necessity of a radical reform more and more apparent. Reporters tell us in the daily papers the money and whiskey are being used freely for electioneering purposes at Cincinnati, and that lewd women are employed by politicians for the especial purpose of carrying their base ends. If but half that is published of the proceedings is true the sight is repulsive to common decency and odious beyond description. The thought of elevating a man to the highest office in the nation who would be accessory to such prostitution of every virtue, either before or after the fact, is detestible to every man or woman who is not wholly lost to patriotism and piety. It is said the instigator of these foul arts is a Knight Templar, whom the valiant and chivalrous patrons of secret orders delight to honor, and who marches in the van of their processions on great occasions. It is time that such infamy was rebuked, and these unclean birds of prey driven out from their hiding places, and the sooner the loyal in heart unite as one man for this purpose the better it will be for the present and for future generations. Such exhibitions result largely from lodge practices where men are trained and taught to conceal each other's crimes, and emboldened to enter upon the most desperate and reckless measures; and until this fountain is dried up we can reasonably hope for nothing better than the flooding of our land with a perfect deluge of corruption upon which the worst men will float into the highest official positions and sink into the lowest depth of infamy. Reform News and Notices.

The Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Association opposed to secret societies, will meet to hold its next meeting at the U. B. Church at North Clymer, in said county, June 27th and 30th, 1876. Services to commence at 9 o'clock P. M., first evening. Persons coming by R. R. on the B. C. & P. R. R., leave the train at Panama Station within one mile of the church.

N. R. Lucx, Pastor.

—A letter from Rev. A. H. Springstein received just too late for this number, tells of an interesting meeting in Memphis, Mich., in which the lodge was worsted. Look for it soon.

—Friend Robinson writes of Mr. Ronayne's meetings in Washburn, Ill., a fortnight since. The meeting was a great success, and attended by crowded audiences in which were many Masons, who were very carefully quiet. They had been notified to reply to the lectures, but no word of objection was heard before the public, and some of them said the truth had been told.

—Illinois friends attending the National Convention will do well to have an "extra shilling" in their pocket for the support of their State Agent. The Treasurer of the State Association will be glad to greet them on such an errand.

Elder Baird in Clarion Co., Pa.

Salem, Pa., June 1st, 1876.

Last night closed the first course of lectures against secret societies in our county. The lectures were delivered by J. R. Baird. We had to wait long, but got the right man at last, and we think no one was better calculated to break up the fallow ground than Mr. Baird, as he has a faculty of holding his audience, both friends and foes, in silent listening attention, and seems to increase in courage while the craft increases in anger. On the last evening of the course of lectures, he gave the Masons a chance to test him, and settle all doubts as to whether he had ever been a member of the craft or not; but not one of them dared to challenge him, so that settled the conviction on the large and attentive audience, that the fraternity had met their match in full. We cannot foresee what the result will be, but we have reason to believe that a strong influence has been left against the practice of supporting men, either in church or state, who belong to secret orders.

Mr. Baird preached twice on the Sabbath previous to the lectures. The minister of that church warned his members to be careful who they would let preach in that church, least they might admit horse-thieves. Well he has come and gone, and stole no horse or horses here. Well, we think Mr. Baird has badly rent the vail of lodge concealment here. May God in his goodness accompany the above lecturer with the Spirit of God, wherever he goes, and may his years be many. May God bless every effort to pull down secret societies is my prayer.

Elder Barlow's Work in Allegan County, Mich.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Elder Barlow came here on Friday evening last, remaining with us over Sunday, preaching once in the Methodist and once in the United Presbyterian churches, giving notice in each church of lectures to be delivered on Monday and Tuesday evenings, on the Religion and Obligation of Masonry, and I must say that more convincing arguments or a more intensely interesting audience never occupied our church, which was full both evenings.

The light of truth was really let in upon the minds of the people in regard to the un-republican, un Christian and unjust working of these dark and dangerous secret combinations of oath-bound enemies of all righteousness.

I am glad we have so able a man to represent our State, as secrecy at present seems to rule the pulpit, the press, and the courts throughout our otherwise noble State. But what all we want is light, and Elder Barlow is just the man to give it. He openly challenges any Mason to deny any of his assertions, and promised any person five dollars who would prove any statement false, but not a Mason opened his lips. He proved from their own authors their condemnation.

He raised a considerable fund to help on the good work, and we shall soon form an Anti-masonic organization here.

Both the Methodist and Presbyterian ministers are Anti-masons and will work with us—and O! if our ministers generally would only come out and throw off fear and quit truckling to the enemy they could soon bring a power to operate against the lodges which would be a blessing to the country, but they very generally hide the light that is in them, and thereby minister to the lodges, and appear to me to deny the Saviour whom they preach. What must become of an army whose watchmen upon the walls have fallen asleep or are betraying their people into the hands of the enemy, and such are many of our ministers. They evidently think more of their salaries than they do of their Saviour's commands. How can such men ever face their Master when he comes to make up his jewels.

But Elder Barlow shows up such ministers most thoroughly to the utter disgust of the people. If the ministers will not invite Elder Barlow into their neighborhoods and churches let the people call on him and he will show them on whose side they are working, and where they stand. Don't wait for the ministers to move, but let any one who has the light in him move and procure the services of the Elder, for he is a host in himself, and his lectures will enlighten any community in which he speaks, and convince all who can be convinced, that Masonry is anti-Christian, anti-republican, and a fruitful source of injustice and oppression in our courts, and that it brings with it a curse into every department of our government into which it steals its way. Yours truly,

L. Monteith.

Correspondence.

What has been done in Peoria Co., Ill.

Elmwood, Ill., June 12, 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—According to a promise made you some time since, I will now give a little outline of what we have done, or what has been done for us in our great reform. A little more than a year ago I wrote you to find out how many copies of the Cynosure came to this office, and I believe I promised to try and double the number. You sent me four names. Three of those I have renewed and I find I have sent you since Sept. 21st, 1875, fifty-two annual subscribers and fifteen three months subscribers. We have sold over fifty copies of Mr. R.'s Hand-book, besides quite a supply of anti-secrecy literature. We have had a sharp discussion in our local paper, although the editor is an apologist for secrecy and garbled our articles considerably, by leaving out many good points, yet the effect was such upon the Masonic writer that in his last letter he flatly denied that he was defending Masonry. We are happy to think we have been able to direct a few rays of light upon a very dark subject, a subject that many otherwise good people are afraid to investigate.

Perhaps they fear they will find what they cannot fellowship, and they prefer to smother conscience, rather than to be unpopular, but how they expect to have a good conscience toward God and wilfully shut their eyes to truth, is a question I am unable to answer.

It may not be amiss to say in this connection that it is claimed by the members of the lodge here that Masonry is really Christianity, that the name of Christ is used in the prayers in the lodge, etc., etc. It is a fact that quite a number of the Masons here belong to Christian churches, and there is an outward respect for Christianity by the craft generally, yet the leading men here as elsewhere, do not profess any other religion but Masonry. Why should they? I would be consistent. If I believed their teachings, I should certainly believe there was "nothing beyond that which the soul of man can desire," and I should never be willing to try to live more than one system of religion at the same time. I am told that there is a growing dissatisfaction at the avowed recognition of Christ by the lodge here, and that the right to exclude all sectarian allusion undoubtedly possessed by the lodge, will before long be asserted.

In conversation with an old Mason the other day, he deplored the condition of the country. He said it had become so now, that it made but little difference how honest a man was, in private life, if elected to office it would only be a short time before he would be corrupted and lie, and steal, and cheat in every way possible, in fact honest men in office were the exception. I told him that my view of the way to cure that was to elect only honest men, who were not connected with secret rings or orders, and put every man on his merits. By taking away the incentive to evil that hope of immunity from punishment affords, we should do much to abate the nuisance of which we all complain, and it is notorious that it is next to impossible to convict a man of crime when surrounded by sworn friends. He admitted that there was too much truth in my statement to gainsay, but changed the subject before I had a chance to tell him that about seven out of ten office-holders were Masons and I had ceased to wonder at official plundering.

A Mason told me last year when I innocently asked him how Masons succeeded so well in getting their brethren elected when so small a proportion of voters were Masons. "Oh," said he, "the question of Masonry does not enter into such affairs." He then went on to explain how caucuses were managed, and I made out that the following is about the way they are worked: The leading men politically in most places are Masons, a caucus is called, and enough of the fraternity get together to make up the slate that has been agreed upon, or, as often happens when they fear being out-voted they get together early, make up the slate and adjourn before others get in. The best offices are given to the brethren of course, and if there is fear of too much opposition a few minor places are given to outsiders which secures their aid, and then, why, certainly, Masonry has nothing to do with politics!

The work with us goes steadily but bravely on since Mr. Ronayne's course of lectures here. Great exertions have been made by lodge men to counteract the effect of those lectures and they gravely inform us that secretism has had many converts as a result of those exposures. We have very serious doubts of the truth of their boasting, but their reports this fall will give us the facts. We think if what they say is true they might donate a few dollars to help us on with our work; but every time we make them such a proposition it is coldly received, and none of their shekels have thus far been handed over to our knowledge.

Yours for truth,
H. W. Marsh.

Suggestions for the Anniversary and Political Meeting.

Gainesville, Texas, June 6, '76.

Dear Sir: I send the following suggestions to you hoping they will come to hand before the meeting of the N. C. A., so that they may be laid before that body if thought worth consideration.

First: The real object of Rome is, I believe, to secure a division of the public school fund for denominational purposes. The Bible is only a pretext, and should they succeed in casting it out they would soon find another pretext for a division of the public revenues. I would therefore respectfully submit another plank for our platform, which is that no public revenues shall ever be given to private corporations nor divided among religious sects. I will further add that article 7th of our present platform is objected to as being coercive in regard to the Bible. Would it not be better to simply declare the Bible shall be forever tolerated in our public schools? This addition and slight alteration would add greatly to the strength of the American Platform South.

Second: Badges, insignia, ribbons, etc., I believe have been a great curse; but might they not be turned to a good account in our reform? Might we not wear some plain, neat and simple device, not for ornament and show, but that we may fix our principles where people can see them and thus modestly advertise them wherever we go?

It would not only advertise them—our principles—but would give a tangible opposition to secrecy. It would make two sides in direct opposition and thus hasten the conflict; it would popularize our movement in the minds of the people; it would make those who wear them a living monument and testimony against secrecy. Let preachers wear them into the pulpit and it throws the weight of their position, their talent, their character, and their influence against secrecy; whether they mention it or not in their sermon, it is a discourse in opposition to secrecy. Finally it would take a harmless advantage of a human weakness, i. e., a love for notice and a desire for display The command is, Be wise as serpents Secret societies understand this and avail themselves of the advantage, and they owe much of their success to thus advertising and recommending themselves on the persons of their members.

Cannot the N. C. A. adopt something that will be neat and significant, so that we may pin our faith to our garments and thus bear an unceasing testimony to the lodge? Respectfully,

R. H. Love.

Note.—Such a badge would not be worn from the low motive usually attached to the Masonic pin, but Elder Freeman suggests a far better way of "showing our colors." The early Christians needed no peculiar mark to designate their glorious calling and discipleship.—Ed.

More Light! More Tracts.

Once more we call the attention of every reader of the Cynosure to the importance of the tract department of our great reform.

The "General Tract Fund" should be increased immediately; and funds are needed at once to supply Rev. A. D. Freeman with tracts enough to meet the great demand that will be made as the Centennial exhibition progresses.

Our main object at present, however, is to show the necessity for funds to scatter tracts during the Centennial, at Philadelphia, among those who are holding Conventions, and at all suitable places, including the vicinity of the Centennial grounds.

As the whole world is coming to Philadelphia to see the results of Gospel preaching, free-government, and American doctrines in general, it becomes our high duty to give them "more light."

Gen. Phelps says: "An outside movement at tract distribution would greatly aid the inside movement, and strike terror into the lodge. Even if we propose only to defeat a Masonic candidate for President, we should do this; much more when our aim is to enlighten an unconscious people. I still hold myself ready to contribute five dollars."

Now, how many readers of the Cynosure will give five dollars, more or less, to open the eyes of the hoodwinked, the blind, and the rest of mankind, of both sexes?

Cheerful Words from a Sick Bed.

Eagle Harbor, Mich.
June 3rd, 1876.

In the Cynosure of the first inst., I find a request for those expecting to be at the convention on the 20th, to send in their names. Well, my name is Aaron Phipps, I expect to be there, not bodily but in spirit. I have been fasting and praying about it to-day; had a good time. This old body won't get any nearer than the couch I lay on, unless the man that cares for me should roll me a little nearer you when he turns me over. I am the same old helpless cripple as ever, but you may count on me for one dollar for Centennial tracts. God bless Bro. Freeman in his labors of love and all the dear brethren that are laboring for a pure Gospel.

A. Phipps.

OUR MAIL.

J. C. Graham, Viola, Ill., writes:

"I want to go to the Convention, but fear I cannot. May God bless the hearts and hands and heads that meet there. We reviewed the secret camp on the 4th inst. in our Bethel."

We hope Bro. Graham will be present at the Convention.

Jeremiah Chadwick, Smithport, Pa., writes:

"I have been anti-slavery from boyhood and am anti-secret especially as to Masonry, the sum of all villainies; and I know what persecution and oppression are because of my principles. Yours for the right if the heavens fall."

James Adams, Roberts, Ill., encloses in his letter $2.20, donating the Cynosure for one year to the pastor of a church in Hennepin, Ill. For commission he wishes us to send him the fac simile photo-engraving of the original Declaration of Independence. We would be glad to receive a great many such letters.

P. W. Taintor, Orleans, Ill., writes:

"There is a strong feeling in this county against secrecy that has not yet developed itself. I know this for I have been among them spending my time and talking with them for more than three years. I fought this thing in Jacksonville single-handed thirty years ago. The Masons got two copies of Light on Masonry by Elder Bernard from me and kept them. Then the institution being young the people paid but little attention to it. Now it is powerful! The people seem to be waking up to it. Pitch in this fall and do your best, and it will not be forgotten by this generation if it is by the next."

This letter is of special interest at this time as it comes from the locality where our State meeting is to be held next fall.

I. J. Gilbert, Derby, Ct., sends money for Centennial Tract Fund and for tracts for home distribution and writes:

"I am the only open Anti-mason in this place, yet there are others who sympathize with me. I hope the day will come when we can hire a hall and have some lectures on the subject. The tracts here are doing the work. I hope to be able to circulate many more in this place."

Geo. Taylor, Samsville, Ill., writes:

"We have many here who are opposed to secrecy in every form, but we want a bold leader in the work to push things. Our county ought to be organized before fall."

S. P. Poole, Bellevue, Mich., writes:

"Rev. J. L. Barlow has been in our midst for the last ten days and has preached five Gospel sermons, very much to the edification and I trust to the lasting benefit of his very attentive audiences. He also delivered six lectures, which had a telling effect on the craft as well as on the community at large and were very much needed in this place; for with the numerous dens of Masons and Odd-fellows, grangers and that last, but not least, whelp of the same old wolf, Sons of Industry, (born, I believe, in our State,) emphatically ruling our churches and courts of justice, and poisoning as well as leading public opinion, we feel that it may be truly said of our dwelling, "It is where Satan's seat is." But we feel that He that is for us is greater than all that can be against us. We rejoice that the people are waking up to the subject and like Hiram searching for light, but in a different direction and for a different kind, namely, the light of truth through God's word, lectures, books, tracts, and that great modern light, the Cynosure."

Juliana C. Tyson, Springfield, Ind., sends a note for one hundred dollars for the Publishing House Fund, and writes:

"It is with a heart full of gratitude that I write to your valuable paper and I am thankful I am am a living witness. I have in my younger days longed to see Masonry exposed, but I never expected to see the day. I am glad some of the ministers of the Gospel are coming out from the works of darkness. God's ministers should warn the people of the fearful consequences of being found at last leagued together with the workers of evil. May God grant his servants grace to declare the whole truth and seriously perform their work as men knowing that they must give an account of their stewardship. Christianity will continue to move against the works of darkness with the assured confidence of final victory. She may have to pass through waters and the firey furnace of persecution, yet we shall see her in the beautiful garments of righteousness."

J. C. Bartholomew, Ely Station, Iowa, writes:

"The express agent here asked me if I had any confidence in a man who had taken a solemn oath and had broken the same. I referred him to Leviticus v. 4, 5, also to the oath Herod, who beheaded John in the prison, took; also to those Jews who swore they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul, and left him to his own thoughts."

Gaining Courage to confess Lodgism —A Rhode Island clergyman and his Wife—A Suspicious Circumstance —The Testimony of Christ cannot Fail—How we lose Ground—Sick Masons form Half the Order—The Cut-throat Sign—A Sad Case—A Dangerous Institution——Lodge Spies.

June 5 —My experience with Masons and their abettors are singularly ominous of what lies in the future for us. And first, I think that more than half of the Masons I have spoken with on the subject of oath-bound secrecy are decidedly displeased with it; some having renounced openly, others are nearly ready to do so, and still others who have silently withdrawn. When first addressed on the subject, some of the latter speak as if they thought Masonry was rather a good institution; but before leaving frankly acknowledge they had serious objections to it. When they find it can be spoken of with impunity they are emboldened to speak out their secret thoughts and feelings.

I would relate a case in point. A Christian gentleman of the M. E. church, and his lady, from Rhode Island, came to my stand, and seemed not to be in a hurry, but to take matters leisurely, unlike most here. After being made acquainted with our work, our National Association, our Cynosure, our Publishing House, our tract business, and being handed one of each of the tracts, (his wife taking them) he spoke of himself as one high in the order. As I handed out the tracts I remarked, there was one in which she would be especially interested, as it was written by a lady, and added: "With the consent of your husband I will name the subject on which the tract is written." "Certainly," said he. I then told her it was "Masonic Chastity," and added, "With your husband's further consent I will quote that part of the oath of the third degree on which that article is based." "Certainly," was his reply. So I repeated it. "Well, their looks and attitude presented a most singular tableau. I think they both had a mixed feeling of sorrow and gladness; she glad to know if it were so: sorry to have it so, and he sorry it was so, but glad to have it divulged.

He then told me he had not attended lodge much for three or four years, and that his wife had rallied him on his neglect, telling him if it was a good institution he ought not to so neglect it; and then further, as he said, he wished me to understand his position. He said a brother in his church came to him for advice in regard to joining the Masons, and said he, "Bro., I expect you will tell me the truth." To which he said, "I replied, 'Bro., you are trying to get to heaven and you can do it outside of Masonry just as well as inside.'" The brother did not ponder the subject further.

That case is only one among many, many thousands. That man was struggling under an awful burden of conscience, but afraid to throw off that burden, lest if it did not cost him his life it might cost him what was dearer to him—a good name.

A prominent Massachusetts Mason, after talking awhile in regard to the objections I presented against Masonry, said: "Well, now, what is there so objectionable?" as if all I had said was not enough. I repeated that part of the oath of the third degree, spoken of above, and asked: "Are you such a corrupt set, known to each other as such, that you have to swear one another to secure yourselves against encroachments upon your rights in this direction, and to preserve intact the virtue of your female friends? Now, sir, does not that look suspicious?" He hesitatingly admitted that it did. But many of them with many who knew nothing of the evils of the order, nor had even suspected that there was any evil, see at once and freely admit that there must be something wrong. But when I show Masons how they swear profanely even in the first degree; profanely, not only because unauthorized by God or human governments, but because they swear against the testimony and prophesy of Jesus, that his testimony is not true, and his prophesy shall not be fulfilled, they begin to look awe-struck. Of this I have spoken in a former communication, but will add that when they deny the revelations of secretism, I tell them that Jesus is omniscient; that when he said that "secret things" should be revealed, he saw all secrecy that was then in the future of men's thoughts, sayings, and doings, all over the world and clear down to the present, including Masonry, and he said, "whatsoever is spoken in the ear in the closet shall be revealed," and notwithstanding you have sworn that his testimony is untrue, and that his prophesy shall not be fulfilled he has done it, and fulfilled his prophesy, and you have the audacity to deny it. Jesus has made his word good. O what cannot man be led to do!

Well, there are a great many that will not deny that Masonry, and the other secret orders are revealed and yet they do not come out and assert their freedom from such impious oath-bound shackles.

I have a thought for the timid friends of our cause. It is that the pulpit, press, and mouths of the people are losing ground by silence.

No matter what may be said of us or done to us, we ought to speak and act. If we fear the flings or threats and remain silent the more we yield in this direction the more will our enemies exact of us. The more we yield to threats, the more will threats be made. the more we sacrifice the more will sacrifices be required; and the more we yield our liberties, the more we shall be required to do, till our liberty is gone, and our peace with it, which we vainly hoped to secure by lenience and silence. May the Lord save us from such folly!

Saturday last, June 3d, was a great day for giving out tracts. I think I handed out many more than on any other day. Another fact worthy of notice is this, that those around me having in charge other exhibitions have from fear of frowning secrecy, come up to a bold defence of our work, and open opposition to these secret orders, because they are no longer ignorant of their evils, and their defenseless character, and of their weakness when confronted. Only let the public arise as after Morgan was murdered, and secretism would retires as it did then, for its own safety; but should never be allowed to rise again.

June 6th.

More than half, probably six or seven tenths of the Masons I talk with go away from the stand leaving the impression on my mind that they are heartily sick of Masonry. I have been told this afternoon that the promised and much boasted procession of 100,000 Knights dwindled down to 7,050 all told. Only a little over one-twentieth of the number promised! Well, if Masonic promises and statements shall never hereafter get any further from the truth than in this case, they will do much better than in the past, yet it is surely wide enough from the mark.

June 7th.—My health is somewhat improved, but am not well yet. The truth is I have over-taxed myself, and find so much to do in talking up this matter and writing, that I do not know how to avoid it. There are so many honest inquirers after the truth in regard to Masonry by persons who have made up their minds to be hoodwinked and cable-towed, and some who were thinking of it, who tell me frankly they want to know what is best to do. How can I refrain from telling the poor fellow what I know of it, even if I am tired out? I tell them, and Masons and others as well, that this is what I am here for, and this is what we are trying to do with our books, tracts, Cynosure: We are trying to break the fetters of the hoodwinked, and restrain the unfettered that they may not be caught in the same trap.

I find Masons wavering and there is so much inquiry on the subject as men come up from all parts of the country that it would make an immense inquiry meeting. The world moves!

I asked a young greenhorn if he was a Mason and immediately his hand came up across his throat Masonically, and boldly declared himself a Mason, beginning to talk with me very familiarly as if glad he had found a brother.

But discovering his mistake he began to talk as the crawfish acts, and soon was missing. When I told him I was not a Mason, but understood his cut-throat sign he presented a queer look of disappointment and began to talk incoherently and confusedly and passed off. An old, gray-headed man came to our stand to-day with the evident intention of riding over me with noise and boisterousness. I called him to order by telling him he was disturbing the peace of all around. He then cooled down, but had said that he "belonged to the church and all the secret orders; had been through them all." I asked "why did you join these secret orders?" He replied, "Because the church did not do her duty;" and made other reproachful complaints; when Bro. Hibbard, a Methodist brother who is in charge of the Am. Bible Society's bookcase, close at hand, and who before leaving home had seriously thought of joining the Masons, but since coming here has become strongly Anti-masonic, sprang to his feet and came forward and with commendable zeal said to him: "Yes, these men that are finding fault with the churches are the very men that give a character to them, and thereby furnish the excuse they make for joining secret societies," or words to that effect. I said to him, "Here you are, an old, gray-haired man, right here in the presence of God who hears every word you say and sees your every thought, trying to make the impression on our minds that secretism is right and necessary. You have left the church because of her unfaithfulness, and joined societies in competition with the kingdom of Christ. Your duty as a Christian man was to improve yourself and labors to make the church better, both by your own repentance and earnest prayers for yourself and the church, and not to go off to a society in competition with and opposed to Christ's kingdom," and much more to the same end. Meanwhile he showed signs of conviction resting on his mind, by lowering his head and went away manifestly reflecting on his position as one solemn and untenable.

There are a great many interesting incidents that occur every day that were they all written out would fill the Cynosure every week and there would be no room for other matter. But though they may never appear in it they may nevertheless not be lost to the world. Their effects may yet crop out in the lives of those immediately interested and diffuse an influence through all the land for good.

There are evidences that all secrecy is destined not far hence to fall, especially Masonry. I hear it from every quarter, coming up from all parts of our land, "Secret societies are dangerous;" and from Europe too, the same language of alarm comes, and then more than one half of these fraternities feel themselves the slaves of an awful tyranny and want to be delivered from bondage and view our efforts as the harbinger of better days, and rejoice because the jubilee is coming. But, friends, the time is not yet, though the walls of their fabric tremble. There are determined spirits that are on the alert, doing their utmost to nullify and make void our work, and they are strongly supported by each other. Yet the columns begin to crumble and augur a brighter day at hand. And more than all this, God is with us.

As evidence of there being determined spirits at work in support of each other and with settled purpose to checkmate us, there are men hanging around our stand, some under the pretense of being personal friends, while they vilify and try to discredit all there who have given testimony against secretism, and when flattering friendship fails they do not hesitate to use abuse, but they invariably go away lame and limping. One of these persistent creatures who for a week past has been hanging around, calling two or three times a day and plying his arts, called yesterday, after being flayed alive the day before, and re-affirmed stronger than ever, that he knew the institution of Masonry was a good institution and harmless and every way useful, and that we know nothing about it; that what we show him is not Masonry and never was; and in view of this and his unwittingly crossing his own path several times in former conversations, I said to him, "I am sure and settled in the belief of one of two things, that either you never were a Mason, and have been cheated into a clandestine lodge and deceived, or you are totally destitute of all honesty and cannot speak the truth, and I do not really know which." He tried hard to take it demurely, but in spite of his efforts color flashed in his face, came and went as he struggled to overcome and play the Jesuit cunningly.

A word concerning my health and the prospect of my stay here. I am anxious to stay as long as God wills, but I am wearing out fast, and yet I am remarkably sustained, I think in answer to prayer. Though I feel I am wearing away. I still endure more than seems possible. Bro. Mackie thinks of taking me if he can leave next week, to Ocean Grove to rest and recruit two or three days. He proposes to do this at his own expense. He and his family are very kind and do all for me they can to make me comfortable.

Yours for the good work,

A. D. FREEMAN.

Memorial on the Death of Bishop D. Edwards, D. D.

WHEREAS, It has pleased God to permit the death of our beloved Bro., Bishop D. Edwards, D. D.; and

WHEREAS, He has shown himself, through many years, a safe counselor, a faithful leader, a fearless preacher, and an impartial administrator of the laws of the church, and by his abundant labors in Christ during these years has merited the highest Christian love of all good people; and

WHEREAS, His was the officiating hand in the dedication of this college edifice; and

WHEREAS, He has ever been a faithful friend to the institution, therefore,

Resolved; 1st, That his separation from the church militant at this time, on many accounts, saddens our hearts, and would fill us with the greatest discouragement, were it not that we hope in God, who, we trust, will raise up one worthy to wear the mantle of this departed prophet.

2nd, That we feel like saying with the Psalmist, "Help Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men;" and we earnestly pray, that this event may lead the sorrow-stricken church to a deeper consecration in Jesus.

3d, That we feelingly condole with the bereaved companion and children of our departed brother; and as an evidence of our feeling of condolence we will forward a copy of these resolutions to sister Edwards.

4th, That the College Chapel be draped in mourning during the pending anniversary exercises.

5th, That we hold a memorial exercise in the college chapel on Sabbath evening, June 11th, at which remarks relative to the life and death of the deceased will be made by Rev's I. Kretzinger, W. C. Smith, S. P. Hoy and Bishop Dickson.

S. B. ALLEN,
J. H. SNYDER,
C. H. KIRACOFE,
Committee.

The above paper was conjointly adopted by the Board of Trustees and faculty of Westfield College, June 10th, 1876, and a copy of the same ordered to be forwarded to sister Edwards, the Religious Telescope and Christian Cynosure, each.

Bishop Edward's Funeral at Dayton, O.

From the full and sad narrative in the Telescope we learn that this father in the church died at his home in Baltimore, at 9 o'clock P. M., Tuesday, June 6th, and on Thursday afternoon friends accompanying the remains arrived in Dayton. The pall-bearers, Rev's W. Mittendorf, W. O. Tobey, D. Berger, M. Wright, J. M. Spangler and G. L. Gilbert, took charge of the body and conveyed it to the First United Brethren Church, where at 3:50 the services began.

Dr. L. Davis read a portion of Scripture, "If the earthly house of this tabernacle," etc., and Rev. J. W. Hott announced a suitable hymn, after the singing of which Rev. W. J. Shuey led in prayer.

Rev. S. A. Mowers, who had been with the Bishop much in his last sickness, and who was his intimate and much esteemed friend, was requested to give some account of his last illness, and the sentiments expressed on his death-bed, which he did as follows.

Bishop Edwards' affliction was long and severe. He suffered much; but during all his affliction not a murmur fell from his lips. I was with him much during his affliction, and learned then as I never knew before his intense devotion to his life-work. If at any time he intimated a a desire to live it was to work for Christ and his Church, Just last Monday morning, when he was sweeping about the gates, he said to me: "Well, how did it go in the pulpit yesterday?" This church was as dear to him as his life. When he was too ill to hear anything, he wanted to hear from all the interests of this church. He said many things during his affliction which we all ought to hear, but there was one sentiment he repeated time and again, and which it would be well for this church to heed and its ministers to proclaim from all its pulpits. That sentiment is this: "I would like, if it be the Lord's will, to live to preach awhile yet. I would like to preach salvation by faith alone in Christ. I see such a disposition almost everywhere to interpose something between the soul and Christ, and I would like to live and preach Christ alone." "On the side of God, I feel that that is all right; there is no trouble there. But on the human side, the grave is as near to me as anything else."

Dr. L. Davis then remarked at length on the history and character of the deceased and his labors for the church of Christ.

After the announcement by Rev. J. W. Hott of the hymn beginning, "Asleep in Jesus," etc., and its singing by the congregation, Ex-bishop Kumler followed with a few remarks, commenting beautifully and appropriately on the dying words of Bishop Edwards, which had been read by Rev. S. A. Mowers during the service. He then spoke of his previous expectation that himself—now about seventy-five years of age—would have preceded the deceased bishop to the heavenly land. "But," said he, "I live with many others, to mourn for him." The aged veteran of the cross spoke with feeling of the fact that most of his relatives and early friends had passed ever before him to the land for which his own heart is now longing. The remarks of Father Kumler were much appreciated and the beauty and appropriateness of the papers previously read received universal expressions of appreciation.

After the announcement of another hymn, by Rev. J. W. Hott, and its singing, the relatives took their last look at the corpse, and the funeral procession was formed and proceded to Woodland Cemetery, where, in a beautiful spot, the remains of Bishop Edwards were deposited to await the resurrection of those who sleep in Jesus. Well had he labored. Peaceful be his slumbers, and glorious his final awakening.

Lesson for July 2.—David's Charge to Solomon.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Chron. xxviii. 1-10. Commit to memory verses 6-10. Primary verse, 9.

1 And David assembled all the princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes, and the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and the captains over the hundreds, and the stewards over all the substance and possession of the king, and of his sons, with the officers and with the mighty men, and with all the valiant men unto Jerusalem.

2 Then David the king stood up upon his feet, and said, Hear me, my brethren and my people: As for me, I had in my heart to build a house of rest for the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and for the footstool of our God, and had made ready for the building:

3 But God said unto me, Thou shalt not build a house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war and hast shed blood.

4 Howbeit the Lord God of Israel chose me before all the house of my father to be king over Israel forever; for he hath chosen Judah to be the ruler; and of the house of Judah, the house of my father; and among the sons of my father he liked me to make me king over all Israel.

5 And of all my sons, (for the Lord hath given me many sons), he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel.

6 And he said unto me, Solomon, thy son, he shall build my house and my courts: for I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father.

7 Moreover I will establish his kingdom for ever, if he be constant to do my commandments and my judgments, as at this day.

8 Now therefore in the sight of all Israel, the congregation of the Lord, and in the audience of our God, keep and seek for all the commandments of the Lord your God: that ye may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance for your children after you forever.

9 And thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind: for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the the imaginations of the thoughts: if thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off forever.

10 Take heed now for the Lord hath chosen thee to build a house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind.—v. 9.

Know the God of thy father. Become personally acquainted with him, as your covenant God, acknowledge and love him as thine own God. Maintain constant communion with him, and learn his mind and will. Look to him for wisdom and direction in all thy ways. Choose him for thy portion, as he has chosen thee for his servant.

Serve him faithfully. Engage in his worship with sincerity, and obey his commands with cheerful alacrity. He alone serves God whose worship and work comes from the heart, mere outward rites and ceremonies are meaningless and displeasing to God. We cannot impose upon him, for he searches all hearts, scans our motives, and knows our inmost desires. All deceit and hypocrisy are abominable to him. The only basis of acceptable service is a willing mind and a sincere heart.

Forsake him not. Seek him humbly, perseveringly, and in his own appointed way, and he will be to thee a father and a friend. But if thou shalt neglect his service, disobey his commandments and follow after other gods, he will turn from thee, and cast thee off, notwithstanding the honor and the favor he has shown thee. God will never cast us off while we cleave to him. The willing and obedient he will bless and keep.

Be courageous. Difficulties and discouragements may arise, opposition from various sources may be offered, but fear not; be firm in purpose, strong in resolution, and do thy duty. God is with thee and will aid thee in thy work; therefore, "be strong and do it." Watchfulness over ourselves and confidence in God are needed for successful work for God. Seek ever to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might.—Josh. 1: 6-9.—The S. S. Times.

Ex-Masons.

The list of seceding Masons has grown slowly since our last report. The following names have been sent in. Let others be added as fast as possible. The whole number reported is 132.

Seth W. Gates, Warsaw, N. Y.; A. Wickwire, (3) Sherman Lodge, N. Y.; Wm. Miser, (3) Birmingham, Iowa; E. M. Lawrence, (3) Elmwood, Ill.; Geo. Olney, (1) Elmwood, Ill.; Jacob Lehman (1) Eugene, Ill.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1876.

THE ANNIVERSARY REPORTS will appear as usual in the Cynosure in full. The record of the daily meetings, the addresses and reports will be of such interest that no one at all interested in the reform can afford to lose them. It will be a good time to begin subscriptions and engage many in the work who are yet unacquainted with it. Let there be a host of new readers to begin with next week. The paper is sent three months for 50 cts.

NEW TYPE.—It is with pleasure that we introduce on this page the fair face of the new type provided for our paper. The body is the same as that now used, long primer, but the face of the type being much larger gives a fine clear appearance very comforting to weak or old eyes, while giving the same amount of matter in a column.

NATIONAL REFORM.— The Sixth National Convention of the National Reform Association will meet in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on the 28th inst. The design of this Society is to maintain existing Christian features in the American Government, such as our Sabbath laws and the Bible in the schools, and to secure a religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The sessions of the approaching Convention will continue for three days, and addresses will be delivered by the Hon. Felix R. Brunot, Dr. Miner of Boston, Prof. Stoddard, of Wooster University, Dr. Edwards, and others. Further information concerning the society, and copies of its publications, including the proceedings of this Convention can be obtained of the Christian Statesman, 107 North Seventh street, Philadelphia.

THE CALIFORNIA MEETING.

The meeting in the basement of the Congregational church, Sacramento, Cal., on the 25th ult., was less numerously attended than our good friends in Yolo and Lake counties had hoped. We received too late for last week's issue, the official notice of the Secretary, Phil Beck. We give here extracts from Mr. Beck's notice, as it is scarce worth while to rejoice the enemy by publishing the difficulties through which we struggle. Following are the material parts of Mr. Beck's report:

"The membership of the committee was increased, and each one is requested to consider himself an agent to solicit subscriptions for the Cynosure, to collect funds for the work and the distribution of anti-secrecy literature, to report to the secretary, and remit all funds to the treasurer.

The committee advises the friends to form local organizations in their several localities, that they may be able to send delegates to a future meeting, and have the work begun at home.

The Chairman and Secretary were empowered to employ a lecturer whenever the funds in hand will will warrant it.

"It was advised that those wishing to purchase anti-secrecy literature should club their funds by sending their money and orders to the treasurer, so as to save expressage by getting large bundles. PHIL BECK.

Secretary and Treasurer."

The above shows an admirable spirit and courage in the few brethren on the Pacific Coast, where the lodge is far more powerful than ta the East. Few women went first to that coast, and almost every man was roped into the lodge.

At a Repeal meeting of nearly a million persons, O'Connell said in his speech that the first repeal meeting was in a little room up stairs in Dublin, where he met two men after long advertising. He said "I got one of those men to hold the other by the collar while I went out and brought in a third; so we had a large and respectable meeting of four."

Let brethren Black, Beck, and Harrow "bate no jot of heart or hope." "Our help cometh from the Lord who made heaven and earth, California included; and the manly tone and vigor of the action given above by Mr. Secretary Beck is a hand-writing on the wall of every lodge in California, which will make their Belshazzars tremble.

A CHARITY UNKNOWN TO PAUL.

There is one time when the lodge gives heed to the "poor widow's" story. To meet the arguments of our National Conventions and destroy their local influence it always has a partiality for some tale of mitigated woe. We present them one before hand.

Some time since public attention was called to the funeral ceremonies in honor of Mr. Eddy, a celebrated actor, which took place in the great Masonic Temple in New York. The daily press of that city described the performance as of the most imposing character. The commander descended from his "throne;" incense was burned by the priest before the "ark of the covenant", and the "cherubim;" attendants passed in solemn procession around the bier; "prayers" were offered the "brothers" prostrated themselves; eulogies were pronounced over the dead—and all the ceremonies were of a nature to inspire the deepest awe, and were intended to awaken for the system of Freemasonry the most profound respect and admiration.

The man was buried and then came the second act of the drama. The New York Sun of April 24th shall tell it:

Eleven years ago Henrietta Irving made her first appearance as an actress at the Olympic Theatre, which was then under the management of Mrs. John Wood. Miss Irving was young, beautiful and talented. She worked at once into public favor. In 1867 she married Edward Eddy, the tragedian, who was much her senior in age, but she did not abandon the stage. As Henrietta Irving she continued to act, in conjunction with her husband, and separately as a "star," appearing with success in Shakespearean and other characters, and making herself known to patrons of theaters in nearly every city in the country. Early in the present dramatic season they went to the West Indies with a company, and in Kingston, Jamaica, Mr. Eddy died. An account of his funeral in this city on January 16th, the ceremonies being conducted by Freemasons, was the last that the public saw relating to the popular actress. Yesterday the following letter was received:

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: The widow of a once prominent man, and a Freemason of the 33d degree, appeals to you for life. My late husband, Edward Eddy (actor), died four months ago at Kingston, Jamaica, W. I. I was left financially helpless. I borrowed the means to convey his dear remains home, thinking his lodge would liquidate the debt. I was mistaken. Through some quibble, called the "42d section," they declined to assist me in any way. For weeks I have been confined to my bed by illness, brought on by grief and want. I am without the common necessaries of life—fire, food, or medicine. God help me if this my appeal to you should fail! My illness is augmented by constant duns from Jamaica—the last for the shroud in which my husband was buried. I am heart-broken. I have no acquaintances in the city, but have no doubt that Mr. Eddy had friends who would assist me if they knew my deplorable condition. Will you please make my case known to the public, retaining my address at your office for those who choose to call? Most respectfully,

MRS. EDWARD EDDY.

Mrs. Eddy was found, as she had said in the letter, sick and destitute. A large Newfoundland dog sat by the bed upon which she lay, looking as though he knew his mistress was was in trouble. She was thin and white from long illness, and seemed very weak and nervous. Her surroundings were comfortless. She showed bills and dunning letters from persons in Kingston who had lent money or otherwise assisted in caring for Mr. Eddy's body, and said that her inability to settle had helped to keep her sick. She had supposed that the Freemasons would pay the burial expenses of a member of such a high degree as her husband had been, but was told that he had forfeited his claim by neglecting to pay his dues. He had been wealthy, but had lost all his property, and died poor. The account of her condition given in her letter seems borne out by the facts.

To the community outside the lodge who are wont to listen to the "gushing" advocates of Masonic benevolence, this striking instance of the "universal charity" and tender regard for the "brotherhood of man" will not be lost. If Masons of the highest degree lose their good repute so soon as the clods rattle on their coffins what must the common blue-lodge men—the mobile vulgus—expect? A contemporary well remarks of such cases they "serve to show how much reliance is to be placed on their sympathy when they have before them a real object of charity—a charity that 'seeketh not her own.'"

Position of the N. C. A. in Politics.

As a body the National Christian Association is neither sectarian in religion or political in its measures, nor is it neutral upon any question involving moral issues. It seeks to renovate society and purge out the leaven of hypocrisy, by the unrestricted use of those agencies which God has ordained to this end, and hence as individual members of our commonwealth we are interested in whatever effects the body politic, and as individuals we meet the responsibilities of citizenship untrammeled by party ties. We believe it to be the sacred duty of every Christian to seek the purity and peace of the civil administration; but should the church fulfill its whole mission in this regard it would not be thereby converted into a political compact, so each member of the N. C. A. may encourage and cooperate in political reforms without rendering the Association political in its character any more than were those primitive churches which were organized by the Apostles.

There is a broad field opening before us and the decks are being cleared for action. The result of the Cincinnati convention is better than the preliminary manipulations of that body at one time seemed to warrant us in expecting, but the politics of the county are not likely to be renovated by good men who receive their nominations as a necessity from rings and cliques, and the anti-secrecy reform has no reason to expect much, if any help from the work of the Cincinnati, convention which contained a large element at least, if it was not controlled by Knight Templars, and other active Freemasons. It is plain that we should not be diverted from the plain path of duty, but like the early abolitionists we should discard expediency and policy, and without hesitation give our hearty assent to those measures which are right and our active support to those men only who publicly avow their opposition, to the enforced secretism and relentless despotism of the lodge.

—L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan of Syracuse, N. Y., has been on the way to the National Anniversary for two weeks. He has preached and lectured thirteen times during the last eleven days. He has held meetings at Jackson, Mich., and at LaOtto, Albion, and Ligonier in Indiana. He thinks there seems an unusual disposition, on the part of the people, to listen to the facts and arguments which are so abundant against secretism. Brother Stratton is writing his editorials, leaders, letters and notes, with the quill of a flying wing.

—Baron de Palm, the hero of the Theosophical funeral in Masonic Temple, New York, the other day, was distinguished by the lofty titles of "Grand Cross Commander of the Sovereign Order of the Holy Sepulcher at Jerusalem, Knight of St. John of Malta, Prince of the Roman Empire," etc.

No wonder he wanted to be buried from a lodge "temple" and with "Egyptian" ceremonies.

—The Cincinnati Gazette furnishes another sample of lodge benevolence. Ponder it. Mr. Chas. W. Temple years ago founded a lodge of Freemasons in Oxford, O. He died true to the order and received its hollow honors, and for a time his aged widow was supported by the lodge; but soon they turned her over to the county poor-house, where they allowed her to be turned into a damp cellar room with an insane woman to attend her. After lingering a few months in this pitiable state she died, and then the "ancient and honorable fraternity" sent a committee of one to see to the removal of her remains to Oxford for interment with the honors due a Masonic widow!

The Baptist Publication Society has issued a volume entitled "Baptists and the National Centenary," which has no mention of the old American Baptist, the trumpet of the denomination against slavery and the lodge for years, until it was merged into the Baptist Weekly. The latter says: "This omission is the more inexcusable from the acknowledged fact that, as the organ of the American Baptist Free Missionary Society, this paper along of all the Baptist newspapers of the county, save the The Reflector, of Boston, was outspoken, uncompromising on the sin of slavery, and from its beginning, in 1834, held steadfastly to the principles which were vindicated in the grand results of our civil war. Equally unpardonable is the injustice done to the Rev. Nathan Brown, D. D., whose editorial work receives no word of recognition, though Secretary Chase, more than once, pronounced his articles on the conduct of the war, the ablest he had read in any religious journal of the county." Knowing the management of Freemasonry towards such sturdy opponents as Dr. Brown, it is not unfair to surmise that this suppression of most important historical facts in connection with the record of the Baptist churches of America was instigated by the lodge.

Obituary—John Glendenning.

Another of our fathers in Israel have fallen. Bro. John Glendenning died June 7th. Bro. G. came to Missouri in an early day, while yet the Indian hunted his game on her streams and prairies. About thirty-four years he has stood forth here as the exponent of Methoditism and the religion of the Bible. Without culture, a self-made man, of more than ordinary pulpit ability in the local rank, a life-long anti-secret man, his influence and purse has been identified with the inauguration and growth of the Anti-masonic cause in north Missouri. We weep when we know that he is no more. We hoped to stand together through the present ordeal of our country and its institutions: God has taught us again to look more to him, and not to expect too much from man.

E. G. Cooper.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Missionary and Publishing Boards of the Wesleyan Methodist church met in Syracuse during the early days of the present month. The former invited Rev. N. Wardner, the General Evangelist of the church to spend a season with the Tennessee conference to strengthen the work of the church in that section. It was also decided to enlarge the American Wesleyan to a sixteen page journal like the Cynosure.

—The English Wesleyan congregations were increased by the admission of eleven thousand members last year.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society published 2,682,185 copies of the Bible, the New Testament and text-books of the Scriptures last year.

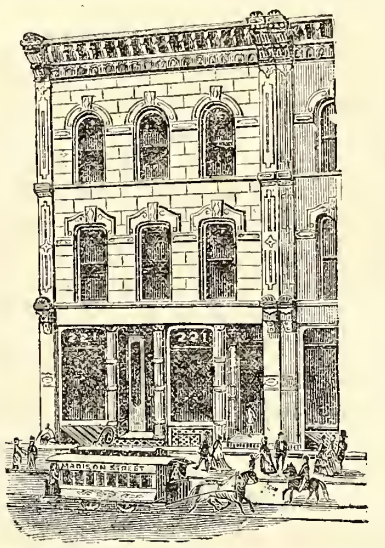
—The largest Sabbath school in the world is at Stockport, England, which has in one room 424 teachers and 3,614 scholars.

The Catholics of Spain number 15,803,753, and the Protestants, 60,000. Portugal has 4,000,000 Catholics and scarcely any Protestants.

—The Baptist churches of New York are much exercised over a new law just engineered secretly through the State Legislature. Until it had become a law comparatively few of the Baptist churches or journals knew anything of its nature. It appears to be an attempt to revive in New York the obnoxious "society" system of New England Congregational churches by means of which the ungodly are placed on a footing with Christians in the management of the business affairs of the churches.

—The statistical report of the United Presbyterian church reported at the last General Assembly gives eight Synods, fifty-seven Presbyteries, 625 ministers, 794 congregations, twenty-four mission stations, 77,414 members, 475 Sabbath-schools with 53,364 scholars who contributed $22,146; the total contributions of the church were $873,675, being an average of $12.56 per number. There are also four theological seminaries with ninety students, and three colleges with 646 students.

News of the Week.



—At the Cabinet meeting last Friday, Secretary Fish stated that he had received official notice of the release of Winslow, the Boston forger. The release of Winslow was carefully discussed and the unanimous opinion reached that the action of the British Government in this case abrogates the tenth article of the Ashburton treaty. It is understood that the President will at an early day, certify the correspondence in the Winslow case to the Senate, accompanied by a special message making suitable recommendations in the premises.

—St. Johns, Quebec, was visited on Sunday by a most disastrous conflagration. A territory six hundred feet wide and a mile in length, embracing the entire business portion of the town, was burned. Seven hotels, nine churches, the Custom-House, Court-House, Post-Office, United States Consulate, two banks, docks, vessels in the river, a portion of the bridge over the Richelieu River, the St. Johns woollen mills, a stone chinaware room, and 250 stores and houses are reduced to ashes.

—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram Company, dated Constantinople, June 16, says that the Ministers were assembled in council last night at the residence of Midhat Pasha, President of the Council, when an officer who had been recently dismissed from service entered the council chamber armed with a revolver and shot and instantly killed Hassien Arni Pasha, Minister of War, and Rachid Pasha, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and seriously wounded Kaiserli Pasha, Minister of Marine. He also killed an aide de camp of the Grand Vizier and a servant of Midhat Pasha. The assassin was arrested. The motive for this terrible crime is supposed to be revenge for his dismissal.

—M. Waddington, French Minister of Public Instruction, has sent a circular to the communal authorities announcing the intention of the government to provide for the education of all children of suitable age, and to build new schools.

—The anti-clerical manifestations were renewed last week in Ghent, Belgium, and some conflicts between the police and the people occurred. Several arrests were made. The gendarmerie charged on the crowd without previously calling on the people to disperse.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

Luther's Psalm.

Carlyle, whose translation this is, pronounced it the greatest production of the kind in modern times.

A safe stronghold our God is, still,
A trusty shield and weapon;
He'll help us clear from all the ill
That hath us now o'ertaken;
The ancient prince of hell
Hath risen with purpose fell;
Strong mail of craft and power
He weareth in this hour,
On earth is not his fellow.

With force of arms we nothing can,
Full soon we were down-ridden;
But for us fights the proper man,
Whom God himself hath bidden.
Ask ye what is his name?
The Lord Zeboah's son;
He, and no other one,
Shall conquer in the battle.

And were this world all devils o'er,
And watching to devour us,
We lay it not to heart so sore,
Nor they can overpower us.
And let the prince of ill
Look grim as e'er he will,
He harms us not a whit;
For why? His doom is writ—
A word shall quickly slay him.

God's word for all their craft and force,
One moment will not linger,
But, spite of hell, shall have its course,
'Tis written by his finger.
And though they take our life,
Goods, honor, children, wife,
Yet is their profit small.
These things shall vanish, all,
The city of God remaineth.

Bring the Babies to Church.

"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God," said Jesus to his disciples when they rebuked those who brought infants to him. This fact is so important as to be recorded in the Gospel of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. Christ says, "Follow me."

At the opening of the Chicago Ave. church Sabbath-school (Mr. Moody's) June 4th, 1876, Mr. Moody said: "When I used to go around gathering up scholars for the Sabbath-school, I found a great many children who used to say that they would be glad to come but that they had to stay away to 'mind the baby.' Bring the babies along. Give those who have to mind the babies a room down stairs by themselves, and have a teacher to instruct them as well as he can." He then added, "I hope the church will never be too proud to have the babies here. Let them sit near the door with them; if they cry carry them out, and when they have their cry out bring them back. I well remember one evening when I was standing in the door of our old church on Illinois St. talking to some one, a lady came along with a child in her arms. I found out she was from England, and had not attended church since she came to this country. 'Are you coming into church this evening?' said I. 'No,' she replied, 'I am too poor to have a nurse for my baby and must stay away.'

'Are you a Christian?'

'No, I am not, but I would like to be.'

"You may come in to-night, and I will preach a sermon for you, and you may be converted during the sermon if you will.'

That woman came in, and all through the service her eyes were fixed on me. If the child stirred she hushed it in her arms, but listened and looked. The next night she came accompanied by her husband, and after service came with him to the inquiry room. "You are not a Christian," I said when I came to her?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Oh! I misunderstood you the other night, did I?'

'No, sir, but you said I might be converted while you were preaching and I was.'

She was converted, her husband was converted, two Englishmen boarding with her were converted. In the morning from one room in her house might be heard the song, 'Rock of Ages,' from another, "Jesus, Lover of my Soul,' and so on. That whole house was filled with joyful songs of praise.

One of the last things I did before going to England was to go and visit that house full of joyful young converts."

How to Use the Bible.

1. When you open the Bible, never forget that it is the Word of God; that he is really speaking to you there as when he spoke to Moses on the Mount; that it embodies the mind of God, and reveals his mercy, his justice, his love, his holiness.

2. Read as a perishing sinner. The Bible reveals God to us as sinners; it supplies us with righteousness as sinners; it makes sure of grace and peace all in Christ Jesus.

3. Read under the conviction tha the Spirit of God must teach you both to understand and to believe the Bible. Without him it is a sealed book.

4. Consider the Word of God as the daily bread of your soul. You cannot live unto God without it.

5. Let Scripture explain Scripture, and use easy portions to shed light upon the more deep and difficult.

6. Never be satisfied with merely skimming the surface of the Bible.—You are to "search the Scriptures." "Plough into the Bible," was the saying of a noted saint.

7. Never think that you know the Bible aright unless the inspired Word has led you to Jesus the Saviour. We miss our object unless we are guided to him as "the Lord our Righteousness," "God with us." Seek him, then in the Bible, first, last, always.

8. Read with prayer for faith, for light, and for the Holy Spirit.

9. Lastly, read evermore for yourself, that you may be humbled, comforted, encouraged, reproved, exhorted, as your soul needs.—Ex.

Telling of It.

Question: Ought one whom Jesus converts or sanctifies, tell it to others? Yes, he ought.

Why ought he to confess?

Because if he does not, he will not keep his blessing!

Because if he does not he will get no new blessing!

Because if he does not, others will not be benefited by his blessing.

Because if he does not, he will be disobeying the Lord, who requires such open confession of the blessing.

Because if he does not, he is refusing to let his "light shine," through his blessing.

Because if he does not, Jesus loses the glory of his blessing.

Because if he does not, he will be wickedly ungrateful to the Saviour who has given him such a precious blessing.

Because if he does not, his refusal to confess will be a virtual denial of his blessing.

Because if he does not, he is yielding to the temptation through which Satan designs to rob him of his blessing.

Because if he does not, it will begin to be doubted, both by himself and others, whether he has the blessing.

Thus it will be, if he does not confess his blessing. Reader, has the Lord pardoned your sins? Has he sanctified you? Then, tell it. So shall more blessings be given, and grace shall be added unto you.—Banner of Holiness.

The Religion of the Kafirs.

The religion of the Kafirs, like that of all other varieties of the "noble savage," is nothing more than a vile superstition, accomplished by customs of a most debasing character. By this religion, woman is degraded to the lowest level, and classed among beasts of burden and the chattles of her masters. Polygamy, of course, is universally allowed, and under the system of purchase which prevails, the number of wives bears proportion to the wealth of the husband. Concubinage is permitted and no idea of purity or virtue is allowed to exist. Witchcraft is the great leading feature of the Kafir religion, and "witch doctors" are its priests. In those places where British influence does not exist a system is regularly carried out, by means of which men with property are sacrificed to the rapacity of the chiefs. A witch doctor "smells out" some person who has caused, or is causing, sickness or some evil. Cruel tortures, followed by death, are immediately applied to the unfortunate victim, and his wives and cattle taken from him. This is an everyday occurrence among Kafirs, and urgent representations are frequently made to British colonial authorities upon the subject. The Kafirs believe in a Supreme Being, but most of their rites are connected with the worship of their deceased ancestors, whose ghosts they endeavor to propitiate. A spiritualist of the nineteenth century holds a belief something similar, and no doubt could fraternize with these savages on the same "religious platform." Christianity has made no real impression upon them, although the great intelligence and aptitude for learning of the people has been proved at one or two well conducted industrial institutions. To use the words of an officer of the government who spent many years among them, "The Gospel has been preached to them for the last fifty years, and some attempts have been made towards civilizing them; but the Kafirs, naturally considered, remain just as they were; no visible difference can be discerned. They are as perfectly heathens now as they were in the days of Vanderkemp, one of the first missionaries, 1798, and so they ever will continue so long as their political government continues to exist in its present pagan form." This extract points to the fact which Sir George Grey thoroughly recognized, and of which the governments of the colonies and the states of South Africa must be well aware, that unless the power of the witch doctors be destroyed, neither can civilization progress, security be secured, nor Christianity prosper. The one great means of stirring up strife, fomenting war, and binding the people to their cruel and infamous religion, is the superstitious belief in the powers and influence of their priests, commonly known as witch doctors. Physically, the Kafir races are particularly fine; stalwart, well formed, manly, and brave. They are also intelligent, and there are now in and on the borders of the colony a number of Christians among them.—Paptist Weekly.

Christian Laconics.

The path of duty is sometimes thorny; yet many a thorn do we escape by walking in it.—Prov. xiii. 15; Ps. xxv. 10.

Grace, though attractive in any form, is ever most lovely when veiled by humility.—Pet. v. 5.

The doctrines of the Bible would be less disliked in theory, if they were more improved in practice.—1 Pet. ii. 15; Tit. ii. 10.

Among the children of God there is not only a family love, but a family likeness.—1 Cor. xii. 13; v. 17; Rom. xv. 5, 6.

What is merely matter of prayer on earth will be entirely matter of praise in heaven.—Rev. v. 9.

Make not an idol of means; for with or without means God can work, but without God no means whatever can avail.—1 Cor. iii. 6. 7.

Saints must not only be earnest in praying, but active in working; while Moses was pleading in the mount, Joshua was fighting in the plain.—Exod. xvii. 11, 12.

Association naturally leads to assimilation; the more we are with Christ, the liker we become to him.—2 Cor. iii. 18; Acts iv. 13.

To prevail, we must not only speak, but wrestle in prayer; this was the secret of Jacob's success.—Heb. v. 7; James v. 16.

Christ had no sin of his own, yet he was condemned; saints have no righteousness of their own, yet they are justified.—2 Cor. v. 21.

We can carry nothing with us from the world; truly, then there is little worth loving in the world.—1 Tim. vi. 8.

A deceitful heart within, and a deceitful world without, should make saints walk warily.—Eph. v. 15.

Had we more faith, we would have less fear.—Matt. xiv. 31.

Many hate the believer's life, who would give worlds to enjoy the believer's death.—Num. xxiii. 10.

Answer Them.

Parents run the risk of losing the love of their children who put aside their trivial questions as of no consequence. An interrogation point symbolizes the life of childhood. "Why" and "What" are the keys with which it unlocks the treasury of the world. The boy's numberless questions often seem trivial, but the wise parent will never turn them off unanswered, if he can help it. It is his rich opportunity of teaching. He is met half way, and there is all the difference between impressing truth on an eager mind and an uninterested one. The little fellow, helping you at your work and pelting you with endless questions, may learn as much in a half-hour there as in a week when his body is a prisoner in the school-room, and his thoughts are out of doors.

—The London Saturday Review remarks: "It is said that the practice of making their scholars learn by heart is now almost abandoned in our grammar schools. If this is really the case, a greater mistake has not been made in English schools since the revival of learning. The basis of all sound knowledge and of all true appreciation of the literature of any language is a careful, reverent, pondering study of the text of the best authors who have written in it. And in the process of such a study learning by heart is a most important, it might almost be said an indispensable element. No means, for example, are so effective for helping the young scholar over the formidable difficulties which he must encounter when he first breaks ground in a literary language. No other process gives him so easily and so quickly a vocabulary; none gives him so speedy or so sure a mastery of genders and quantities, of the combinations of case, of exceptional inflections, of the right order and relations of words in a sentence, and of the other rudimentary idioms of construction."

Children's Corner.

A Child's Consecration.

What can I give my Saviour,
Who gave so much to me?
I can repay him never
Whose blood has made me free.
Such as I have I'll give him—
The labor of my hands;
My feet shall run to serve him
Who broke my slavish bands.

I'll give my time to Jesus;
Not only prayer and praise
Shall do the Master honor,
But humble, working days;
And every lowly labor
Performed in love for him,
He will himself acknowledge
When suns and stars are dim.

I'll give, if I have money,
Or lend it to the Lord;
I shall not want for any,
Depending on his word.
I'll give my heart to Jesus—
All other gifts were poor—
Mind, soul, and all my being,
While endless years endure.

Missionary Cabbage.

"Boy at the door wants to know if you'd like to buy a missionary cabbage!"

I do not think much of cabbage; but a missionary cabbage, I was sure must, have some extra qualities which might make it worth buying, as I went to the door and found it had.

1. It was raised by a poor, little lame Sabbath-school scholar.

2. It was raised for the love he had to his Saviour, and from a desire to do something to spread his kingdom.

3. It was brought a mile, slung on his shoulder.

I bought the cabbage, and sent it to eke out the dinner of a poor widow with four children. The little boy thankfully took the sixpence paid for the cabbage and put it in his charity box, to give to some child poorer than he. Perhaps it may be the means of bringing one—two—three to Jesus Christ; and the little lame boy may some time meet in heaven those who came there by this simple act of pious love.—Sel.

The Old-time Spirit.

John Howe of Marlborough, 1775, a quiet farming town, was cobbling at a pair of shoes which he had promised should be done within an hour, when he heard that the British were marching to Concord. Being a man of his word be kept at his work, notwithstanding the excitement and the departure of his townsmen. He had just finished the job when Polly Smith, the young woman who kept the house where he boarded, ran into the shop.

"John! John!" she cried with glowing cheeks and flashing eyes, "you ought to have been off to Concord an hour ago. Every other man in the village has got there by this time!"

"Twouldn't be of any use for me to go, anyhow! I haven't got any bullets," said John.

"Come into the house and run some, then," said Polly.

"I haven't anything to make them of."

"O, I'll find something for you to make 'em of," and Polly darted into the house.

Seizing every spoon on the dresser she immediately returned to him.

"Here, take these," she said, "and if you want more I'll get 'em for you."

In those days all the spoons in common use were made of pewter.

John was soon supplied with balls. Taking his old gun, he started on the long walk of fourteen miles, through the woods to Concord. Whenever he passed a house, the women and children all cheered him.

Reaching Concord, he found the British were just starting from what is now the Agricultural Grounds, on their retreat to Boston.

A wounded "red-coat," lying beside the road, begged John, as he passed by to put an end to his misery.

"No," said John, "I aint quite a brute, but I'll just change pieces with you, and leave you to the women."

Exchanging his old gun for the enemy's new musket and ammunition he joined in the pursuit, and did good service on the way to Charleston Neck.

John Howe enlisted at Cambridge for the war, and fought at Bunker Hill. He was in most of our important battles of the seven years' contest, and never came home until the British sailed for England! Being hardy, faithful and zealous, he was frequently chosen by Washington for dangerous enterprises. He was one of the most useful men in the army, and once saved Washington's life. At the end of the war it was Col. Howe who returned to Marlborough.

Polly Smith, during these years, had been spinning, weaving, knitting for the soldiers. She was the first person Col. Howe sought. When, however, he returned her spoons, they were of silver, and marked "Polly Howe."

The descendants of John and Polly are among the most highly honored in our country.—Youth's Companion.

I'll Pay You for That!

A hen trod on a duck's foot. She did not mean to do it and did not hurt her much. But the duck said "I'll pay you for that!" So the duck flew at the hen; but as she did so her wing struck an old goose who stood close by.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the goose, and she flew at the duck; but as she did so her foot tore the fur of a cat who was just then in the yard.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the cat, and she flew at the goose; but as she did so her tail brushed the eye of a sheep who was near.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the sheep, and he ran at the cat; but as he did so his foot hit the foot of a dog who lay in the sun.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the sheep; but as he did so his leg struck an old cow who stood by the gate.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried she, and she ran at the dog; but as she did so her horn grazed the skin of a horse who stood by a tree.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the cow. What a run there was! The horse flew at the cow: and the cow at the dog; and the dog at the cat; and the cat at the goose; and he goose at the duck; and the duck at the hen. What a noise they made to be sure!

"Hi, hi! What is all this?" cried the man who had the care of them. "I cannot have this noise. You may stay here," he said to the hen. But he drove the duck to the pond, and the goose to the field, and the cat to the barn, and the sheep to her fold, and the dog to his house, and the cow to her yard, and the horse to his stall. 'I'll pay you for that!" said the man.—Nursery.

Curious Freak of a Dog.

A Radnorshire lady, who was married in March and came to reside in Yorkshire, England, recently paid a visit to her father, who, before she was married, had kept two or three sheep-dogs of which she was very fond. Since then he has retired from business, and disposed of all but one dog. This one met the lady with demonstrations of great delight upon her arrival at her father's house, and that night the dog went a distance of seven miles to a farm-house where one of the other dogs had been sent. (The latter was blind, but kept as being an old favorite). In the morning when the lady went to the door she not only saw the dog which had given her such a glad reception the day previously, but also the old blind one, which had evidently been brought by the other dog to welcome. When the second night came the old blind one was taken back to its home by the same dog, which afterward returned, having traveled a distance of twenty-eight miles to give pleasure to the old blind one.

Home and Health Hints.

Curing Sunstroke.

I believe sunstroke and apoplexy can be cured almost surely if taken in any kind of time.

1. Rub powerfully on the back head and neck, making horizontal and downward movements. This draws blood away from the front brain and vitalizes the involuntary nerves.

2. While rubbing call for cold water immediately, which apply to the face and to the hair on the top and side of the head.

3. Call for a bucket of water as hot as can be borne and pour it by dipperfuls on the back head and neck for several minutes. The effect will be wonderful for vitalizing the medulla oblongata; it vitalizes the whole body, and the patient will generally start up into full conscious life in a very short time.

Last Summer I was called in to see a man on Fourth avenue. I found him in a state of coma, and his wife was agonizing over him, supposing him to be dead. He had lain thus for about three hours. I had him brought out where he could get the air, jerked off his clothes, rubbed his back head and neck powerfully, slapped his back, legs and feet briskly, and called for iced water, which I applied to his front and upper head. I then had a bucket of hot water brought, which I poured on his back head and neck. Before doing this I had noticed some signs of life on applying the cold water in front, but after pouring a few minutes he started up, vomited, and exclaimed, "All right!" I spent in all only about twenty minutes in thus resuscitating him.

Persons of large. active brains and weak bodies will be more liable to sunstroke or apoplexy, and should wear light-colored, cool hats in summer, wet the hair occasionally, and if they feel a brain pressure coming on, should rub briskly on the back neck, and put cold water on the front and top head. —Dr. Babbitt.

Managing Windows for Air.

There is always a draught through key-holes and window crevices, because as the external air is colder than the air in the room we occupy, it rushes through the window crevices to supply the deficiency caused by the escape of warm air up the chimney. If you open the lower sash of a window, there is more draught than if you open the upper sash. The reason of this is because if the lower sash be open, cold air will rush into the room and cause a great draught inward; but if the upper sash be opened the heated air of the room will rush out, and of course there will be less draught inward.

A room is best ventilated by opening the upper sash, because the vitiated air, which always ascends toward the ceiling, can escape more easily. The wind dries damp linen, because dry wind, like a sponge, imbibes the particles of vapor from the surface of the linen as fast as they are formed. The hottest place in a church or chapel is the gallery, because the heated air of the building ascends, and all the cold air which can enter through the doors and windows keeps to the floor till it has become heated.

Special attention should be given to the ventilation of sleeping-rooms; for pure air and an abundance of it, is, if possible, more necessary when we are asleep than when we are awake. Sleeping-rooms should be large, high and airy, more especially in warm latitudes, and in situations where the windows have to be kept closed at night on account of malaria.

FINANCE REPORT OF KEYSTONE LODGE, CHICAGO.

The question is frequently asked both by Masons and others what becomes of all the money collected by Freemason lodges, Chapters, Commanderies, etc. The following report of the Finance Committee of the now notorious Keystone Lodge No. 639, will materially assist in answering this question, while it also seems to illustrate the character of Masonic lodges in general—the honesty of their members, and the manner in which they are usually organized. How can an institution based upon such corruption, fraud, and wholesale swindling, be beneficial to mankind, or an advantage to its individual members; and the case of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago, is but one out of a hundred organized by the Grand Lodge of Illinois, under similar circumstances.

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE.

ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.

The Holy Bible on the altar is usually opened at the 123d Psalm and the square and compass placed thereon, the latter open and both points placed below the square.

Preparation of Candidate E. A. Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.—He is ushered into the "preparation room," where he meets the Junior Deacon and Stewards who divest him of all his clothing except his shirt. He is then handed an old pair of drawers which he puts on; the left leg is rolled up above the knee; the left sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, a hoodwink is fastened over both eyes, a rope, called a cable-tow, is put once around his neck, and a slipper (with the heel slip-shod) is put upon the right foot.

Due-guard of an E. A.

Penal Sign of an E. A.

DUE-GUARD OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Hold out the left hand a little in front of the body and in a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open and palm turned upward. Now place the right hand horizontally across the left and about two or three inches above it.

PENAL SIGN OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly; at the same time raise the right arm and draw the hand, still open, across the throat, thumb next the throat, and drop the hand hand perpendicularly by the side. These movements ought to be made in an off-hand manner, without stiffness.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD:—(The usual way outside the lodge.) Simply draw the open hand carelessly across the throat and let it fall down by the side.

Candidate taking Entered Apprentice Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—"You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked left knee, your right forming a square, your left hand supporting the holy Bible, square and compass, your right resting thereon, in which due form you will say, I, with your name in full, and repeat after me."

GRIP OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the first knuckle-joint of the first finger near the hand. If the person whom you are shaking hands with is a Mason, he will generally return a like pressure on your hand.

ENTERED APPRENTICE WORD—Boaz. It is the name of this grip.

ENTERED APPRENTICE STEP.—Step off one step with the left foot and bring the heel of your right foot to the hollow of your left.

FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE.

The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 7th chapter of Amos and one point of the compass elevated above the square.

Preparation in Fellow Craft Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE:—He is ushered into the "preparation room" as before, and divested of all his clothing as in the preceding degree. In this case the right leg of the old drawers is raised up above the knee, the right sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, the slipper is now put upon the left foot, the left heel being slip-shod. The hoodwink is again put over both eyes and the cable-tow is put twice around the naked right arm and an apron tied on, in which condition he is "duly and truly prepared" and led by the Junior Warden to the door of the lodge as before.

Candidate taking Fellow Craft Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked right knee, your left forming a square, your right hand resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass, your left forming a right angle supported by the square in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full, and repeat after me.

Due-guard Fellow Craft.

DUE-GUARD OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Hold out the right hand a little from the body and on a line with the lower button of the vest, the palm being open and turned down-ward; also raise the left arm so as to form a right angle at the elbow, from the shoulder to the elbow being horizontal and fore-arm perpendicular.

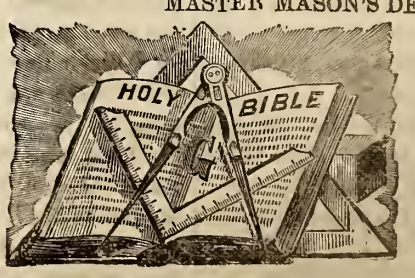
Sign, Fellow Craft.

SIGN OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly to the side and at the same time raise the right hand to the left breast, with the palm towards the breast and the fingers a little crooked; then draw the hand smartly across the breast from left to right and let it drop perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE GUARD.—(The usual way outside the lodge). Draw the right hand, palm open and fingers a little crooked, smartly across the breast from left to right and drop it carelessly by your side.

PASS-GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the first and second knuckles of the right hand. Should the person whose hand you hold be a Fellow Craft, he will return a like pressure on your hand, or else may give you the grip of an Entered Apprentice.

PASS OF FELLOW CRAFT—Shibboleth. It is the name of this grip.



REAL GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other by the right hand as in ordinary hand-shaking and press top of your thumb hard against the second knuckle. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Fellow Craft, he will return a similar pressure on your hand, or may possibly give you any one of the two preceding grips.

WORD OF FELLOW CRAFT—Jachin. It is the name of this the real grip.

FELLOW CTAFT OR SECOND STEP.—Step off one step with the right foot and bring the heel of the left foot to the hollow of the right; your feet forming the angle of an oblong square.

MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.

The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes and both points of the compass elevated above the square.

Preparation of Candidate in Master Mason's Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.—He is conducted into the preparation room as in the preceding degree. All his clothing is removed as before; both legs of the drawers are tucked up above the knees, both sleeves of the shirt are tucked up above the elbows, both breasts of the shirt are turned in, making both breasts bare. The hoodwink is again fastened over both eyes and the cable-tow is put three times around his body. No slipper is used in this degree. Should the shirt be closed in front, it must be taken off or turned front-backwards, as both breasts must be bare. An apron is then tied on and worn as a Fellow Craft, and thus he is "duly and truly prepared."

Candidate taking Master Mason's Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate, "You will advance to the altar, kneel upon both your naked knees, both hands resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full and repeat after me"

Dne-guard Master Mason.

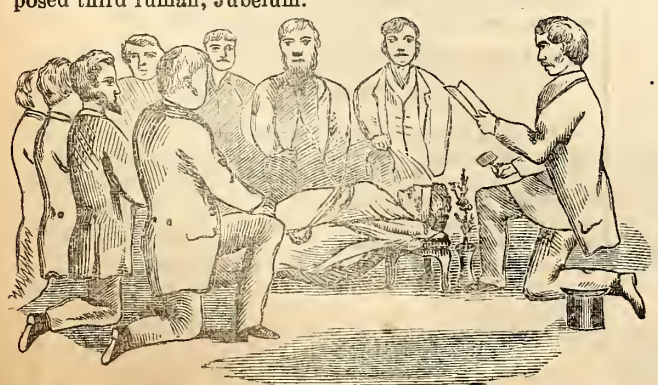
Penal Sign, Master Mason.

DUE-GUARD OF A MASTER MASON.—Extend both hands in front of the body on a line with the lower button of the vest with the palms open and turned downward, both hands being close together, thumbs nearly touching.

SIGN OF A MASTER MASON.—Made from the due guard by dropping the left hand carelessly and drawing the right across the body from left to right side on a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open as before, palm downward and the thumb towards the body. Then drop the hand perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD.—(Ordinary manner outside the lodge.) Simply draw the right hand as above described, carelessly across the body and drop it by the side.

PASS-GRIP OF A MASTER MASON.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the second and third knuckles. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Mason he may return or give any previous grip.



PASS OF MASTER MASON—Tubal Cain. It is the name of this grip.

STRONG GRIP OF A MASTER MASON OR LION'S PAW.—Grasp each other's right hands very firmly, the spaces between the thumb and first finger being interlocked and the tops of the fingers being pressed hard against each other's wrist where it joins the hand, the fingers of each being somewhat spread.

CANDIDATE AS HIRAM ABIFF FALLING INTO THE CANVASS, having been struck in the forehead by the setting maul of the supposed third ruffian, Jubelum.

Prayer at "Raising Hiram Abiff," (Candidate) See Ronayne's Hand-Book,

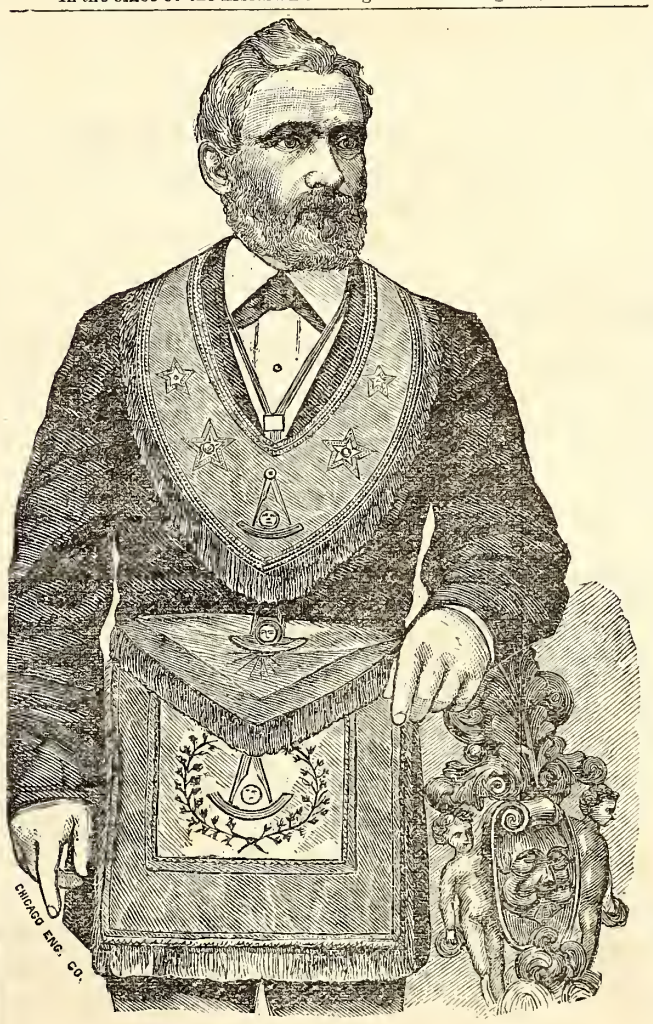
FIVE POINTS OF FELLOWSHIP.

Five Points of Fellowship.

Worshipful Master:—Which are the five points of fellowship?

Senior Deacon:—Foot to foot (Master and candidate extend their right feet, placing the inside of one against that of the other). Knee to knee (they bring their right knees together); breast to breast (they bring their right breasts together); hand to back (Master places his left hand on the candidate's back, the candidate's is placed by the Deacon on the Master's back); cheek to cheek or mouth to ear (Master puts his mouth to candidate's right ear thus bringing the right cheek of each together. See figure).

MASTER'S WORD:—(whispered in the ear of the candidate), Mah-hah-bone, after which the candidate whispers the same word in the Master's ear.



Grand Hailing Sign, Second position.

GRAND HAILING SIGN OR SIGN OF DISTRESS OF A MASTER MASON.—Raise both arms perpendicularly above the head and let them fall by three distinct motions. The first motion brings the arms to the position as seen in the figure, from the shoulder to the elbow horizontal and from the elbow to the finger-tips perpendicular. In the second motion the arms from the shoulder to the elbow are nearly close to the sides, from the elbow to the finger-tips still upright, and in the third motion the hands are dropped to the side. The words "O Lord my God, is there no help for the Widow's Son?" are never to be given with the sign outside the lodge-room. They are given only in the dark or when the sign cannot he used.

MASTER MASON OR THIRD STEP.—Step off one step with the left foot and bring the heel of the right to the heel of the left, the feet forming the angle of a square.

To Worshipful Master, Wardens and Brethren of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, F. A. M.:—We your Committee on Finances in our official capacity heg leave to make this our report: That we find that ex-Secretary Bro. Leo. Canman, is short in the money he received as due this lodge, and the amount that he has paid over to the Treasurer and taking his receipt therefor $142.35. Also that Past Master Bro. M. Shields in going to Springfield to procure dispensations and charter for Keystone Lodge, has unwontonly, unnecessarily and extravagantly expended the funds of this lodge, over and above what was really necessary, to the amount of over three hundred dollars, and at a time when the lodge could least afford. And we your Committee on Finance, also, find that ex-Treasurer Bro. F. Metzke, has in face of his repeated promises to pay no money out of this lodge except by order of the W. Master and the consent of the lodge, paid out money to the amount of $428.00 on the W. Master's order alone. We therefore your Committee on Finance respectfully request that the whole matter he referred to the Grievance Committee with instruction to bring in charges and specifications against P. M. Bro. M. Shield, ex-Treasurer Bro. F. Metzke, ex-Secretary Bro. Leo. Canman, for un-Masonic conduct, if they can find good and sufficient grounds for the same.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicougrapher, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts;

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan.

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,

CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

Those who wish to circulate Antimasonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from.

J. G. Rounds, Summerfield, O., sends n five renewals. Though we value new subscriptions highly we prize renewals more. We do not like to lose old friends.

We ordered the photo engravings and Declaration of Independence some time ago but they have not yet arrived. Those who have seen our samples consider them beautiful and wonderfully cheap at fifty cents for the two. We paid two dollars and thirty-six cents for frames for the engraving "Signing the Declaration" and Key, and one dollar for a frame for the D claration of Independence, and so have two beautiful pictures for three dollars and eighty-six cents, framed. There is much more patriotism inspired by these pictures than by a large amount of powder. They are good to celebrate the "Fourth" with.

Rev. J. G. Carson's Address before the Ohio State Convention, which was completed in our last number is now published in pamphlet form, at 10 cents each, 75 cents per dozen by mail and $4 50 per 100 by express; 25 or more at 100 rates.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Battle Song of the Pentlands.

FOUGHT ON NOVEMBER 28, 1666.

This day must set in blood!
Each true man to his post!
Strike for the Crown and Covenant,
And God be with his host!

Though few and faint we be, and the tempests wildly blow,
Yet, here, upon this naked heath, we fearless dare the foe.
Long hath the tyrant raged, and the people have been dumb
Sword of the Lord! avenge the past, and free the time to come.

Not for the fading leaf that decks the conquer-or's head,
Nor sinful thirst for blood or gold, our feet have hither led.
We combat for our rights—for our heritage di-vine.
O Lord! look down from heaven in love, and visit this thy vine.

Our homes in blackness lie, and our pleasant fields are waste,
And our fathers and our brethren like beasts of prey are chased.
Our priests are driven forth, and our temples are defiled;
And the house of God must now be sought far in the desest wild.

And now, that front to front we have met the ty-rant's horde,
Wo be to him that slacks his arm, or turns away his sword!
Better to fall in fight for the charter of our land,
Than pine in bondage and in fear—a crouching, hunted band.

And if we fall, this hill like Lebanon shall grow,
And other times in gladness reap what we in trouble sow;
And where our ashes rest, beneath the heather sod,
The youth of Scotland shall renew their cov-enant with God.

This day must set in blood!
Each true man to his post!
Strike for the Crown and Covenant,
And God be with his host.

O'Connell and Masonry.

Just as to-day, the servile press receives the order to declare that Washington and Lafayette were Masons, and therefore Masonry cannot be bad, so then they sought to win recruits by affirming that O'Connell, the idol of the Irish, was a Mason. So, indeed, they hope to delude some poor Catholic to-day, for he might fairly argue, "If O'Connell the greatest Catholic layman in Ireland was a Mason, and saw no harm in it, why may I not be a Mason too, when it will bring a few more customers to my grocery?" It was thus, that in O'Connell's day a paragraph was sent "the rounds of the Irish newspapers, purporting to have my" (O'Connell's) "sanction. Stating that I" (O'Connell) "had been at one time a Master of a Masonic lodge in Dublin, and that I" (O'Connell) "still continued to be a member of that society."

O'Connell dealt with this paragraph in a satisfactory manner. We are certain that no one who is zealous for the Catholic name of O'Connell will hesitate to say that the "shock to the faith" was not very disastrous when it was diminished by the following manly letter from him which is so far from being a new discovery in 1875—notwithstanding the intimation of the Commercial—that many of our Irish readers have had it in their libraries for the past twenty-seven years, in Fagan's "Life of O'Connell." We quote it without abbreviation, as condensation adds neither lucidity nor strength to anything O'Connell wrote:

"It is true that I was a Freemason and a Master of a lodge. It was at a very early period of my life, and either before an ecclesiastical censure had been published in Ireland prohibiting the taking of Masonic oaths by members of the Catholic Church, or at least before I was aware of that censure. I now wish to state that, having become acquainted with it, I submitted to its influence, and many, very many years ago, unequivocally renounced Freemasonry. I offered the late Archbishop, Dr. Troy, to make that renunciation public, but he deemed it unnecessary. I am not sorry to have this opportunity of so doing.

"Freemasonry in Ireland may be said to have (apart from its oaths) no evil tendency, save as far as it may counteract in some degree the exertions of those laudable and useful institutions—institutions deserving of every encouragement—the temperance societies. But the great, the important question is this—the profane taking in vain of the awful name of the Deity—in the wanton and the multiplied taking of oaths—of oaths administered on the Book of God either in mockery or derision, or with a solemnity which renders the taking of them without any adequate motive only the more criminal. This objection, which perhaps I do not state strongly enough, is alone abundantly sufficient to prevent any serious Christian from belonging to that body. My name having been dragged before the public in connection with this subject, it is, I think, my duty to prevent any person supposing that he was following my example in taking oaths, which I now certainly would not take, and consequently becoming a Freemason, which I certainly would not do now."

Some Illegal Hiddenness Laid Bare.

BY D. B. TURNEY.

Oath-bound secrecy is liable to many grave objections in the minds of all reasonable and candid men, who have ever given the question any thought whatever.

1st, The practical tendency of it is bad. This is too well known to need any special proving; for it is found opposing the mandates of God, violating his carefully revealed will, and urging its deluded votaries to "ever conceal and never reveal" its mysteries, with the assurance of peace and an immortal resurrection at the end. Men generally do not need much urging to induce them to walk in the way of death; hence, the popularity of oath-bound secrecy.

2d, All of its associations are evil. This is a fact that cannot be denied. There could not be a more impressive article written against oath-bound secrecy, than a mere collection of the confessions of dying criminals. Somehow, these have always approved of oath-bound concealments, and also of extra-judicial oaths. The history of crime and of oath-bound secrecy will always be read in one and the same chapter, if we may correctly judge of the future by the past. So we may do well to oppose the elevation to office to those who minister at the altar of Freemasonry. Although expecting to be a Republican nominee for representative to Congress in the 16th district of this State, I intend to have it distinctly understood that I am opposed to Freemasonry on principle. I am against corruption wherever found. The works that have been published in the interests of Freemasonry quote frequently from the Bible. That is true. But to cite the Scriptures fluently will not be a very substantial proof of saintliness. The devil once had the presumption to quote the Bible in an effort to tempt our Saviour himself; and we know what a parade various heretics make over the book. Oath-bound secrecy is too much like a fiddle that will play different tunes, according to the skill of the fiddler. "It will aid in psalmody, and goes finely in a dance." But that does not make it right for men to use the Bible in the same two-faced way. I believe in the truth and authority of the Bible, and feel unwilling to see a deceitful handling of the word. The passages quoted by Freemasons from that book are not relevant to the point, while the Bible abounds with numerous passages which teach the wickedness of extra-judicial swearing, the unlawfulness of oaths of concealment, the dangerousness of assuming an obligation concerning an unknown thing, etc. With all these, the minister of Christ who has been beguiled into the lodge is familiar. He feels and knows the power of these texts, and yet the slavery of his oath-pledged secrecy makes him dumb, whenever he sees any of these items in the counsel of God. Could his mistaught and confiding people but know the misgivings of their Masonic pastor, they would feel that the risk is great in supporting such a man. He knows Freemasonry to be of bad tendency; but he does not dare to whisper his knowledge even to his wife. He knows that the Bible condemns oaths of concealment and regards a foresworn man as perjured; but a wink of his eye might betray him. He knows that his standing as a Freemason will be urged as proof that the institution is a good one; but he has not the courage to warn his flock that he has found it to be a system of vanity and lies. He daubs with untempered mortar, sews pillows to all arm-holes, and finally lands himself in a world beyond death that is too warm for comfort. "For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel: for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers, also, be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works."—2 Cor. xi; 13-15. My language is as mild as the facts will permit it to be. I do not speak too strongly. Here and there a Freemason refuses to renounce because he feels ashamed to tell the public what a fool he was, and what a donkey he had made of himself. Besides, he knows that a virulent storm of persecution will beat upon him, in the event of his renouncing. He is ensnared, like a mouse in a trap. He could get in, but no method of extrication seems to allow him to get out; and he dare not squeal. That is his situation. There is no way of escape. He desires to retreat, but everything blocks the way until he is thoroughly intimidated, and even made to believe that he is bound by his extra-judicial oaths of concealment. His assumed obligations forbid disclosure. He could not bear to be accused of Masonic perjury, and so he commits spiritual perjury by going on. That is too often just what occurs, and it is useless to deny the fact. Let us, the-true to ourselves, by scratching from the tickets which we vote the name of any and every Freemason that may be found there. We see the almost entire subjugation of the public press to Freemasonry. The order has control of most the offices, and the frauds and intrigues that are going on, to obtain further power, should make us slow to trust these men. I hope that we may weigh well the importance of trying to rescend our fellow men from the clutches of this monstrous system of iniquity. Whenever Freemasonry is brought into the political arena, by its opponents, in anything like the form of a thorough canvass, the secret order will lose its prestige and power. It is an impious, blasphemous system of falsehood. Let it fall. Good men will say, Amen; and bad men will weep. But Freemasonry is wrong, and whatever is wrong must perish. May the Lord hasten the time in our day!

WOBURN, Ill.

Errors of Good Men.

BY REV. W. POST.

There are not a few persons who, designing no doubt to help those in whom they are interested, and thinking there is principle involved as well as principle at stake, and are seeking to defend the right, make a free use of certain passages of Scripture in the way of exhortation to set erring (?) brethren at rights, such as, "Come out of her, my people," Rev. xviii. 4; and "Come out from among them and be ye separate," &c.

These words of the Holy Spirit are faithfully applied by those good friends but not without some evidence of either an improper understanding, or an inconsiderate, use of the Holy Oracles. For instance; Christians are exhorted to "come out" of the Christian church to which they belong, because said church has become demoralized greatly by "evil men and seducers" who have "crept in unawares." And the above quoted Scriptures are used in justification of such exhortations, which if not wrested from their legitimate signification, or at least if not illegitimately applied but used in the sense in which the Holy Spirit designed, then are such kindly admonitions worthy of prompt attention, and their authors of affectionate regard. And in such a case we are exceedingly culpable and blameworthy if we do not regard such timely and God-like warnings.

Now the question arises, does the Holy Spirit intend to convey the idea in said Scriptures that church members must sever their relation from Christian churches? If the reader will examine carefully the instructions of the "Spirit" to the angel (minister) of the Asiatic churches, Revelations, second and third chapters, he will find an entire silence on the point of "separation" though the most of the churches were intensely corrupt, backslidden and lukewarm. The few that had been faithful were not admonished to separate their church relations, but to "hold fast" that which they had till the Lord should come and be watchful and strengthen the things which remained, that were ready to die" to "be faithful" to God in all their church relations unto death."

Nor can we recall any instruction of our Lord to formal separation even from the Jewish church, but on one occasion commanded his disciples "All, therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do, but do ye not after works; for they say and do not." Matt. xxiii. 1-3. At a glance it will be seen that the separation called for by the Holy Spirit is from idolatry, from among idolaters and idolatrous worship. Let the reader carefully peruse the chapters, and parallel Scripture texts, to which we have been cited and he will see that that is the case; and in this commentators agree. Albert Barnes commenting thereon, says, "There never was any duty plainer than that of withdrawing from papal Rome. There might be found in her some who were the true people of God. It was their duty to separate wholly from her." Also referring to the same subject he says, "Come out from among idolators and unbelievers, from a gay and vicious world." See his notes of Revelations 18. p. 437, and 2 Corinthians vi. p. 157. Some may from valid and justifiable reasons retire from one branch of a Christian church to another, and some may withdraw from all, and perhaps get to heaven at last, but all this will not justify any one in misapplying God's Holy Word. On this point we have need to be exceedingly careful lest we sin and ruin some soul forever. A heathen church, the mother of harlots, and its prototype, Freemasonry, and all organizations which despise and reject Jesus Christ and the Christian religion, and a Christian church, where Christ is the Alpha and Omega, are two different things altogether. It is safe to separate from the first, but dangerous to separate from the last. And what is a soul bettered to leave one Christian church to go to another for the sake of getting away from bad people. Where will you find a church into the midst of which an enemy hath not sown tares? In what church embrace will we not need to "watch and pray?"

The branch to which your humble servant belongs has in his estimation committed an offence at its late session of General Conference, demanding the highest censure, and sends its truest friends back to the throne of grace weeping, just as did the fugitive slave law &c., once the poor Christian slave. But these bindings on of burdens are ominous, and God is taking cognizance of all things. The deluded committee whose light is darkness, must bear its own burdens, though the General Conference appeared as a great scape-goat to bear away its sins. Though the whole shameful proceedings (and we have not yet learned that a demurrer was issued), credits us as a body with advocating, that the corrupt, murderous, blaspheming, Christ-rejecting, idolatrous Freemasonry stands on a par with the Gospel of our blessed Lord who taught "Love thy neighbor as thyself," yet we have not fallen so low as some of the Asiatic churches did, and therefore pray that God will have mercy, and enable us to repent quickly lest the candlestick be removed.

The grand license, couched in the report, to our members to become Masons, will undoubtedly encourage Masonic lecturing ministers to occupy our pulpits more freely to show the people how divine the institution is, at the same time all exposes of the iniquity will be proportionately denied our pulpits.

"Stand the storm" brethren, multitudes of our church who were not at General Conference have not, nor do they intend to bow the knee to Baal. Brethren, ministers and bishops are but men—(cursed is he that trusteth in man), and policy men too sometimes. Stand steady at the helm brethren. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men," be strong; and "let all your doings be done in charity," and may the God of peace and power be with us; Amen.

Brethren, though at the last Conference held in Buffalo, the Masonic P. E's. voted one of its members supernumerary, a dastardly act, in the face of an entreating people, by petition, unanimous—save a slight Masonic exception, and left him unrighteously without work, yet his "natural force is not abated, nor his eye grown dim" that he cannot follow "pursuing," or seeing cannot perceive the abomination that maketh desolate which standeth in the holy place, and is determined to stand to his post. "The devil may cast some into prison" that they "may be tried," but fear none of these things which ye shall suffer; if faithful unto death ye shall conquer forever.

The Masonic Grand Chaplain of Illinois.

The public utterances of public men are common property, and it is no infringement of their rights to hold them up to public criticism. The Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, Rev. J. W. Martin, pastor of the M. E. church in Streator, in a speech recently made at the laying of a corner stone in Bement, is thus reported in a Streator paper:—

"Masonry is the grandest type of philanthropy; such as God proclaimed to the world, and sent his angels to guard. There is a niche in the universe that nothing else can fill but Masonry. God has placed this heaven-blessed institution for a grand purpose."

Now, without wishing to deny the statement of the Rev. Chaplain, I can only express my extreme sorrow that the very persons who most need this, "grandest type of benevolence" are forever excluded from it. That the poor, the maimed, and the blind, all old men, women and children, are shut out. Then, too, it seems a little strange that Jesus should thank his Heavenly Father that his system of philanthropy had been "hidden from the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes," while the babes are the very class that can know nothing of this.

But then I am sorely puzzled to know how or when it was that God sent his angels to proclaim Masonry to the world, and to guard it. I can easily comprehend that a (fallen) angel might act as tyler and guard the entrance of the lodge, but exactly how an institution that is to be always concealed and never revealed under penalty of having the throat cut and the tongue torn out by its roots, could be "proclaimed to the world"—perhaps Bro. Martin will give us some light on this point.

But then we are told that there is a niche in the universe that something else can fill but Masonry. How unfortunate to leave such a niche. Surely Paul was mistaken when he wrote to Timothy that "All Scripture was given by inspiration," and that "the man of God was thoroughly furnished to every good work. He probably meant to say, "provided he is a Mason." But then God has placed this heaven-blessed institution for a grand purpose. Will Mr. Martin tell us what that purpose is. Some of us are curious to know what good purpose can be served by an institution which excludes Christ, which makes men swear to conceal each other's crimes, and teaches them to ask God to help them do it. H. H. HINMAN.

State Facts as They Are.

Truth is the foundation of all confidence between man and man—it is the bond of society. By the word truth we mean fidelity, veracity, purity from falsehood, a practice of speaking the truth, a habitual disposition to state facts just as they are.

Were the inhabitants of the earth to think and act on the principles of truth, this world would be transformed into a paradise. Men would altogether cease to view each other with suspicion. We would be willing to take the actions of our fellow-men as fair exponents of their hearts, and all things would go on smoothly. Every contract would be fulfilled, every claim fairly met; and if, in any case, diversity of opinion should obtain respecting the validity of a claim, we would at once be willing to appeal to a decision of disinterested men, and thereby save ourselves, as well as others, of much unnecessary trouble and expense. And, instead of seizing each other by the throat, and, by the authority of the Commonwealth, imperatively demanding payment to be made, we would be willing to make some amicable arrangement by which the debt could be cancelled, and justice done to both parties. Whenever a man can gain the confidence of his fellow beings that man is qualified for doing good. Any one who is a man of truth is sure of success in life. If his word can be relied on, he can pass on smoothly through life, unsuspected of fraud by any of his fellows. Should his business call him to some distant place, he can go and transact it, and should he be detained longer than was expected, no particular fear would be entertained by his creditors at home. Relying on his veracity, believing that he is honest in his intentions, and that he will fairly meet his obligations, they await his return with confidence. And why is this? Simply because he is a man of truth and has always acted honestly in his dealings.

But how is it with a man of falsehood? See how he is watched by all with whom he associates. Even those who are similar to him value the man of truth above him. And although his more conscientious neighbors will be constrained, from principles of common decency, to treat him courteously in society, if circumstances throw them together, yet they fear to trust him, and in heart despise him. By this contrast we can easily discover the advantages of telling the truth in the every-day business transactions of life.

But there is another advantage to be gained by stating facts just as they ara. If we are conscious of having told the truth under all circumstances, we can stand upright and face the frowning world with a good conscience—place ourselves on the principles of truth, and wield an influence it would be impossible for us to do could our veracity be impeached. When we look at the consequences of lying; see the trouble and anguish it causes; think of all the vexations, litigations, and lawsuits caused by the violation of contracts; behold our fellow beings arraigned before a court of justice, tried sentenced, and delivered up to the officers of the land for imprisonment; when we look beyond this life and behold the liar standing before the final Judge about to be punished, then it is that we have an exhibition of consequences sufficient to show any man the folly of evading the truth.

If we would be useful here, or happy hereafter, it is imperatively demanded of us to practice truth at all times. Would young men rise to place of distinction, in church or state; would they be an honor and an ornament to any of the professions or pursuits of life which are open to their choice, they must have a heartfelt regard for the truth, and never fail to practice it continually, until their hearts cease action and their souls return to the God who gave it. Young men, fulfil your obligations; remember to speak the truth always, and honor, emoluments and never-ending happiness "that passeth understanding" will be yours.

Selfishness.—There is an ascending scale from the grossest personal selfishness, such as that of Caesar or Napoleon, to party selfishness, such as that of Sylla, or fanatical selfishness, that is the idolatry of an idea or principle, such us that of Robespierre or Dominic and some of the Convenanters. In all of these, excepting perhaps the first, we feel a sympathy more or less because there is something of personal self-devotion and sincerity; but fanaticism is idolatry and has the moral evil of idolatry in it.—Dr. Arnold.

That man who attempts to bring down and depreciate those who are above him does not thereby elevate himself. He rather sinks himself, while those whom he traduces are rather benefited than injured by the slanders of one so base as he.

SECRECY

In its relations to the Family, the State, and the Church.

Address of Rev. M. S. Drury, before the Iowa Anti-Secreey Association, at Western College, Iowa, April 26th., 1876.

Continued.

View the institution in the light of an insurance company and it has no claims to public favor. There may, however, be a small return to the families of a few of the many dollars previously paid into the lodge. That it is a poor insurance company may be judged by the following figures: "We will suppose that there are one million of Apprentice Masons; eight hundred thousand Masters; four hundred thousand Royal Arch Masons, and twenty thousand Knights; and that they all paid the regular fees for the degrees. The sum would be twenty-two million five hundred thousand dollars. The annual interest of this enormous sum at seven per cent. would be one million five hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. This would give fifteen thousand seven hundred and fifty persons each one hundred dollars annually." I do not know the number of Masons in these degrees in the United States. If the estimate is too large we need not be confined to this country. Now I do not believe that one-tenth of this interest ever returns to the widows and orphans of deceased Masons, and to poor and afflicted members. In this estimate no account has been made of the heavy and continued cost of dues, for regalia, balls, feasts &c., &c. Legitimate insurance companies pay altogether better, without the demoralizing and dangerous nature of extrajudicial oaths and penalties. And besides, many of the members so drain their purses, that they are unable to do a good citizen's share in meeting the common demands of suffering humanity. If upon the whole, the institution were a good one, could her friends not point to her schools, colleges, universities, orphans' homes, asylums, hospitals, temperance, literary and reform societies; and to her libraries, her literary and scientific works; her works of art and industrial enterprizes. Millions upon millions of money have been paid into the coffers of the lodge; and where are the good fruits? Where!! Does the lodge strike dividends and pay back even one per cent. upon her large capital stock? May not the vast sums in her vaults and under the control of her despotic Grand Masters, be now held and employed as a most dangerous political corruption fund? Great danger to the State and to individuals may be found in the power of the lodge, to enforce her persecuting and bloody penalties.

One of the highest Masonic authors, Dr. Mackey, in his Lexicon page 183, says: "The government of a Grand Lodge is completely despotic. While a Grand Lodge exists its ediets must be respected and obeyed without examination by its subordinate lodges." "To illustrate" —says the Rev. James Williams, a seceded Master Mason, at Elk Point, Dakota, in a sermon preached in the M. E. church, August 11, 1875,—"If the Grand Lodge of this Territory should see fit to send an order to Elk Point, stating that I was dangerous to the prosperity of the order, and that they must execute Masonic penalties upon me, they must do it and take my life, or violate their sworn obligations!"

Behold also the dangerous power that may control the rank and file of the Masonic body. Mackey and Chase—both reliable Masonic authors—say: "The power of a Master in his lodge is absolute." "No appeal from his decision to the members of his lodge can be taken."

By turning to Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, we find the following astonishing applications of the most dreadful power of the Grand Lodge over Masons and their property. See on pages 22, 28, 36, the following:

"1st. To 'erase,' 'extinguish,' or destroy, any local lodge at pleasure.

2nd. To tax lodges, and individual Masons, at its discretion; pages 24, 448.

3rd. To withdraw the charter of any local lodge, and confiscate and seize all its money, property, papers, &c.; pages 121–2.

4th. To expel individual Masons from the craft; page 22.

5th. To inflict punishment on Masons without restriction; page 22."

Such power must be dangerous in a high degree, and imperil the dearest interests of citizens of the State. But the selfishness of Freemasonry and its anti-republicanism may be seen by reference to the oath of the Royal Arch, as seen on page 142, Light on Masonry. Here the candidate swears "to promote a Royal Arch Mason's political preferment in preference to another of equal qualifications." This favoritism undermines merit and equality at the expense of republicanism. Abraham Lincoln said in a speech, I think delivered in 1859, —"That slavery cannot long exist in a republican government." And he might have said that the grinding slavery of the lodge cannot long live in an enlightened and purely republican government. There are now in the American Congress eighty-three ex-rebel and military officers. How did they rise so soon from their bed of treason! I lay the blame at the door of the Masonic lodge. The many wings to its army, with its well-drilled and intriguing officers, clothed with the power of despots, and with the cunning and treachery of devils, control the ignorant masses, and the polls declare eighty-three rebels to be loyal members of Forty-fourth Congress! These are grave charges. But we have good reason for them. In 1826, a man, while engaged in writing and publishing, in accordance with his constitutional rights, was deprived of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The loyal North saw the real character, and felt the danger of Speculative Freemasonry; and fifteen hundred lodges suspended, and forty-five thousand members left the lodges. Masonic secrets were published to the world, conventions of seceding Masons were held, and declarations of independence from Masonic despotism were signed, and pledges of increased loyalty to the State were made; and it is not too much to say that the best men of the order left it and returned no more. But in the slave States the despotism of slavery and Masonry being united in selfish interest, sympathized with and strengthened each other until they felt able to either rule or ruin the nation! Hence the rebellion of 1860. I wish here to notice some of the other secret societies as auxiliary to Masonry, and the way the master lodge controls the children as so many servants. The Independent Order of Odd-fellows was organized by a refugee who escaped the gallows in England—in a garret in Baltimore. See Light on Masonry, page 443. Chambers' Encyclopedia says: "Thomas Wildey instituted Washington Lodge No. 1, in 1820; getting charter from York Lodge, Preston, England. But in 1826 another charter was obtained granting to the Grand Lodge of the United States sole jurisdiction over the Order in this country." Do Odd-fellows know or ever tell the date and circumstances of their origin?

When the terrible damage was done to Masonry by the murder of Morgan and abuse of Miller, his publisher, in 1826, Masons were known to have resolved on "being quiet for about 20 years." Before the 20 years were quite up the Sons of Temperance were organized. If this society had been instituted by a patriot or Christian for a benevolent object only, and not by Masons, to catch the unsuspecting in their net and thereby shut their mouths to complaint against the parent lodge of Masonry, it would not be difficult to get the early history of the "Sons." The Independent Order of Good Templars was organized in Ithaca, N. Y., by Nathaniel Curtis, July 21st, 1852, with sufficient change from the "Sons" to attract attention and give further drill and respect to secretism. As the "Sons" were a sueess the Good Templars' origin given would now be valuable. The Knights of the Golden Circle, and several other secret orders have since been organized over the country, South and North, without much difficulty, since the injured character of Masonry in 1826 has been partially healed by the temperance orders more especially. The civil war was concocted by slave-holding Freemasons and their sympathizers North as well as South; and the loss of blood and treasure—it may be—should be charged to the lodge rather than to slavery! The head grows weary and the heart sick when we view the suffering and death of a million of this nation's most healthy and most promising young men! But what is the nation's history since the war? The rebels conquered, and the rights of the people restored

THE NINTH NATIONAL CONVENTION.

THE BUSINESS MEETING OF THE CORPORATE BODY.

Preliminary Prayer-meeting at the Carpenter Building.

FULL REPORT OF THE CONVENTION IN FARWELL HALL, CHICAGO, JUNE 20 TO 22.—ADDRESSES, RESOLUTIONS, REPORTS AND DISCUSSIONS.

The Corporate Meeting.

Seven years ago this month the Second National Convention opposed to Secret Societies was held in the prayer-meeting room of the Young Men's Christian Association (lower Farwell Hall) in this city. The lamented Bishop Edwards was chairman of the Convention until new officers were chosen; the number of delegates was one hundred and thirty-five, and Pres. Kephart of Iowa and Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, then Senator from Kansas, made the leading addresses. But outside the hall the city was filled with ridicule, abuse and insult; the papers vied with each other in applying opprobrious epithets; and the lodges chuckled quietly at the comparative insignificance of the meeting in numbers and influence. But in seven years great changes have taken place in Chicago. The flame of God's wrath has swept through the vast business of the city and tamed the pride of wealth. The lodge has seen its work opposed and thwarted, its minions disenthralled, its hypocrisy discussed openly. The National Christian Association has here the control of a fine building for a Publishing House, and finds hundreds of people throughout the city to encourage the reform. Thus the Convention meets here again. It finds the press generally reporting its meetings with fairness; it occupies the large Farwell Hall, and for three evenings Mr. Ronayne shows to the whole public the farcical and blasphemous ceremonies practiced in the lodges near by, and can find members of the lodge by the dozen here who will acknowledge the great goddess of secretism, about whose altar they have sacrificed and shouted peans, fallen from her throne. Thus, although in numbers our Convention has fallen slightly below former meetings, its effect upon the lodge at this center of its power has been and will continue to be felt like the hand of justice upon a sentenced felon. The meetings of the week included the corporate meeting, the preliminary prayer meeting on Tuesday, the political mass convention on Thursday, Mr. Ronayne's open lodge on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, and the Convention proper, opening on Tuesday evening.

The annual meeting of the Association falls by constitutional arrangement on the third Wednesday in June. The appointment of the Convention made a change desirable, and the time was put forward one day by the Directors who contemplated an adjourned meeting after the Convention adjourned.

On Tuesday morning, therefore, at 11 o'clock, in the rooms of the Association 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Mr. Philo Carpenter, President, called to order and invited Rev. Dr. George of Geneva, Ohio, to lead the meeting in prayer to Almighty God. The roll of members was called, minutes read and business proceeded. A large number of friends were present, and were by vote requested to sit as corresponding members, and assist by their counsels in the deliberations of the body. The whole number present was from forty to fifty.

Reports of the business of the year were then heard from the Board of Directors, the General Agent and Lecturer, and the Treasurer, which were listened to with great interest, and approved.

The Directors presented their report through the Cor. Secretary which will duly appear. Following this interesting exhibit of the work of the year as directed from Chicago, the General Agent presented the following summary of his labors.

In submitting the report of my labors as General Agent of the N. C. A., I shall confine myself chiefly to a statement of facts and shall give only the more prominent. The general interest in our work has rapidly increased and it is evident that the mass of the people are becoming suspicious of the lodge and greatly dissatisfied with its workings. Many who at the beginning of the year were indifferent, have become active supporters of our reform, while disaffected members in the lodge are more outspoken in their opposition. One hundred and thirty-two names of seceders have been sent in and enrolled who are still living to bear testimony of the truthfulness of those exposes which have been given by Mr. Ronayne and others. I have given my entire time to the work during the year and have traveled 15,025 miles by rail; have spoken 134 times, have attended 11 State Conventions in ten different States, viz., Ill., Iowa, Wis., Mich., Ind., two in Ohio, one in Penn., N. Y., Conn. and N. H. These meetings have been well attended and productive of much good. I have collected for the general work, $623·86. My expenses have been $680.05.

During the year beside aiding in securing funds for local workers, I have collected and passed over to the Treasurer of the N. C. A., in money and notes for the Publishing House fund $5,144, for which I hold his receipts.

There are a number of items not included in the above, the principal of which is a donation of 180 acres of improved land worth at least $75 per acre, or $13,500, by Wm. Leuty of Ligonier, Ind., secured to the N. C. A. by warrantee deed, Mr. Leuty retaining possession and control of the property during his life. Conditional donations of lands have also been made to the Association by Rev. Geo. Clark of Oberlin, and Dr. J. A. Bingham of Ohio. There are also a number of bequests that have come to my knowledge in which parties have made provisions for aiding in our work after their decease, amounting in all to more than ten thousand dollars. Others are known to have this matter under favorable consideration and have sent for instruction and forms for the purpose of making bequests, etc.

The effect of securing even a temporary occupancy of a home and head-quarters at No. 221 West Madison St., has been very marked. Our friends have been greatly encouraged and our opponents disheartened. It has done more for the advancement of our reform than any other one thing, and in my judgment the whole fund should be completed and the deed secured at the earliest possible date. There is everywhere a willingness on the part of friends to give so soon as they understand what are the facts in the case and its importance, and it seems to me that every friend should do all that he consistently can himself and induce others to aid in this work where practicable.

In my report prepared for the Convention in Farwell Hall I shall present the work more in detail and submit a few suggestions as to what to me seems desirable in the future prosecution of our work.

The Treasurer's report presented the financial work of the Association as in a prosperous and hopeful condition.

Upon this report Pres. Blanchard remarked that he did not wish to see this report go by without a full and free discussion. Our finances are the hinge of the movement in an important sense; they are the "sinews" of our war. The report showed upon its face how carefully and with what economy the management of funds had been conducted by the Directors; and the Board desired the most scrupulous inquiry into every item presented, so that there might be no shadow of distrust in the integrity of the management. Much of the work of the Association, which in other bodies of similar character demanded considerable expense for salaries, has been done for the Association freely.

Mr. E. Ronayne made a telling point in comparing the report with the exhibit of the Grand Lodge of Illinois. The funds of that body as last reported were $4,700, and that organization has been in operation thirty-six years; whereas the National Christian Association has been in existence but a few years. Masons should hear this report; it would open their eyes, their ears are open already. The Grand Master has a salary of $1,500 a year, the Grand Secretary $2,500, and other officers in proportion. That is where the Masonic funds go—to the pockets of the leaders.

Richard Green of Indiana said that was one distinction between us and the lodge. Lodge money went to fatten the leaders.

A committee was then elected to consult and present the names of new members for the Association. J. Blanchard, C. R. Hagerty, J. P. Stoddard, L. N. Stratton and I. R. B. Arnold were appointed.

It was suggested that by some unfortunate omission no provision had been made for the customary preliminary prayer meeting before the meeting of the Convention. Farwell Hall had not been engaged until evening and the lower hall was occupied every afternoon; it was therefore decided to hold the prayer meeting in the Carpenter building, beginning at 2.30 o'clock, and to be followed by a short business session.

The recommendation of the National Convention at Pittsburgh last year to change the second By-law was then taken up, the matter having been referred to the annual meeting. The action of the Convention reads:

Resolved, That we recommend to the Board of Directors to amend the second By-law of the N. C. A. so that it shall read, "Those who held life memberships in the unincorporated National Christian Association before the adoption of these By-laws, together with those who shall hereafter contribute——dollars to the treasury of the National Christian Association, provided further, that they shall be so elected by the delegates enrolled at the National Anniversary will constitute the members of the National Christian Association.

The recommendation was then discussed under a motion not to change. Several members spoke and argued from the following facts: The only basis of membership required under the change is a money requisite of $25, and a vote of the general Convention. This would open the way for such an increase of the body in the interest of any political party, or even of the lodge as to seriously endanger the Association. It was stated that an eminent legal authority of this city and judge of the courts, who is in sympathy with the reform, and gave his advice in the legal provisions of the

By-laws, counseled that the regulations respecting membership should be made with great care, since, if the Carpenter donation was secured, the lodge would not scruple to take advantage of any weak legislation respecting membership, and would quickly pay the membership fee of forty or fifty men who might turn over to our enemies a valuable property worth from $20,000 to $30,000. Some doubt was expressed at the liklihood of any attempt like this being made, but Mr. Ronayne stated a case which actually occurred in this city where the Odd-fellows worked enough of their members into an anti-Catholic society, which had some funds in its treasury, to turn the whole thing over to the Odd-fellows, not excepting the funds. He believed there were in thelodges of the city Masons enough, and of impudence enough to undertake just such a capture of the Publishing House. It was also affirmed that to remove the present restrictions of membership would weaken the confidence in the business management of the affairs of the Association among men of business experience throughout the country. It would also be acting in bad faith toward Mr. Carpenter, whose provisional donation of a Publishing House was based on the regulations already made, and whose generous offer might not have been given had the legal membership depended on mass conventions held in different parts of the country.

John Dorcas of Iowa, remarked that in what attention he had given to the matter heretofore, the reasons for guarding the membership regulations had not all appeared to him as now. He saw that the provisions of the Association in this respect were wise and proper. Pres. George also remarked to the same effect.

Father Green did not like any organization which looked like a "close board." He had seen difficulty enough in such cases. He thought there might be some way to get a larger popular representation. But the method recommended was unanimously agreed to be not what was wanted when the vote was taken.

A recommendation of the Directors to amend By-law V. by striking out the clause making it necessary that the Corresponding Secretary should be a member of the Directors, board was adopted.

A committee consisting of J. P. Stoddard, C. R. Hagerty, and L. N. Stratton, were chosen to nominate Directors for the ensuing year.

The meeting then adjourned with the benediction till afternoon.

AFTERNOON.—In the absence of the President, the Vice-president, J. Blanchard, took the chair and conducted the prayer and conference meeting, which was continued for an hour and a half with freedom and spirit.

At its close business was resumed.

The committee on nominating new members reported recommending the following names:

Pres. H. H. George, D. D., W. Geneva, O.
Rev. J. L. Barlow, Fentonville, Mich.
Rev. Wm. Wishart, D. D., Mansfield, O.
John Finney, Mansfield, O.
Rev. Aaron Worth, Dublin, Ind.
J. G. Mattoon, West Unity, O.
Rev. J. K. Alwood, West Unity, O.
John Dorcas, Shiloh, Iowa.
Pres. E. B. Kephart, Western, Iowa.
Pres. S. B. Allen, Westfield, Ill.
Rev. H. Cogswell, Wadsworth, O.
Edward Hildreth, Chicago.

The report was received, and remarks being in order Richard Green said he was in favor of more "lay" delegates. He had been a lay delegate to several quadrennial General Conferences of the Wesleyan Methodist church and was determined always to stand up for the rights of the lay brethren, and thought a greater proportion of them in the list would improve it. There appearing ,however, to be four he moved to omit the titular distinction of D. D. The brief discussion which followed showed that while some present wished to uphold republican simplicity by dropping all titles of honorable, or other distinction, others thought the reform might gain respect among men if it were known that college presidents and professors, doctors of divinity and others who had gained a worthy place among men ranked themselves as its supporters. Rev. L. N. Stratton of the Wesleyan advocated the extension of this rule to placing the denominations on the roll of the conventions as but using one means in our power of advancing the cause. The motion was laid on the table. The report was then adopted, and these brethren announced as members of the National Christian Association during life or good behavior.

The committee on nominating a board of Directors reported a partial list of nine names. Two more were added by the Association, and those elected are as follows:

Philo Carpenter,	E S Cook,	J Blanchard,
E Hildreth,	C R Hagerty,	C A Blanchard,
J M Wallace,	H L Kellogg,	E A Cook,
J W Bain,	A Wait.

A motion was made by the Secretary to postpone the election of officers until an adjourned meeting, when a larger representation of the members should be present. It was not seconded, and the prevailing judgment was to proceed without the formality of the ballot. On the election of J. P. Stoddard as Corresponding Secretary and General Agent, it was agreed that until the Publishing House fund was completed the necessary absence of the Corresponding Secretary from the Chicago office would require the appointment of an assistant. The officers elected were as follows:

President, REV. L. N. STRATTON of Syracuse, N. Y.
Vice-president, E. A. COOK, Chicago.
Recording Secretary and Treasurer, H. L. KELLOGG, Chicago.
Corresponding Secretary and General Agent and Lecturer, REV. J. P. STODDARD, Chicago
Ass't Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. M. E. COOK, Chicago.
Auditors, J. M. WALLACE and C. R. HAGERTY, Chicago.

The election of officers and new members was carried on with deep feeling, and a sincere desire for the promotion of the reform, and at its close all united most heartily when Pres. Blanchard was called on to offer prayer for a blessing on all thus elected.

The thanks of the body were given most heartily, and by a unanimous, rising vote to Mr. Carpenter for his munificent offer of a Publishing House, and for his labors as presiding officer.

Pres. George referred to the work of all the officers for the past year in words of hearty sympathy, and especially of the General Agent who had achieved a marked success in his efforts for the Publishing House. While laboring for this he had also lectured all through the country, and had impressed all with his fitness for his important position. A rising and unanimous vote attested the gratitude of all present to the officers of the past year for their self-denying labors in behalf of the reform.

In the presumed absence of Dr. D. R. Kerr of Pittsburgh, President of the National Convention, Rev. H. Cogswell, Vice-president from Ohio, was requested by vote to preside at the opening of the Convention.

The place of holding the next anniversary was then discussed. Pres. George suggested Dayton, Ohio, as a place of central location where the Convention would be made welcome. The General Agent said that a number of the friends in that city had expressed their wish that a National meeting might be held there; the city had a good daily press; and there was a strong sentiment in favor of the reform at that center of the United Brethren church. The suggestion was quite favorably received by all present.

As Rev. Mr. Cogswell had been requested to preside in the evening at Farwell Hall, it was further voted that he also make an opening address to be followed by Dr. George.

Although Mr. Carpenter had refused re-election as President of tha Association on account of failing health, Pres. Stratton at this point referred with great propriety to the fact of the great influence of the retiring President throughout the country, and especially among the churches. The continuation of his honored name at the head of our Association is an introduction to many, and compels respect from all. He therefore wished to resign the office in which the Association had placed him, and clear the way for the re-instatement of Mr. Carpenter. But on the continued refusal of the latter the resignation was not accepted.

The Association then adjourned after benediction by Rev. W. S. May of Iowa.

The Prayer Meeting

This meeting was quite as well attended as that of the morning. Pres. Blanchard led the exercises, which were varied by singing of hymns, prayer, and reading of the Scriptures, until they took the usual form of a free conference. Remarks full of interest, and marking the zeal of the speakers in the reform were made. Among the sperkers was Pres. H. H. George, who spoke with an earnest and charitable spirit of the many members of the lodges whose consciences were struggling to be free from their false bondage. There are multitudes of them all through the land. They especially commend themselves to our prayers. We should pray for them for they have no help or sympathy from that source to which they would naturally look for it—the evangelical ministry. Thousands of ministers are themselves blinded to the great evils of the lodge, having taken upon their souls its fearful obligations. So that the Scripture is fulfilled in them, "When the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." These members of lodges have therefore a double claim on us for prayer and an encouraging word. Let us not fail in our part as children of the light of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Henry Cogswell, who has in years past trod the Masonic road to the Royal Arch degree, said that he had been one of those whose moral nature had been under the pall of the false oaths of the lodge. Many ministers are under this pall, and the fear of loss of support keeps many of them there who would otherwise come out. In the Disciple church are many ministers in this deplorable condition. When he had published his intention of leaving the lodge in Mansfield, Ohio, less than two years ago a Mason asked him, "You went into the lodge secretly, why could you not leave it secretly?" But he replied that would be Judas-like, a traitor to the truth. Conscience and truth demanded a clean breast of the matter, and he wanted to give the order a kick. The lodge has since then kept him out of five churches from which he had a reasonable expectation of receiving a call to preach. A prominent member of the Disciple church at Akron, O., had said to him, referring to his renunciation at Mansfield, "I was afraid that would injure you." Ministers of the Disciple church pride themselves in being always ready to stand for the truth, and do battle against every form of error. Why do they fear the lodge and dread to engage with it? He asked to be remembered in the prayers and sympathies of the brethren that the Lord would help him to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

Rev. Aaron Worth of Indiana, said he had noticed that the lodge is always anxious to get the sanction of the ministry. The ministry is used as a cover for its dark deeds—a means of deceiving the unwary, decoying them to spiritual death. We must labor to disconnect the ministry from this great evil.

Bro. Bruce of Iowa, said he was surrounded by this lodge power at his home, and felt its opposition in his labors; but while the darkness was heavy and the enemy bold and confident, his trust was in the Lord his God against whom nothing can prosper.

Brief remarks were made by a few others, and after another season of prayer the prayer meeting was closed, having been felt to be a place where the Spirit of the Lord had been.

Our Centennial Letter.

At the Sea-side—A high Mason on Lodge Charity—Visit of Friends —A testimony for professing Christians —Ocean Grove—Back at the Exposition—Tract work on Trains.

Ocean Grove, June 16.—I am here at Ocean Grove by the exceeding kindness of my most friendly host Bro. Alexander Mackie. He brought me here yesterday, with his very good wife and daughter, who could not be kinder if I were one of the family. They have here a real cozy cottage with all the appurtenances of a summer sea-side resort; and if I were well enough to enjoy it, I could appreciate it more as it deserves than I can with my dilapidated condition. But I have a good hope that I shall be able by Monday to be at my post again. In the kindness I receive at the hands of my beloved brother and his family, we have the proof that it is not necessary to swear a good man to secure all needed hospitality; and I think this is true to some extent of common sinners. But Masons mark themselves as exceptions by swearing one another and can we say they are any better than they themselves confess by this act, though they do wish us to.

On this subject I have a case in point. A high Mason, professing to be a Christian, confessed in my hearing and of others, that under certain conditions he would see his brother in the church suffer without giving him aid even when he could.

The case was put to him thus. If there were two persons in equal need, one an ungodly man but a Mason, the other a Christian brother in your own church, and you could possibly help but one, which would you assist? His answer was, "The Mason." Setting aside the Holy Spirit's word, "especially them who are of the household of faith." Now that is what Masonry does, makes men professing godliness trample on divine authority; institutes specialties against God's specialties, like the Jews who "made void the law of God by their traditions."

On Wednesday my good brother, Dr. Miller of Dalton, Luzerne Co., Pa., with his excellent lady and daughter, called with a most cordial greeting, encouraging and cheering me on in this work. The Dr. gave me a dollar for the tract work which you will please put to his credit. He told me that for aiding in this work, Masons had injured his finances thousands of dollars worth.

I have thought had I an expert at short-hand, to note down multitudes of items that escape my memory it might be a grand thing. Here is one that riveted itself upon my mind. An ingenuous man, a Mason I think, not quite thirty years of age, with all the appearance of genuine candor, asked me in conversation upon Masonry, what I saw wrong in the institution. Upon being told of the viciousness of its covenants, and savage cruelty of its penalties, he said, "Well I am not a Christian; if I were, I could not conscienciously take the Masonic oaths." This testimony is worthy of being written in letters of gold, and should be in letters of fire on the conscience of every professed Christian who is a Mason.

I am sure God is with us in this work. I tell Masons who say we have a big job on hand to overthrow Masonry, that we have a great God whose movement this is and who is fully equal to any emergency; that we do not expect to do such a work but that God will by us. Let us keep this in mind. It is God only who can remove this colossal evil.

Ocean Grove is a very pleasant town and is the result of the purchase of a tract of land by the M. E. people for the double purpose of making it a summer sea-side resort for health, and that of having a pleasant site for camp-meetings. They have a splendid preacher's stand and fine grounds and seats for hearers. The town is mainly built in very neat style. Most of the buildings are small, but some large cottages tastily built of wood, and altogether it has an inviting appearance, and being new it has a fresh and cheering aspect.

Asbury Park, joins it on the north, and a little further north is Long Branch. This place is some eighty miles from Philadelphia, I think.

Philadelphia, June 19.— I am back to my work with strength increased and health somewhat improved.

June 20th. I wrote the foregoing last night but was hindered writing more. Yesterday I handed out but few tracts partly because not a favorable opportunity offered and partly because I was at my stand but part of the day. I came from Ocean Grove yesterday, A. M., a distance of about eighty miles, and returned to my lodgings earlier than usual.

On my way from Ocean Grove yesterday I distributed tracts in my car to all but one and they were a busy set of readers from that time. A gentleman and lady who sat behind me, were, though strangers to each other, very much interested in the tracts. He was particularly interested in our American party tract, and said, though he lived in Neva Scotia, that he would love to cast his political vote on such a platform as that. She was a very fervent and devout Christian lady, and being as I think all Christians should be, in warm sympathy with our work, she wanted more tracts to hand to her friends.

June 21st. After writing nearly a page as you see last night, I felt so poorly that I lay down to rest, and feel about used up this morning, and must ask to be relieved. I would gladly stay and carry on this work through the whole season, but I do not think it wise to put myself beyond the possibility of doing any more work. Please send the requisite for getting home; but that shall not prevent my longer stay, if I should, before it reaches me, gain sufficiently to warrant it.

Concerning the lady spoken of above I gave her several more tracts, perhaps some thirty or forty, which she said she would distribute, and mentioned some Masons who would receive some, among whom was her husband. She is an M. D., being a graduate from a Philadelphia Medica College, and has had a long and successful practice in Trenton N. Y., where she now has an office, but resides at "Sea-side," about ten miles south of Ocean Grove. Her name is S. E. Sandt. She promised to send me her order for the Cynosure.

On my way to Ocean Grove, I gave tracts to a greedy car full, who seemed to devour their contents as if hungry for just this kind of aliment. As I passed back to my seat, a presiding elder of the M. E. church, and a high Mason as I learned afterwards, asked me very peremptorially: "Do you belong to this order?" referring to Masonry. I answered, "No sir." "Then what do you know about it?" he asked imperiously, as if he would give me a finishing blow, to which I mildly and coolly replied: "It is not necessary in these days to belong to the order to know all about it;" and passed on to my seat. Soon after I saw him and a man in front of him in apparent hot altercation, as I supposed upon the subject that then seemed to engross the minds of all in that car. From these and many other scenes I have witnessed at the Centennial, and elsewhere I have come to the conclusion that God has sent forth the spirit of inquiry among the people, who feel themselves oppressed by the workings of these secret orders, for secretism, however carefully it may be manipulated, makes itself unpleasantly felt by the masses who have their eyes and ears open. And it is impossible that it should do what it is intended to do for its adherents, without oppressing the masses outside masses. All selfish combinations of men do this for those out of the ring. It cannot be otherwise; for when men cease to feel an impartial interest for the masses and form into cliques, the members of the cliques get some of the benefits that belong to others, and this is alarmingly true of all these oath-bound orders. A. D. Freeman.

A Brush with the Foe.

Pontiac, Mich.

The Lord opened the way for me to visit Memphis, Macomb county. By invitation I preached twice on Sunday and lectured on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

The several buildings in town, called churches, were not to be had. One man said that he and his people were Anti-masons and would have the lectures in their "church," but they were afraid that the Masons would burn it down if they did. The lectures were two miles out of town in a large, new house of worship lately built by the Free Methodists. So far as I know the Free Methodists at that place are all strongly opposed to secretism.

Monday evening the house was densely croweded. Elder Mulholland and Elder Sage were present and took part in the devotional exercises. More than a dozen Masons were said to be present. For three hours I gave them my experience in Masonry. A prominent Mason and leading Methodist made him a name that will not soon die out in Memphis. If you ever saw a touguey "Christian Mason" lose his balance so completely as to rage and storm without saying anything, if you ever saw such a thing, as I often do, you need no account of that man's performance. But some of his neighbors expressed their opinion of him pretty freely and ordered him to sit down and he obeyed. I asked him if he took Masonry as I had given it, but he would not answer. I can testify that they have one man who can be intensely vehement! The next day the brothers called him a fool and threatened to break his neck. Surely he did not come there "to learn to subdue his passions."

The substance of one man's speech was this. While out in Oakland county he heard of a man who had two wives and that man was not a Mason. Therefore the Masons were not the only bad men. Mr. D. was a strong Anti-mason but he did not believe in the Bible. Therefore the lecturer would not endorse all the Anti-masons. Mr. D. did not believe the Bible, while McK. did believe it. Therefore some Anti-masons did not agree. This outline he filled up by swinging his arms and storming after the manner of angry Masons.

One man near the door, who said that he was an Odd-fellow, swore and stormed most shamefully. He threatened to strike a man who requested him to be quiet. But he was ordered to his seat. Some small objects were thrown through the open windows from outside and an attempt was made to throw the congregation into confusion. But the movement was explained and it was promptly quelled. Order being fully restored, a Mr. Shell arose and said: "I am a Mason. I know Mr. S. and his family and have a very high opinion of them. Mr. S. has conducted himself like a Christian gentleman to-night, and I will stand by him. The conduct of the Masons here to-night is shameful. It ought to be denounced by everybody. I stand by Masonry, but I will stand by Mr. Springstein."

The whole congregation excepting one man voted to have me continue my lecture. I mean all that voted and that seemed to be the whole congregation. But we adjourned till the next evening. I was told a crowd gathered on the street at six o'clock next morning, and continued all day. Some of them it is said, acted like wild men.

Tuesday evening the house was literally packed full, the aisles, the altar and every other part crowded. The "Worshipful Master" of the Memphis lodge was present. I talked about two and a half hours. I challenged any man to answer anything that had been said in either address, but no one lisped a word in reply. I notified them that I would be in town till afternoon the next day that I might be able to answer any question that might arise.

While walking along the road after meeting, a leading Methodist told me in presence of some of the first citizens of that place, that what I had given he knew to be true. He read the same thing in a book that he bought of a boy for 25cts, on a canal boat in York State twenty-five years ago. Then he took the same in the lodge since that. He said that he had taken thr[illegible] degrees. Said he, "I admit that I took those obligations just as you give them, but I consider the oaths binding and do not feel at liberty to break them." The next morning men were in little groups here and there about town, but it was generally very quiet. I heard one Mason tell some other Masons that Masonry in Memphis was dead.

One Mason undertook to ask me a few questions quietly, but lost his temper and jewel. Finding that he had fully exposed himself and the lodge, he left the store much excited. Omitting many incidents of interest I will add only this. I found some men and women of unswerving integrity. And while the lodge tries hard to rule, it finds itself on warmly disputed territory. They strongly urged me to accept of a public collection, but I would not allow a collection to be taken. But for some presents and a pleasant home among the servants of God in Memphis, I am really grateful. Evidently the lodge intended war, but God gave us complete victory. Praise his name.

A. H. SPRINGSTEIN.

OUR MAIL.

Dan'l Benedict, Brookfield, Vt, writes: "I was acquainted with some of the facts concerning the Morgan abduction and I consider Masonry a corrupt institution, and I am doing all in my power to have it demolished. There are quite a number of Masons in our church. I have carried the paper to the minister to have him read it, and I tell him if he will take it I will pay for it, although I am a poor man. If I had the means I would send for your papers and tracts by the bushel and peddle them. I have a good many warm conflicts with the Masons, and I will not hear a man preach if I know he is a Mason."

T. K. Bufkin, Lynnville, Ia., writes:

"I am still at work in my spare time in the reform and feel blessed in my labors. I see an accouut of 16,000 names presented in Congress by Senator Cameron, from the good people of Wisconsin, as a petition against secret socicties. I believe there might be more than twice as many from nearly every State in the Union against oath-bound secret organizations, if proper means were taken to secure that end. But the work is going on."

Senator Cameron is from Wisconsin but the petition was from the whole country.

Philip Kribs, Lamartine, Pa., writes.

"I well remember the time when Capt. Wm. Morgan was kidnapped and drowned by the Masons for revealing three degrees in Masonry, and Miller also taken but by the hand of God was rescued. When a martyr falls it will strengthen a glorious cause. I hope to live to see politics return again to secrecy and anti secrecy, and to see the latter carry. Then many of us old men could say as Simeon of old, when John was brought into the temple, and his eyes had seen what he had wished to see, "Now let thy servant depart in peace." Brethren and sisters stand up to the truth without wavering. The cause is of God."

Mrs. A. E. Jenks, Cheshire, Mass., writes:

"I have lately read the pamphlet of the church trial by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook. I wish to know if she and her husband are still living. I think that was one of the most noble deeds she could have done for her Saviour. How pleasing it is to him to have his children honor him by spurning the very appearance of evil, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, and live with an eye single to his glory. No Christiau can be clear in the sight of God that supports a Masonic miuister or a church that fellowships the wicked institutiou. . . Cheers for the nominatiou of Walker and Kirkpatriek.'

Mrs. Lucia C. Cook survives her husband who died several years ago.

F. M. Culp, Homer, O., writes:

"Since I have read your paper I have seen so much of the evil connected with Masonry, that when I see a minister or any stranger, the first question I have for him is whether he belongs to any secret society or not. . . I thank God we have a preacher who speaks plainly gainst secret societies."

A friend in Brant, Wis., writes:

"I received your wonderful paper yesterday, the first I ever saw. I fully endorse the sentiments it contains. I have watched the workings of secret institutions for a good many years. I think Freemasonry is the cause of Jeff Davis not receiving his just deserts, i. e., being suspended between heaven and earth with a rope around his neck long ago. Mercy to him is great injustice to thousands of others. How strange it is to me that a man living in York State, where I did through all that great excitement of the Morgan affair, will go right on and join the Masons. A number of years it was unpopular, then Oddfellowship took the place of it. But after a few years it got agoing again, and now to the disgrace of free American citizens they are both in full blast with the grange added to them. They are all perfect nui sances to society."

Do all you can to circulate the Cynosure. We have many friends who at present are as ignorant of its existence as the writer of this letter, who would thank you for bringing it to their notiee.

A friend writes:

"I cannot fully express to you how I esteem your paper. Not only for the editorials that are so thoroughly seasoned with truth, but also for the correspondence from different parts of the country. They all write as if they had been educated in the same school under the same teacher. It calls to remembranee the lines in the old hymn:

'The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.'

I read all the papers from the first to the last page. I am very much interested in 'Our Mail.' I like the testimonies of those dear brothers and sisters. It makes me think of a genuine Methodist class-meeting, and it awakens stronger emotions in my soul when I know that there are hundreds and thousands who have similar feelings."

Elijah Bacon, Chrisman, Ill., sends five dollars for the Publishing House besides a new subscription and his own renewal, and writes:

"I am an old man in my eightieth year. I am not rich, neither am I poor. I always vote just as I talk and pray. In my mind upon moral questions there is no whiffling or vibrating. I am in constant receipt of several religious and secular papers which I read without the use of glasses. having never lost my sight whieh is now failing."

H. W. Marsh, Elmwood, Ill., writes:

"I send you two dollars for the Centennial tract fund. One dollar is sent by the widow of a U. B. minister, one of the early pioneers of that church in Michigan. She feels that she would like to do something for the cause, and thus contributes, with regret that the amount is so little, but with the assurance that she always remembers the glorious work at the throne of grace."

Chas. M. Thomas, Wheeling, Ia., sends one new subscriber and writes:

"I will make no apology for not getting subscribers for the Cynosure as I am in my eighty-fifth year and crippled at that, and am the only Anti-mason about here that dare own himself one."

If this friend under these circumstanees can secure one subscriber, what can you do?

Lesson for July 9.—Solomon's Choice.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Chron. i. 1-17. Commit 7-12; Primary Verse, 10.

1 And Solomon the son of David was strengthened in his kingdom, and the Lord his God was with him and maguified him exceedingly.

2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, to the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, the chief of the fathers.

3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses the servant of the Lord had made in the wilderness.

4 But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

5 Moreover the brazen altar, that Bezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, he put before the tabernacle of the Lord: and Solomon and the congregations sought unto it.

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brazen altar before the Lord, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered a thousand burnt offerings upon it.

7 In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, Ask what I shall give thee.

8 And Solomon said unto God, Thou hast shewed great mercy unto David my father, and hast made me to reign in his stead.

9 Now, O Lord God, let thy promise unto David my father be established: for thou hast made me king over a people like the dust of the earth in multitude.

10 Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this thy people, that is so great.

11 And God said to Solomon, Because this was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honor, nor the life of thine enemics, neither yet hast asked long life; but hast asked wisdom and and knowledge for thyself, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have make thee king:

12 Wisdom aud knowledge is granted unto thee; and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honor, such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like.

13 Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon to Jerusalem, from before the tabernacle of the congregation. and reigned over Israel.

14 And Solomon gathered chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, which he placed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

15 And the king made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the vale for abundance.

16 And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn; the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

17 And they fetched up, and brought forth out of Egypt a chariot for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so brought they out horses for all the kings of the Hittites and for the kings of Syria, by their names.

—He who is chosen of God will be magnified in the eyes of the people. None occupy such exalted positions in the minds of all men—good or bad—as those who most do show forth the spirit of God in their lives. Gen. lxi. 39, 40; I Sam. ii. 26; Prov. iii. 3, 4; Luke ii. 52; John xii. 26; Rom. xiv. 18.

—A godly son succeeding a godly father is often a mercy shown for the sake of that father and an answer to his prayers. David prayed: "Give my son a perfect heart," and God gave him a heart that chose wisdom and understanding before length of life, riches, honor, or revenge. Gen. xvii. 7; xxvi. 24; Deut. iv. 37; vii. 7, 8; x. 15; 1 K, xi. 12; Rom. xi. 28.

—The choosing of wisdom and of understanding is not a choice of poverty, but of riches—not a surrender of all that is desirable, but an acceptance of all things which are really to be desired—not a divesting of one's self of all property in innocent delights, but a complete investiture in all that which actually contributes to the happiness of the soul. The earth and the heavens are laid under tribute to them that love God. Farm and Garden.

DISBUDDING AND PINCHING IN.

A correspondent of an Eastern journal says: Disbudding is the rubbing off or rubbing out of superfluous or ill-placed buds before they open leaves. Where grafts or buds have been set, it is often the case that the stalk is of an earlier habit than the graft, and will open its buds in advance. Here disbudding is all-essential, for if neglected, the graft will remain dormant, crowded back by the more alert wild shoots. Another case is that of trees or shrubs given to sending up numerous sprouts from near the base or from other places where they are not wanted, taking for their own worthless use the supplies which should go to the branches, which we want to see perfectly developed. In disbudding among fruit branches, we soon learn to distinguish the plump fruitbuds, which open usually in rosettes, and the sharp wood-buds, which we want to suppress. Currants, gooseberries, etc., in all our gardens want disbudding at the base in May, and fruit trees, shrubbery, roses, etc, all over.

When we find that we are too late for prudent "disbudding," or when we want to leave some of the lower buds of a stopped shoot for fruiting, we resort to "pinching in." Disbudding is only practicable when the buds first swell; after the leaves unfold we can only pinch off the tip with safety. For to remove leaves is serious injury. Trees are tenderest here. While all locomotive creatures have their lungs and stomach safely protected, and have tubes to carry the air and food into them, the whole vegetable world, chained fast by the roots, has the digestive and breathing organs exposed out in the open air itself. Both animals and plants get dyspepsia and consumption; but we can remove or cure the tubercles, the mildew, the insect vermin, etc., from the exposed and visible leaves better than from the hidden lungs.

In guiding the growth of plants, then, we never remove healthy young leaves, but merely stop the shoots that we don't desire to have extended by pinching off their tips, whether one or many. And by this means, with a touch of thumb and finger once in a while, say half a dozen times during the growing months of June and August, we can shape a plant just as we like.

HOW TO MAKE BARREN TREES FRUITFUL:—I wish to describe to you a method of making fruit trees bear, that I blundered on. Some fifteen years ago I had a small apple tree that leaned considerably. I drove a stake by it, tied a string to a limb and fastened it to a stake. The next year that limb blossomed full, while not another blossom appeared on the tree; and as Tim Bunker said, "it sot me a thinking," and I came to the conclusion that the string was so tight that it prevented the sap returning to the roots, and consequently formed fruit buds. Having a couple of pear trees that were large enough to bear, but had never blossomed, I took a coarse twine and bound it several times around the tree above the lower limbs, and tied it as tight as I could. The next spring all the top above the cord blossomed as white as a sheet, and there was not a blossom below the place where the cord was tied. A neighbor, seeing my tree loaded with pears, used the same method with the same result. I think it is a much better way than cutting off the roots. —In early summer, say in June or July, wind a strong twine several times around the tree, or a single limb, and tie it, the tighter the better, and you will be pleased with the result.—*Cor. The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1876.

DEATH OF MRS. J. P. STODDARD.

The wife of the Secretary of the National Christian Association died at Wheaton, Illinois, on Wednesday morning, June 21st, 1876. She started for the Mather depot near her father's house, with her babe in her arms, proposing to attend the Anniversary at Chicago. While walking rapidly between the tracks, she was overtaken by the train on which she expected to go in, and being confused by the noise walked too near the track on which the train was coming. She was struck and thrown over upon the other track, and, hitting her head upon the rail, was killed instantly. The babe in her arms was thrown upon the steam-chest of the locomotive, and escaped with some slight contusions and is apparently well. A little daughter who was walking by the side of her mother also escaped unhurt. This extraordinary providence fell with a heavy amazement and grief on the people of Wheaton and environs, as it must upon all who knew and loved her, and respected her husband as General Agent and lecturer for the National Christian Association.

Mrs. Stoddard was buried from the College Chapel on Friday, June 23d, in the burying-ground at Wheaton in the family lot, where of all places on earth she would have preferred to sleep till she hears the voice of the Son of Man and awakes; and she was prepared for the grave by the hands of loving neighbors, and borne from her father's house, the spot of all others which she would have chosen had the choice been left to her.

Her funeral sermon was preached in the College Chapel by her former pastor, Rev. Mr. Beekman of Byron, Illinois, assisted by the College Church pastor, Rev. L. Taylor, Rev. J. L. Barlow and Rev. J. B. Walker, well known to the readers of the Cynosure. Mr. Beekman's sermon was exceedingly clear and forcible, and his analysis of Mrs. Stoddard's mind, character and life at once faithful and able beyond ordinary precedent. A copy has been requested, and the readers of the Cynosure, will, we trust, soon be favored with it. Meantime, this hand, heavy with a father's grief has given this brief sketch of a beloved daughter, a most devout and sincere Christian, an earnest and intelligent advocate of Christian reform, a devoted and self-sacrificing mother and wife, who is now a saint in glory.

She leaves six pleasant and bright children, three sons and three daughters, who with their father will be remembered in the prayers of many children of God.

Resolutions adopted at a public temperance meeting held at the Baptist church, Wheaton, on Wednesday evening, June 21st, on the death of Mrs. Stoddard:

Whereas, In the sudden death of Mrs. J. P. Stoddard, a great affliction has descended without warning into our midst, carrying anguish and mourning into many hearts, therefore,

Resolved; That we, the neighbors and friends of the afflicted, do most sincerely mourn and sympathize with the bereaved husband, children, father, mother, brothers and sisters in the loss of a wife, mother, daughter and sister, so beloved;

That while we do not understand the ways of Providence whose thoughts are not as our thoughts, we gratefully recall and would point the attention of our sorrowing friends to the word He hath said that "he doth not afflict willingly nor grieve the children of men." We feel sure that he who sees the end from the beginning, doth see that this affliction, sudden, mysterious and severe as it is, is for the best, and that in this he hath not forgotten the wants of the little ones, nor his love for those whose lives were bound up with the one whom he has taken to be with himself.

That we would also call to their remembrance and for their consolation that he hath also said, "As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you," and we pray that they may turn unto him who is "The God of all comfort who comforteth us in all our tribulation" and that they may find in him, even in this sad hour, the surety of his love and "the peace that passeth understanding." (For the meeting).

OUR CENTENNIAL AGENT.

Elder Freeman has returned from a brief sojourn at Ocean Grove much benefitted. Under date of June 22nd he says a great change for the better has come over his health, and he hopes to be able to tarry awhile longer. He is also much cheered with visits of friends from various parts of the country. Abel E. Carpenter of Aurora, Ill., brother of Philo Carpenter, Esq., called on him last week with his wife and greatly encouraged him in the work.

Of the latent Anti-masonic sentiment he says in a late letter:

"It is wonderful what an Anti-masonic city Philadelphia is—and they do not know it. Each one knows how he feels, but dare not let any other know; but the way is being prepared for this. The pressure of Masonic despotism is the father both of the anti feeling and the fear. These smouldering fires will soon burst out, and then woe to despotic secrecy. Praise God for the coming change. Sworn secrecy cringes before the truth of God."

Bro. Freeman should be remembered in all our prayers. In secret, around the family altar, in the prayer-meeting, remember him. Pray that his strength may be renewed and the great work go on. The great fact of lodge declension he is bringing out is of the greatest importance, encouraging beyond degree to the patriot and the Christian. Another suggestion; he will be greatly cheered by frequent sympathizing letters from our friends. Write often to him, though only by a postal card. In every way let us hold up his hands, be to him Aarons and Hurs. And may the Lord prosper our work.

IS IT BLASPHEMY,—OR WHAT?

"The fact that many members who have been "called off" from subordinate lodges below and sent by resolution to the "Grand Lodge above" is creating some discussion as to the legality of the proceedings. Some claim that a member having held no office below should be sent to the "subordinate lodge above" until we better know the rules and regulations governing that country. For the present we can only say, brethren, qualify yourselves as representatives to the "Grand Lodge above," and if you get the proper credentials below the Grand Master says it shall be all right with him. A great deal depends on who holds the election and how you are elected."

Masons in their anti-Christian ceremonies and resolutions, make much of their "Grand Lodge above," as the final home of their departed brethren. This is their substitute for the Christian's heaven as their religion is substituted for the religion of Jesus. The "Subordinate Lodge above" seems to be a new idea; but is quite fitting and in harmony with the lodge idea of caste among the craft. The above also in sentiment and style gives one a refreshing idea of the esteem Masons have for their "Grand Lodge above," and how much they know of the "rules and regulations governing tha country."

We especially invite the candid attention of the Christian ministers who are members of the lodges to the above morceau from the Masonic Jewel, edited by a Past Grand Master.

Obituary.—Rev. M. E. Fisk.

Died at Constableville, Lewis Co., N. Y., Milton E. Fisk, aged 45 years and five months.

M. E. Fisk was born at Boonville, Oneida Co., N. Y., Dec. 3d, 1830, and experienced religion when about twenty-two years of age.

He had been attending prayer meetings in a district school house. There was some discussion between a prominent Universalist and the professors of religion which led him to determine to search the Scriptures and see for himself what things were true. But before he had finished his investigations he became convinced of sin and of the total depravity of his own heart and the necessity of the Holy Spirit's enlightenment to understand the teachings of the Bible, a study which he ever after pursued with ardor and delight.

He united with the Boonville Baptist church, but had not been long a Christian before he began to be burdened with the desolations of Zion. Churches with scarce more than a name live to were struggling out an existence or dying around him.

He became interested for the waste places, and at first thought to earn money to educate one man for these fields, but by degrees came to feel that he was that man, and his life work was to build the waste places.

While a student at Madison University he began to examine a little into the workings of secret societies. He determined to have nothing to do with them before leaving school, which he did in 1860. He expressed his opinion that the church and nation must meet slavery and secret societies in the next fifteen years.

His first pastorate was at Martinsburg, Lewis Co., N. Y., but closed in less than a year on account of bleeding at the lungs. His next pastorate was at Boonville, N. Y. He remained there about five years, at the end of that time the church thought it advisable to receive secret society members into the church; also wished that the question of dancing should not be brought up, leaving it to the choice of the young members themselves how far they should go in worldly amusements. These questions separated between church and pastor. At this time Mr. Fisk said before he took charge of another church he wished his position well understood.

In a short time he was called to the pastorate of Leyden Baptist church, Lewis Co., N. Y. This church passing a resolution to receive no secret society members. A Good Templar lodge was organized in the village, a number of the members of the church and some from their families uniting with the lodge, the church decided not to discipline their members, they also received Templars to membership and the pastorate was again dissolved after continuing two years.

In 1869 Mr. Fisk organized at Constableville, Lewis Co., N. Y., a little church whose principles were: "No fellowship with secret societies; no communion with those who were members and no receiving to membership from any secret society." This little church built them a house of worship and maintained services and Sabbath school until the death of their pastor, which occurred June 9th. Mr. Fisk's last sermon was preached May 28th, text, 1 Kings, xii.

Truth, pure truth has been the burden of his discourses as the healing of the nations, no compromise with secretism or worldliness in any form; strict integrity, exact justice, a church separate from the world, a peculiar people; the lines drawn between the church and the world. For these things he cried. But his voice is silent now. God has taken the work from his hands, has called him home, and although we miss him and mourn, we believe God cannot err. He who doeth all things well will not forget His promises, and we rejoice to think that "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

Editor Cynosure:—It is reported that the Republican nominee for President is a Catholic. Please inform us through the Cynosure. We would also be pleased to see a report of the State Political meeting at Muncie, Ind. Will some Indiana friend please report through the Cynosure. W. S.

Reply.—Mr. Hayes is a member of a Methodist Episcopal church in Columbus, Ohio. He was last elected Governor of the State against the combined Democratic and Catholic vote. We shall not advice Anti-masons, however, to vote for him until we know the truth of the statement that he is a high Mason and a Congressional salary-grabber.

The Muncie meeting was not largely attended and it was decided to wait until after the convention in this city and try again under more favorable circumstances. See notice.

Friends in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, requiring Past Master Ronayne's services in the lecture work will please communicate at once with this office, so as to secure his exposures in August and September. Friends in Illinois can be visited in July by writing as soon as possible to State Nominating Convention in Ind.

The delegates who recently met in State Convention at Muncie, Delaware Co., Ind., to nominate an anti-secret State ticket and Presidential electors, after due deliberation decided to postpone action until Tuesday, August 1st, 1876.

And the friends of the cause are hereby notified that said convention will meet at Fairmount, Grant Co., Ind., as above stated. Delegates will be entertained while at the convention. Dr. Cook of Albion, Ind., has promised to be present and address the convention. Other good speakers are expected and will no doubt be there. Prof. Thomas Bell and daughter of Alexandria, Ind., have promised to be present and supply the convention with vocal and instrumental music.

Proclamation.

THE CENTENNIAL YEAR.

Washington, D. C., June 26.—The following was issued to-day:

By the President of the United States of America,

A PROCLAMATION.

The Centennial anniversary of the day on which the people of the United States declared their right to a separate and equal station among the powers of the earth seems to demand an exceptional observation. The founders of the Government at its birth and in its feebleness invoked the blessings and protection of a divine Providence, and the thirteen colonies and 3,000,000 of people have expanded to a nation of strength and numbers commanding a position which then was assested, and for which fervent prayers were then offered. It seems fitting that on the occurrence of the one-hundredth anniversary of our existence as a nation a grateful acknowledgment be made to Almighty God for the protection and bounties which he has vouchsafed to our beloved country. I therefore invite the good people of the United States on the approaching 4th day of July, in addition to the usual observances with which they are accustomed to greet the return of the day, further, in such manner and at such time as in their respective localities religious associations may find it most convenient, to mark its recurrence by some public religious and devout thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings which have been bestowed upon us as a nation during the centenary of our existence, and humbly to invoke a continuance of his favor, and of his protection.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this 26th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1876, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundredth.

(Signed) U. S. Grant.

By the President.

Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. M. L. Williston, son of the late J. P. Williston, a life-long friend and supporter of the anti-lodge reform, removed not long since from Galesburg, Ill., to Jamestown, N. Y., the home of Elder Bernard. At the former place he withstood a Masonic attack on the evangelist Hammond. In his new church there have been 38 additions in three months.

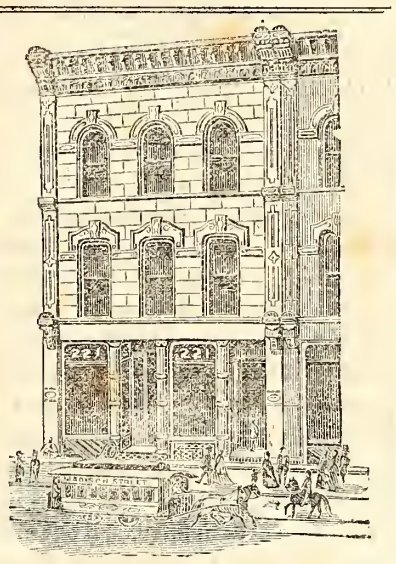
—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, recently in session in Allegheny City, Pa., reports receipts for the year as follows: Receipts for the Board of Education, $4,439; of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund, $3,616; of Memorial Fund, $2,959; Church Extension Fund, $1,075; Foreign Mission Fund, $15,035; Domestic Mission Fund, $3,377; of Theological Seminary, $6,421.

—The complete returns of the Wesleyan Methodist churches for the year ending May 1st, show an increase of 14,867 members.

—Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York City, has spent part of two summers in the west campaigning for the Sabbath-school cause. Finding the work as good as a vacation rest, he purposes to go again this season for a month in company with Mr. W. P. Paxon, as Sabbath-school missionary.

Rev. J. E. Roy, the well known Western agent of the American Home Missionary Society, met with a very severe accident on a recent trip by the fall of an upper berth upon his head while in a sleeping car. He was for a time threatened with brain fever, but is now out of danger. This accident prevented his attending the meeting of the National Christian Association of which he is a member.

—"Rock of Ages" has earned the right to be called the Centennial Hymn. It was written just one hundred years ago, this month, by Augustus Montague Toplady.



The Whiskey Ring Sentenced.

In the United States Circuit Court of Chicago, on the morning of the 24th, Colonel Juessen, on behalf of the defendants in the whisky cases, asked for a stay of sentence. Judge Blodgett however, overrulled the motion and pronounced the following sentence:

A. C. Hesing to pay a find of $5,000 and to be imprisoned in the county jail for the term of two years; O. B. Dickenson and Jonathan Abel, distillers, each a fine of $1.000 and three months in the county jail; Simon Powell, a fine of $3.000 and six months in the county jail; H. B. Miller, ex-county treasurer, a fine of $8,000 and six months in the county jail; F. L. Reed, a fine of $1.000 and one day in the county jail; H. G. Pahlman and David Rush each a fine of $1.000 and three months in the county jail; William Cooper, a fine of $200 and three months in the county jail; R. P. Hutchins and David Cochrane, a fine of $1,000 and three months in the county jail; George T. Burroughs, a fine of $3.000 and one year in the county jail.

Alderman Hildreth was called but did not appear, and it is supposed he has gone to Canada.

We are ruined not by what we really want but by what we think we do; therefore never go abroad in search of your wants. If they be real wants, they will come in search of you, for he that buys what he does not want will soon want what he cannot buy.

The Home Circle.

The Safety of the State.

BY REV. I. N. TARBOX, D. D.

The little springs, the sparkling rills,
In lonely coverts hide;
They run among the ancient hills
And through the shadows glide;
Their birth is in the wilderness,
From mountain wilds they go
By many winding paths, to cheer
The thirsty lands below.

God guards the little mountain springs,
Nor lets their channels dry;
He hovers on his cloudy wings
From out the stormy sky;
He gives the rain and "snow like wool,"
And feeds this ceaseless flow,
To make the lowlands beautiful
And waving harvests grow.

The strength that makes a nation great
In secret is supplied;
The energies that build the state
In humble virtues hide;
From simple homes among the hills
The primal forces flow,
The strength that conquers earthly ills
And overcomes the foe.

And if these lonely fountains fail
And little streamlets dry,
No art or cunning can avail;
The nation's self must die;
But if the mountain streams are pure,
And constant in their flow,
The nation's heritage is sure
In all the plains below.

"Be Still."

It is often easier to do than to suffer the will of God. There is a pleasurable excitement in the employment of one's active powers in the service of Christ—a satisfaction in the consciousness of doing good. Grace in the heart makes Christian heroes; abounding grace alone will suffice to make Christian martyrs.

1. We must "Be still" when persecuted and slandered. If unjustly accused, we may regard every epithet of abuse as a badge of discipleship. Our Divine Master, and his Apostles and witnesses, were marked in the same way. Every lie has the seeds of death within it; let alone, it will die of itself. Seldom is a lie bare-faced. It will try to make itself like the truth. It must undergo a process. It must seek an opportunity to attach itself somehow to the "sun skirts" of truth, and try to make a false impression by its veracious appearance. Opposition may look very formidable; it may seem as "though the mountains were carried into the midst of the sea; the waters thereof roar, and be troubled; the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." But the voice of wisdom cries, "Be still, and know that I am God."

2. We must "Be still" when thwarted in our plans and disappointed in our hopes. We are not responsible for results. If we have sought trustworthy ends by lawful means, and have done our utmost to attain them, the issue is of Divine ordering, and should no more be the subject of murmuring, or repining, than the changes of the seasons, or the rolling of the spheres. The purpose of God in our loss or disappointment may not be obvious. We may have to content ourselves with the thought, "These are but parts of his ways." But the fact that they are his ways must hush the soul in quietude under the most trying and mysterious crosses of life. We often tremble to see God pursuing a course which to our short sight seems quite contrary to the end to be gained This is for two purposes. The first is to humble us, and thus prepare for the reception of His great blessings. The second is to prove that "besides him there is no Saviour." When mountains and waters and cruel Egyptians hedged in the Israelites on every side, and it was manifest that "in vain was the help of man" then came the word, "Stand still and see the salvation of God," and the sea was cleft in twain, and its waves became walls.

"In the mount it shall be seen," is for a saying in Israel. When man gives up, God does the work. Faith will take up the poet's song.—

"Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

3. We must "Be still" under sore afflictions. They are all deserved; they are all ordered of God; they are embraced among the "all things" that "shall work together for good to them who love God." Murmuring does not lessen, but rather increases the burden of griefs. Submitted to—acquiesced in—sanctified—every sorrow may distil new joys, every affliction may work out "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Many a saint has never experienced the infinite preciousness of the Gospel, until the rod of God is upon him. Often, when in the vale, with eyes uplifted, and our mouths closed, we are "dumb," than the stars of promise glisten in our spiritual visions, and the Sun of Righteousness darts his rays of comfort and holy joy on our stricken souls. Only good, real good, permanent good can result from the Divine dispensations in our history. The festering wound will but elicit the healing balm. The storm will but quicken our footsteps to the hiding-place. The oppressive burden will but lead us to the tranquil rest.—Baptist Weekly.

Fruit-Bearing.

Text—"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."—Jesus to his Disciples.

Reader! are you a fruit-bearer in your Lord's vineyard? Are you seeking to make life one grand act of consecration to His glory—one thank-offering for His unmerited love? You may be unable to exhibit much fruit in the eye of the world. Your circumstances and position in life may forbid you to point to any splendid services, or laborious and imposing efforts in the cause of God. It matters not. It is often those fruits that are unseen and unknown to man, ripening in seclusion, that He values most; the quiet, lowly walk—patience and submission—gentleness and humility—putting yourself unreservedly in His hands—willing to be led by Him even in darkness—saying, Not my will, but Thy will;—the unselfish spirit, the meek bearing of an injury, the unostentatious kindness,—these are some of the "fruits" which your Heavenly Father loves, and by which he is glorified.

Perchance it may be with you the season of trial, the chamber of protracted sickness, the time of desolating bereavement, some furnace seven times heated. Herein, too, you may sweetly glorify your God. Never is your Heavenly Father more glorified by his children on earth, than when, in the midst of these furnace-fires, he listens to nothing but the gentle breathings of confiding faith and love—"Let him do what seemeth good unto him." Yes, you can there glorify him in a way which angels cannot do in a world where no trial is. They can glorify God only with the crowns; you can glorify him with the cross and the prospect of the crown together! Ah, if he be dealing severely with you—if he, as the great Husbandman, be pruning his vines, lopping their boughs, stripping off their luxuriant branches and "beautiful rods!" remember the end!—"He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit," and "Herein is my Father glorified!"—Words of Jesus.

"Evil, Be Thou My Good."

WHIST, BILLIARDS, ETC., IN THE MAMILY.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

She was a woman of culture and intelligence, and good social standing. She had passed the meridian of life, and was in a position to look with calm, ripe judgment upon matters which were to younger observers subjects of untried theories. She was listening with interest to the discussion of sundry evils that had crept into our midst, and gained a foothold in our little community before their existence was really suspected—the billiard sallons that were enticing our young boys into evil, the card tables that were ensnaring our young men. Many mothers who had only learned of the existence of these temptations after their sons had been lured into them, were eager and ready for any action; a petition, a crusade, an indignant uprising. What was the best counsel that this woman of experience could bring from the broader observation? Simply that a really elegant and well-equipped billiard saloon be fitted up where the mothers could go with their boys, and thus see that no enticements to gambling and drinking were united with the innocent game. That family whist parties be encouraged so that the boys need not go elsewhere to play, because young people must have these games and amusements, they will have them in some shape, and the best policy is to make them as innocent as possible. This being the very best advice that worldly wisdom has to offer, it may perhaps be worth looking at, especially as the reasoning upon which it rests is continually put forth in one shape and another, and its assumptions are frequently accepted as truth.

Admitting the truth of the theory that the young have a natural appetite for games and kindred amusements which must have and will find gratification, is it best to feed, and foster, and cultivate the propensity into a passion, or to hold it in check by developing the mind in other directions. You may make your boy a skillful billiard player in your private parlor, but does not the game gain in fascination for him exactly as he advances in skill, and will it not be infinitely harder for him to resist the attraction of other billiard tables, when your innocent place of amusement is out of his reach? In the case which elicited this discussion it proved that the lads who were first entrapped by the unprincipled gamblers who spread the snare, the ones who persisted in spite of parental authority, were the very ones for whom mistaken liberality had provided billiard tables at home. What is to restrain these tastes which you have cultivated from breaking bounds when they are beyond the reach of your safeguards? Moral principle? But if moral principle be sufficient to hold against temptation, would it be any weaker if lack of skill were added to it?

The argument is a complete fallacy, making the existence of a propensity a reason for strengthening it. It stands upon no better ground than the dram-seller's plea—"If I do not sell liquor some one else will—people will have it." Experience has demonstrated its fatal falsehood over and over, yet it rises from the dust as if it were veritable truth. An excellent Christian mother said recently, "I was led to believe that if I would keep my boys from wanting to play cards away from home I must allow them in it under my eye, and we played a good deal for a few months, but I saw they were becoming absorbed and fascinated by the chances of the game; that it was fast taking the place of reading and conversation and all social life, and I began to realize that instead of shielding them from temptation I was preparing them to fall right in with it. We have no more to do with cards at our home."

Another mother was led to reflect seriously upon the subject by noticing the evil effects of a game of cards upon the temper and disposition of her children. They become irritable and petish, showing a feverish excitement over the gains or losses of the play, and while one was morbidly jealous and suspicious, the other showed a tendency to cunning, and a disposition to take every possible advantage without absolute dishonesty. It is hardly possible for a person of mature years, with his mind absorbed in grave business interests, to comprehend the serious importance which the chance issues of a game have for the young, or with what unhealthy excitement they enter into it, but a very limited amount of observation would convince any one that nature needs no cultivation in that direction.

Thus much for the unsoundness of the policy which opens the door for the very evil it would guard against, but we may go much further. The assertion upon which it is based is false. Why "must young people have such games and amusements?" What necessity exists for them? Thousands have grown up to healthy, vigorous manhood and womanhood without them. Thousands who felt it, perhaps, as something of a deprivation that they were held by an unflinching authority from the card-table, and the billiard table, and the ball room, and the theater, have lived to be thankful for wisdom that was greater than their own.

Thousands more have been so judiciously educated that they never felt the lack of such a mere surface sensation as amusement.

You expect to educate your child to scorn the low and disreputable surroundings which make many places and forms of amusement objectionable, but why not go a step further and teach him to despise the childish weakness that with so many open sources of delight and recreation cries out for amusement. A tithe of the time and money spent upon costly diversions would put our children quite above the appetite for them. A good microscope costs hardly more than a pack of cards, a printing press is cheaper than a billiard table, a fine library could be furnished with the expense of one or two dancing parties. The gossip and criticism of the family table might be profitably exchanged for a lively discussion of some new discovery in science or art, and the fault-finding or icy silence of the evening hour for a little uproarious fun or nonsense. If parents expend their whole time and thought upon matters outside of the family circle it is little wonder if this love of amusement grow like a rampant weed, until its roots absorb the whole vigor of the soil and everything else languishes in its shadow. It must be dealt with by cultivating other growths, and by patient and persistent sowing of other seed. As I look up from my paper I see upon the table a little blue card, containing a printed text of Scripture. It is a very old message, from a very old book, but its warning is not yet out of date—"Woe unto them that call evil good."—Advance.

The Rocks of Calvary.

In Fleming's "Christology," it is stated that an unbeliever visiting the sacred places of Palestine, was shown the clefts of Mount Calvary. Examining them narrowly and critically, he turned in amazement to his fellow-travelers, and said, "I have long been a student of nature, and I am sure that the rents and clefts in a rock must split according to its veins, and where it is weakest in the adhesion of parts; for this," said he, "I have observed to have been done in other rocks, when separated or broken after an earthquake; and reason tells me it must always be so. But it is quite otherwise here; for the rocks are split athwart and across the veins, in a strange and preternatural manner, and therefore," said he, "I thank God that I came hither to see the standing monument of miraculous power by which God gives evidence to this day of the divinity of Christ."

Close Questions.

Your tempers, how are they? Do you become impatient under trial; fretful, when chided or crossed; angry, revengeful, when injured; vain, when flattered; proud, when prospered; complaining, when chastened; unbelieving, when seemingly forsaken; unkind, when neglected. Are you subject to discontent, to ambition, to selfishness; are you worldly? Covetous of riches, of vain pomp and parade, of indolence, of honor, of ease? Are you unfeeling, contemptuous of others, seeking your own, boasters, proud, lovers of your own selves? Beware! These are the sentiments of the old nature. Nay if they exist in you, in however small a degree, they are demonstrative that the old man of sin is not dead. It will be a sad mistake if you detect these evils within you and yet close your eyes to them and continue to make profession of holiness. These are not infirmities; they are indications of want of grace.—Bishop Foster.

"A story is told of an old hunter in Michigan, who, when the country was new, got lost in the woods several times. He was told to buy a pocket compass, which he did, and a friend explained to him its use. He soon got lost and lay out as usual. When found he was asked why he did not travel by the compass. He said that he did not dare to. He wished to go north, and he 'tried hard to make the the thing point north, but 'twant no use; 'twould diddle, diddle, diddle, diddle right around, and point southeast every time!' A good many people fail of the right direction in life for the same reason of the mishap of our Wolverine friend. They are afraid to take the Bible and follow just as it points."

That cloth which a bungler thinks too little for a garment, a good workman can make one of, and leave some for another use also.

Children's Corner.

A Boy's Resolve.

I will not swear,
I do not dare
God's holy name to take;
I will not lie,
But I will try
The truth my guide to make.

I will not steal,
For I should feel
Degraded and ashamed;
I will be kind,
My parents mind,
Nor as a fighter named.

If I begin
In youth to sin,
My misery is sure;
No peace of mind
Can I thus find,
No pleasure good and pure.

But if I love
The God above,
My friends and parents kind,
My teachers true,
And school-mates too,
Much happiness I'll find.

The Blind Boy's Patience.

The other day I went to see a little blind boy. Scarlet fever had settled in his eyes, and for many months he has not seen at all. He used to be a sprightly little fellow, upon the run everywhere,

"Well, my dear boy," I said, "this is hard for you, is it not?"

He did not answer for a moment; then he said: "I don't know that I ought to say hard—God knows best;' but his lip quivered, and a little tear stole down his cheek.

"Yes, my child, you have a kind Heavenly Father, who loves you, and feels or you more, even, than your mother does."

"I know it, sir," said the little boy, "and it comforts me."

"I wish Jesus was here to cure Frank," said his little sister.

"Well," said I, "he will open little Frank's eyes to see what a good Saviour he is. He will show him that a blinded heart is worse than blind eyes; and he will cure it, and make him see and enjoy beautiful heavenly things, so that he may sit here, and be a thousand times happier than many children who are running about."

"I can't help wishing he could see," said Lizzie.

"I dare say; but I hope you don't try to make Frank discontented."

"Frank isn't discontented," said Lizzie earnestly; "he loves God. And love sets everything right, and makes its own sunshine; does it not, Frank?"

"I don't feel cross now," said the little blind boy meekly: "When I'm alone I pray, and sing my Sunday-school hymns, and sing, and sing; and God is in the room, and it feels light, and—and—I forget I'm blind at all;" and a sweet light stole over his pale features as he spoke. It was a heavenly light I was sure.

Learning a Trade.

I want to ask you, boys, what you expect to make of yourselves? Have you any fixed plan? If not, then learn a trade. Look at the hundreds of young men in the cities who have no trade. What good are they? What good do they do to the community at large? Nine out of ten never get rich: they live on from hand to mouth trying all their lives to make both ends meet. I tell you, boys, the man who has a trade is independent. He can always find work if he is honest, skilled, and industrious. No fear of his being poverty-stricken. Why was the relief association started? To help the men who have a trade? No, sir. It is to help those men who have never had a trade; who live from hand to mouth when alive, and when they died left their widows and children in poverty.

Learn a good trade and you need never call any man master. Suppose you go to a strange city to work, don't you think, if you learn a trade and be master of it, and when dull times come, as they sometimes will in winter, you will find how much better off you are than the clerks and other young men who have no trade to back them?—Farmer's Union.

A Warning to Boys.

A little boy, eleven years of age, in Iowa, a few days since, led a horse to water, and tied the halter strap to his arm. The horse took fright, ran away and dragged and kicked the little fellow until he died. It is never safe to place one's self in a position where, if even a very improbable accident occur, serious results are almost certain. Don't tie yourself to a horse or cow; don't stand in front of a reaper or mower; don't leave the traces until the last in taking horses from the wagon; don't trust too much to the quiet disposition of an ox.

Home and Health Hints.

Household Pests.

A writer in the Scientific American says: "I have not seen a bedbug or a flea in my house for many years. If an army of them were to be brought in, mercury would speedily exterminate them; but I think cleanliness the best and perhaps the only preventive. The common house fly I do not molest, believing that it more than compensates for its trouble by clearing the atmosphere of effluvia and the animalculae which always arise from the putrefaction of decaying substances during warm weather. So also with the birds, which are quite numerous here, during the summer. Instead of shooting them or setting up scarecrows to frighten them away, I throw out every possible inducement for them to build their nests in my fruit trees. The birds capture a large share of the insects in the larval state, and thus the mothers are prevented from depositing eggs for a future crop of worms.

For the residue of insects which infest my vegetable garden I find that the laboratory of the chemist furnishes materials fatal to them all, among which white hellebore and cayenne pepper are of the most utility. The bug or worm which cannot find vegetation unflavored with these articles will seek his breakfast elsewhere and leave my garden unmolested. A few drops of carbolic acid in a pint of water will cleanse house plants from lice in a very short time, If mosquitoes or other blood-suckers infest our sleeping rooms at night, we uncork a bottle of the oil of pennyoyal, and these insects leave in great haste, nor will they return so long as the air in the room is loaded with the fumes of that aromatic herb. If rats enter the cellar, a little powdered potash thrown into their holes or mixed with meal and scattered in their runways never fails to drive them away. Cayenne peper will keep the buttery and store-room free from ants and cock-roaches. If a mouse makes an entrance into any part of your dwelling, saturate a rag with cayenne in solution and stuff it into a hole, which can be repaired with either wood or mortar. No rat or mouse will eat that rag for the purpose of opening communication with a depot of supplies.

Professor Wilder, of Cornell University, gives these short rules for action in case of accident:

For dust in the eyes, avoid rubbing; dash cold water in them; remove cinders, etc., with the round point of a lead pencil.

Remove insects from the ear by tepid water; never put a hard instrument into the ear.

If an artery is cut, compress it above the wound; if a vein is cut, compress it below.

If choked, go upon all fours, and cough.

For slight burns, dip the part in cold water; if the skin is destroyed, cover with varnish.

For apoplexy, raise the head and body: for faintidg, lay the person flat.

When is a lady's dress like an unfortunate bull-fighter?—When it is gored. And when is it like a partisan?—When it is biased. And when is it like a toper?—When it is full. And when is it like the sails of a ship?—When it is trimmed. When is it like a season of the year?—When it is lent. When is it no longer fit for use?—After she has once worn it out.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr.. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argumt. 425 pagences,

REV. DRURY'S ADDRESS.

and respected? No! there have been more than five thousand murders in the southern States since 1865, and the machinery of persecution and death is still revolving. To aid this bloody work, the Ku-Klux, White League and grange have been instituted—by men outside the secret orders do you say?—or by rebel Freemasons, with enough of her members in each to govern with absolute certainty in the South, and to control many districts in the northern States?

Is there a secret society in America, of any note, that Masons do not or cannot enter and, directly or indirectly, control?

The grange was invented in the South in 1867, and planted in the North in 1868. The seed taking root in Minnesota, it grew there without the suspicion of many good men as to the character of its southern parentage and the nature of the work designed for its northern children. Hence many good people in the North have been unconsciously doing dirty work for the aristocrats and demons who imprisoned, starved and killed their dearest relatives in the rebellion! All societies, having binding and perpetual obligations of secrecy, however beautified by paintings and bewitching promises are either invented by Freemasons directly or indirectly, or may be entered by them, and finally be brought under their easy control.

Look again at the Grand Lodge of Masonry! "Its power is absolute:" Mackey's Lexicon, page 183; and to the promise and oath of the Masters of subordinate lodges when inaugurated, who agree "strictly to conform to all edicts of the Grand Lodge" Now, I ask, is it not weakness and folly to suppose that the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of any of the States, with his, and all his predecessors' experience and knowledge, since the first lodge was set up on the continent in Boston, in 1736, does not know his own children? And being clothed with the absolute power of a despot, can he not govern them? Unless overruled by Providence as in the late rebellion the time is near when Congress will pay to the South the fifty million dollars already claimed as damages to rebel property by Union and confederate soldiers, and in less than ten years, the whole of the rebel war debt will be assumed by the United States government. "God save our country!" Awful responsibilities are upon this nation. Mr. President, I will close this part of my lecture by quoting the words and adopting the sentiments of Wm. H. Seward, which he delivered in the United States Senate in 1855.

"Secret societies, sir! Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and bending on my knee before them enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity, and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrender my judgment to their judgment and my own conscience to their keeping!

No, no, sir! I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave!"

3. Of the dangerous character of secret societies the church has most to fear. The health and growth of the Christian religion depend upon the purity and intelligence of her friends. These friends must be awake and active; for it is "while men sleep the enemy sows tares." The holy office and power of the church of Jesus Christ must be conscientiously regarded by good men. True morality rests upon the basis of Christianity; nor can a republican government long exist without her support. Every institution either supports or tends to cripple the church of Christ. "No man can serve two masters." There is but "one faith and one Lord." Truth admits no neutrality nor compromise. By these truth-tests men and institutions will either stand or fall; and "by their fruits ye shall know them." What is the nature of Speculative Freemasonry as viewed from a Christian standpoint, and as shown by standard Masonic authors? But before giving testimony here let this proposition be made: If Freemasonry be a religion and claims saving power without the Lord Jesus Christ, then the conclusion will be inevitable that it is the rival of Christianity and the enemy of mankind. Albert G. Mackey, Past General Grand High Priest, Perfect Prince Freemason, &c., says in his Lexicon, page 404: "The religion of Masonry is pure theism, on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge." Daniel Sickels, Knight of the Brazen Serpent, Prince of Mercy, &c., says in his Monitor, page 34: "The common gavel is an instrument made use of by operative Masons to break off the corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builder's use; but we, as free and accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." "Hail, Masonry divine. Thou art divine."—Sickels' Monitor, page 144. "All the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer, because Masonry is a religious institution:" Mackey's Lexicon, page 371. Salem Town, as quoted by Rev. C. G. Finney, says: "Every good Mason is of necessity truly and emphatically a Christian: and is assured of his election and final salvation." In Sickels' Monitor, page 78, you will find this, in summing up the first three degrees: "These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole, nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires." "A Mason, who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is free from sin!" Mackey's Lexicon, page 16. These quotations are sufficient to establish the fact beyond a doubt that Freemasonry is regarded by its best authors as a religious and saving institution, and that, too, without Christ or the Holy Spirit.

In the degree of the Knights of the Christian Mark, Knights of the Holy Sepulchre and in the Holy and Thrice Illustrious Order of the Cross, the name of Christ is used. These degrees having been added professedly for the benefit of Christians, we will see how much of Christianity they contain. On page 183, Light on Masonry, you will find a recognition of his Holiness, Pope Sylvester, and on page 199, you will find the candidate swears, "by the blessing of God, to punish the violator of his obligation, by pointing him out as an unworthy vagabond; by opposing his interest, by deranging his business, by transfering his character after him wherever he may go * * * during his whole natural life." A further penalty is annexed to the violator of his oath of having a spear thrust into his left side! You will remember that these Christian degrees are reached through all the lower degrees where Christ is rejected. Now is it possible to reject Christ in some degrees and accept him in others, when all the degrees are bound together with death cords? Is it Christianity to persecute a seceding brother during any part of his natural life? That Masonry still professes to save men may be seen by the funeral sermon on the death of Mr. Gerhart, preached by Rev. Mr. Lease, and published in the "Marshall Times" of Marshall county, Iowa, March 16, 1876. To the fraternity in large numbers, Mr. Lease said, "Let me urge you to live as just and upright Masons; then shall you not fear to enter the door of death; for our faith having purified our hearts working by love * * * we shall be safely moored, ready to welcome death as a kind messenger set from the Supreme Grand Master to translate us from the imperfect to the all-perfect Lodge above." The deceased was a Mason but made no profession of the Christian religion.

The testimony of seceding Masons is of the very best character. On the 4th of July, 1776, fifty-six good and brave men declared thirteen British colonies to be "Independent States"; and on the 4th day of July 1828, at LeRoy, N. Y., one hundred and three equally good and brave men severed their allegiance from the Masonic institution and declared to the world their abhorrence of the laws and usages of the order and their final separation from it; and for their security pledged to each other their lives, fortunes, and sacred honor. See Light on Masonry, pages 314 to 320. Is not the testimony of these men the very best human testimony? It was voluntary on their part; but the result of convictions of duty to God and their country. It was given also at the risk of Masonic penalties, to which they made themselves liable, and which the bad men yet remaining in the lodge, might execute. Now these witnesses testify the following: See Light on Masonry, pages 317-318:

"It (Masonry,) blasphemes the name, and attempts personification of the Great Jehovah. It prostitutes the sacred Scriptures to unholy purposes, to subserve its own secular and trifling concerns. It weakens the sanctions of morality and religion, by the multiplication of profane oaths, and an immoral familiarity with religious forms and ceremonies. It destroys a veneration for religion and religious ordinances by the profane use of religious forms. It substitutes the self-righteousness and ceremonies of Masonry for the vital religion and ordinances of the Gospel. It promotes habits of idleness and intemperance, by its members neglecting their business to attend to its meetings and drink its libations. * * * An institution thus fraught with so many and great evils, is dangerous to our government and the safety of our citizens, and is unfit to exist among a free people. We, therefore, believing itto be a duty we owe to God, our country, and to posterity, resolve to expose its mystery, wickedness, and tendency, to public view, and we exhort all citizens who have a love of country, and a veneration for its laws, a spirit of our holy religion, and a regard for the welfare of mankind, to aid us in the cause which we have espoused, and appealing to Almighty God for the rectitude of our motives, we solemnly absolve ourselves from all allegiance to the Masonic institution and declare ourselves free and independent."

I now turn to the false claims of the order as to its antiquity. Surely if men tell and practice deception and falsehood, their claim to Christianity is destroyed. Now call attention to the many times Masonic orators and writers have claimed that Noah, Abraham, King Solomon, St. John, and many other ancient worthies were Freemasons. I give an incident. In a respectable town of near three thousand inhabitants, and in a church, were gathered friends to pay a tribute of respect to a deceased Knight Templar. Several hundred others were present, including Knights with their swords, who occupied the altar, and other Masons in the rear, but without war weapons. This gathering was within the present century; it was in the year 1875. At the close of the solemn funeral sermon, I heard the preacher say these "weighty words:" "Now brethren of the fraternity I hope you will imitate the example of your first Grand Master, King Solomon!" it has long since been abundantly proven that Speculative Freemasonry dates no farther back than Appletree tavern, London, 1717. But not till 1875 did any noted orator venture to tell the truth as did Prof. T. S. Parvin, P. G. M. and G. Secretary of the Grand Lodge, and G. orator of Grand Commandery, at Keokuk, before the Grand Commandery of the State of Iowa. He said that "Adam and Enoch and their long line of successors, ante and post-diluvian, are perfectly free from the sin and odium the anti's would attach to the 'Morgan-killers' of the 19th century. Even Solomon was no Mason, with all his wisdom great as it was, he knew no more of the mysteries of Freemasonry than the Queen of Sheba, who came from afar to adore his wisdom and the temple he built. . . . Nor is there any evidence, however faint, to prove that either of the St. Johns, ... were Masons, beyond the wish that it were so. . . . . Nor is it true that all the Presidents from Washington to Grant included, were or are Masons. The first was, the last is not. And what would the spirits of those Anti-masons, the elder and younger Adams, and Van Buren, and Fillmore say to the cruel accusation, could they but wing their way back to the earth and throw back the lie in the face o their falsifiers. It is true, however, and the truth ought to be told, that Arnold, the single traitor of his age and country, was a Mason. The institution of Freemasonry did not originate among the Jews, nor even in Asia. It sprang, according to the best evidence in Europe. . . . . The oldest Masonic book in existence is not two centuries old." I have thus quoted this extract from a prominent Masonic orator to prove this fact, that Christian men who unite with the order, sanction its false claims to venerable antiquity, deceive the uninformed, lend their sacred influence to the publication of falsehoods, place themselves with the enemies of truth, and thereby forfeit all just claim to intelligent Christianity.

In the light of this and other testimony, what respect should be given men and institutions that claim Solomon and St. John with the great and good men of modern time as worthy Freemasons? What, alas, becomes of the ceremonial falsehood of killing and raising Hiram Abiff? But when we view the laws of Masonry as prohibiting, under fearful penalties, the work of evangelical repentance, its character becomes more awful still. Mistakes and crimes result from universal depravity; but God graciously pardons the penitent through his contrition and the confession of his faith in Christ, and makes him an heir of glory. Wounds, too, are healed between offended brethren by mutual confession of faults one to another. This is God's order. Freemasonry cannot hinder conviction nor contrition but forbids confession of a brother's crimes when known as Masonic secrets, under the penalty of death! We will suppose a brother Royal Arch Mason steals $500 of his neighbor. The theft may be known to a professor of the Christian religion who has promised "to keep his secrets and to extricate him from any difficulty, whether he be right or wrong, murder and treason not excepted." Now suppose it be surmised that this man knows of the whereabouts and crime of his brother Mason, but has been quiet. He is however brought into court as a witness in behalf of the state. The thief has been arrested on suspicion and brought into court. The case is now called—this witness is sworn to tell the whole truth and God is appealed to as a witness of his integrity. He is asked, "Do you know this defendant?" He answers "Yes, sir." "Do you know anything about him stealing $500 from Mr. A?" Now comes the test! He has taken two oaths precisely opposite each other. Already his conscience is bent, and now it must break by the threatened hammer of death; and the witness actually swears that he knows nothing of the stealing. It must be acknowledged that he has been true to his Masonic obligations; but where is his Christianity? He is now perjured before the civil law; and however deeply his conscience may convict him, and however contrite he may be, even on his dying bed, he dare not confess his sin to the civil authorities; nor to his own wife, that he may possibly die in peace, without breaking his Masonic obligations. Masonry by the parent society, or any of its white-washed children, operates dangerously to Christian union and fellowship. While it is right to mingle freely with men of the world, and engage in commercial transactions with them; and while it is duty to do good unto all men as we have opportunity, it is not allowable to hold religious fellowship with infidels. To worship with unbelievers, and call them brethren as in the lodge, is to damage both the good and bad; because it is a compromise in which the good suffer by recognizing principles which the Bible condemns. It also injures wicked men by the approval given by virtue of their association with the good, in which the idea that God is well pleased with the false doctrine and false worship, gradually but necessarily obtains. Thus the wicked obtain a false hope. Hence the reason why so very few Freemasons, and especially those in the higher degrees, ever become the meek and lowly follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. To Christians the Scriptures are authority on all questions of duty. God commands Christians "to have no fellowship with unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Again, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness; and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? And what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate." Christians by the authority of these Scriptures are positively forbidden to HAVE, or to hold religious communion and FELLOWSHIP with wicked men! These apply with great force to all secret societies. For all such are forbidden by Bible precept and by implication. Christ is the moral centre of all pure fellowship. Christ is the only Rock cleft, the only Door open, the only Truth given whereby men must be saved. Let me believe in Christ, and sing with the poet: "In my hand no price I bring; simply to the cross I cling," and I am happy. After all be said that can truthfully be spoken against secret associations of men, the fact that these institutions virtually deny Christ and his atonement, is the most awful fact ever written! What would some of the results be if all Christian professors would break their connection and withdraw their fellowship from all secret associations, and do as Paul commanded, "Reprove them?" Well, the lodge alone would bear the blame of defeating the ends of justice in our courts, and of persecuting honest seceders and worthy opposers; whereas every species of crime now committed against the secret compact, the state and the church, because of the oaths, the ceremonies, the deceptions and the intrigues of the lodge, is necessarily shared by church members who belong to the lodge. The time would then be near when all who now speak well of secretism, and thereby become accomplices in the crimes of lodge persecutions and murder, would see their folly and wickedness, and bear testimony against it. There would speedily be a closer union between different branches of Christ's church; a much-needed object. There are ministers and members in all of the orthodox churches who cannot with all their charity, fellowship those who have taken oaths of which John Quincy Adams says "a common cannibal would be ashamed." So many of Christ's professed friends have gone into these Christless institutions, that those who know their so-called secrets, look with just suspicion upon strangers until their whereabouts are known. It is a great happiness as well as blessing to unite with different denominations of Christians in evangelical work. But when it is known that even ministers professedly employed in such blessed work for Christ, "who in secret said nothing," have been stripped, haltered, blindfolded and blasphemously sworn, how is it possible to preach, pray, or sing with such men? Were these things all taken out of the way, would not Christian denominations and individual hearts flow together? And thus united would it be too much to expect the speedy conquest of the world to Christ, the ushering in of the millennium, with the sweetest sentiments and purest melodies of men and angels, "Glory to God in the highest, Peace on earth and good will to men."

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

FREEMASONRY EXPOSED,
by CAP'T. WILLIAM MORGAN.

THE GENUINE OLD MORGAN BOOK:—republished with engravings showing the Lodge Room, Dress of candidates, Signs, Due Guards, Grips, Etc.

This revelation is so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. Thousands have testified to the correctness of the revelation and this book therefore sells very rapidly.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,
CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful argnments and illnstrations that have ever been given to the public.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

Gain in one week, 30

Edmond Ronayne brought in a club of five from his last lecturing tour. Rev. J. W. Gilbert, Streator, Ill., a club of seven and W. R. Morley, sends a club of fourteen from Iowa, and writes that he "will try again."

Such a report it is pleasant to make. We thank those who have enabled us to make it. Who will help the report next week?

Geo. Swanson, Bedford, Michigan, sends two renewals and one new six months subscription, the result of ONE DAY'S work. The "one day's work" of our friends accomplish much. Let us have more of them.

W. W. Knipple, Saybrook, Ill, sends a new subscription and writes:

"This makes seven new subscribers (including myself) that I have gotten on my work this year; and I am going to work on. I could not get along well without the Cynosure, and I want everybody else to enjoy the same blessing. What is most needed is an earnest effort on the part of each subscriber and in one month the number will be doubled."

How to Find Elder Freeman.

Go to the south-east part of the Main Building and enquire for the "American Book Trade Association." His stand is about the centre of the part assigned the "Book Trade Association."

Pray for Elder Freeman.

In this dear brother's last letter of June 22d, he says: "I am very much refreshed and improved in health, beyond all my expectations. A sudden change has come over me. I am led to think that God is mercifully answering prayer." We are sure that God has heard prayer for Elder Freeman and we rejoice greatly that it pleases our Heavenly Father to give us encouragement that Bro. Freeman's work at the Centennial is not ended. To God be all the glory for the great work already accomplished. God's word assures us that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much," that "The prayer of the faithful shall save the sick." Will not every reader of the Cynosure plead earnestly with God that if it be for his glory (as we believe) he will give Elder Freeman strength of body and mind and above all, the presence of the Holy Spirit, for continued labor for the overthrow of the powers of darkness and the enlightenment of the many thousands who visit the Centennial. Let every one of the friends of the cause who visits the Centennial, call on Bro. Freeman and give him a word of cheer and your God-speed and above all let us all continue to pray for the blessing of Jehovah upon him and his labors. We shall keep a standing notice of elder Freeman's place on this the 16th page.

Those Pictures

have been received and our orders have all been filled. Those we have heard from are delighted with them and all admit that the price charged or them is not one fifth the regular price of such engravings.

The picture of "Signing the Declaration of Independence" gives a portrait of the forty-eight brave men who signed that wonderful declaration of liberty, risking thereby their lives, fortunes and good name, and from that moment they were regarded by the English government as rebel outlaws and traitors. This great picture 25x36 inches would not be considered high at $5 each, but 50 cents or one new subscription with $2.20 is all that we ask for this picture, with a key showing each particular signer's portrait and his signature, and also the "Declaration of Independence," 19x24 inches. We have about 100 of them left and would rather give them as premiums than in any other way.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Slowly the mist o'er the meadow was creeping,
Bright on the dewy buds glistened the sun,
When from his couch, while his children were sleeping,
Rose the bold rebel and shouldered his gun.
Waving her golden veil
Over the silent dale,
Blithe looked the morning on cottage and spire;
Hushed was his parting sigh,
While from his noble eye
Flashed the last sparkle of liberty's fire.

On the smooth green where the fresh leaf is springing,
Calmly the first-born of glory have met;
Hark! the death volley around them is ringing!
Look! with their life-blood the young grass is wet!
Faint is the feeble breath,
Murmuring low in death,
"Tell to our sons how their fathers have died!"
Nerveless the iron hand,
Raised for its native land,
Lies by the weapon that gleams at its side.

Over the hillsides the wild knell is tolling;
From their far hamlets the yeomanry come;
As through the storm-cloud the thunder burst rolling,
Circles the beat of the mustering drum.
Fast on the soldier's path
Darken the waves of wrath;
Long have they gathered and loud shall they fall;
Red glares the musket's flash,
Sharp rings the rifle's crash,
Blazing and clanging from thicket and wall.

Gayly the plume of the horseman was dancing,
Never to shadow his cold brow again;
Proudly at morning the war steed was prancing;
Reeking and panting he droops on the rein;
Pale is the lip of scorn,
Voiceless the trumpet-horn,
Torn is the silken-fringed red cross on high;
Many a belted breast
Low on the turf shall rest,
Ere the dark hunters the herd have passed by.

Snow-girdled crags where the hoarse wind is raving,
Rocks where the weary floods murmur their wail,
Wilds where the fern by the furrow is waving,
Reeled with the echoes that rode on the gale;
Far as the tempest thrills
Over the darkened hills,
Far as the sunshine streams over the plain,
Roused by the tyrant's band,
Woke all the mighty land,
Girded for battle, from mountain to main.

Green be the graves where her martyrs are lying!
Shroudless and tombless they sunk to their rest,
While o'er their ashes the starry fold flying,
Wraps the proud eagle they roused from his nest.
Borne on her northern pine,
Long o'er the foaming brine
Spread her broad banner to storm and to sun;
Heaven keep her ever free,
Wide as o'er land and sea
Floats the fair emblem her heroes have won!

Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways!

I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries. Ps. lxxxi, 13, 14.

How Are the Mighty Fallen.

BY REV. W. POST.

In General Conference in Baltimore lately a committee reporting on secret societies said, "What your committee needed was more light." This is just what the scribes and Pharisees needed when Jesus attested his divinity before their eyes. But they could not see, and even imputed to Jesus diabolical powers: that he cast out devils by the prince of devils—an imputation their descendants have not been slow to make down to the year of our Lord 1876 against all of Christ's disciples who attempt to cast out Satan. It is possible that some deluded antediluvians while fleeing to the mountains, struggling in the floods, and clinging to the branches of submerging trees needed more light to see that God was fulfilling Noah's inspired declaration. It is just as supposable in the one instance as in the other.

But said the committee, "Freemasonry claims and publishes to the world that its fundamental principle is that which Jesus taught, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," and that its devotees were bound to carry out this "divine precept." The committee says it had a very difficult task to perform because Masonry is a SECRET and OATH-BOUND organization. If Masonry is secret and oath-bound, as the committee say, how can anything be known of its principles? If the Methodist church was an oath-bound secret society what could we know about its principles from any open publication it might make? Indeed without secrecy and oaths it is almost impossible at present to say what its principles are. Judging from what some suffer through a power it hugs to its bosom we might readily conclude that OPEN and FREE as it is to the world it knows little of the divine precept, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." How then shall the statement of secret oath-bound societies, condemned by tens of thousands of seceding Masons, be received as sufficient evidence by intelligent men, to establish the vain assertion that oath-bound, secret Freemasonry has a fundamental principle corresponding to the divine precept, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Indeed, we see nothing outside pertaining to it, by which we ever could arrive at such a conclusion, especially when accepting the illustration of Jesus as to whom our neighbor is (see Luke 10: 36). Past Master Ronayne denounces the craft as a stupendous humbug. But as a humbug and disgrace it does not begin to compare with the action of said committee and its supporters at Baltimore Centennial Conference in the month of May, this nineteenth century!

The N. C. Advocate (Syracuse, N. Y.,) says; "It is a notable fact that the great festival of 'Bealtine' (Baal worshipers) held in honor of the deified patron of the original Baltimore, was like our General Conference, commenced on May first, and "that then a land lying in darkness was suddenly illuminated by the Arch Druid. The flashing forth of Tara was the signal for a general illumination. Then on every hill the local beacon blazed." What a strange coincidence; commencing on the same month the Methodist church has received in the report of the General Conference committee on secret societies the wonderful endorsement that the fundamental principle of Freemasonry is the divine precept, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." Thus from said Conference there has been sent forth as from Tara flashing flames to illumine every hilltop and every valley of Methodism that all may know and GOVERN THEMSELVES ACCORDINGLY, that this GREAT BAAL has a place among us and commands a right to our profound respect. Alas! Alas!!

If the committee need more light what did the General Conference need? The committee were provided with books, papers and tracts whose light would lighten devils even if they wished to see. I am in conference with quite a number of ministers who have been inside of Masonry who unitedly declare that it is wisdom which is "earthly, sensual, devilish."

Bishop Hamline said both it and Oddfellowship were a bane (rank poison) "in the midst of us sundering and dividing." He had tasted the wormwood and the gall. Pres. Finney said of it, that "it is the most absurd and abominable institution that can exist in a Christian country. A secret work of darkness." John Quincy Adams, Chas. Sumner, Seward, Filmore, and multitudes of just such men all show it to be a child of the devil. Large conventions of seceding Masons soon after Morgan was abducted and murdered all denounced it as corrupt, murderous and blasphemous. Wendell's reports, vol. 13, p. 9, etc.. show the oaths of Freemasonry sworn to as being taken by Masons in good standing, as Masons themselves, that are enough to stamp it forever with infamy. Oaths which involve injustice, murder and treason; and yet that committee "needed more light." "Let the Lord rebuke thee!"

It is said misery loves company, and we console ourselves and hope on and pray for deliverance, for we are not yet so fallen as some who have a church rule against admission of "secretists," yet trample it under foot. They are the greater compromisers. they the greater slaves. But, O Lord, have compassion on us! "How are the mighty fallen!"

Rochester, June, 1876.

The Unanswerable Argument.

1. All things which essentially and inseparably involve many great and crying moral evils, should be abandoned and abolished.

2. Freemasonry, as known and practiced in the United States, inseparably and essentially involves many great and crying moral evils.

3. Therefore, Freemasonry, as known and practiced in the United States, should be abandoned and abolished.

This is the pith and substance of the argument. And who will point out any logical defect in it?

The conclusion is inevitable. The premises are well taken; all concede the major, and none can successfully deny the expressed minor. Freemasonry involves illegal oaths and barbarous penalties, with all the moral evil growing out of such things, not contingently or accidently but necessarily and essentially. The Freemasons themselves confess that their extra-judicial oaths and ferocious penalties are inseparable from the order.

This settles the question that our syllogism must stand.

D. B. TURNEY.

We met a man the other day who told us the following of his friend, a Freemason. The friend had lately moved into town where he was called to some public position, and though he had not been in the lodge for twenty years the Masons claimed him, and when a funeral was to take place, secured him as one of the pall-bearers. Dressed up in the regalia, he took his place in the procession and performed the offices, and so long as the solemnity of the sepulture was impressing him he felt at ease, but when this was done and he had time to look at himself and think of his appearance in the eyes of the people, he grew ashamed, and arriving at the town from the cemetery, dodged into an alley and hastened by hidden ways to a place where he could divest himself of his fantastics. Such a man has something too good in him to be altogether tarnished and distorted by Freemasonry. We only wonder, when looking at processions of Knights and others of the societies, how they can so far forget what is due to real manhood as to appear in such belittleing costumes. To say nothing of the sin of Masonry, its childishness is excruciating.—United Presbyterian.

The Principles of Secretism Contradictory to Morals and Religion.

A late number of the Primitive Christian (German Baptist or Tunker) contains an argument in favor of the lodge by an Odd-Fellow, and the following reply by R. H. Miller, which is commended to the careful reading of every church member, as an excellent review of lodge principles compared with the Word of the Living God:

Your defense of Odd-fellowship being written with more than ordinary ability, and most of it with apparent candor, demands a reply, which we hope you will accept with the same kindness and desire for truth purposed in giving it.

The first point in your article worthy of note is your misunderstanding and consequent misrepresentation of our views. You assume the liberty of placing us in opposition to all secrecy, even that taught in the gospel. This sadly misrepresents our faith. We accept all that is founded on the divine law; all that is taught in the gospel, both public and private, secret and open: secret prayer, alms-giving, and "if thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." These, and all other secret and private duties taught in the word of God and in the laws of nature, we accept and teach as being right to keep. The issue, then, is not as to keeping those secrecies taught in the word of God, but as to those outside of divine authority, which you make and teach in your lodge. You have a routine of mystic rites, ceremonies, emblems, secret signs and passwords, which are not taught or found in the gospel. The issue is as to keeping them. We oppose them, and the secret order built upon them, for several reasons: first, they are entirely outside divine authority and teaching; second, they are used for the interest and benefit of a select and favored few, working by secrecies for each other's benefit, hence all the principles of self-interest are involved in it; third, it is schismatical. It would take a part of community, because they have money and prosperity, while it rejects, will not take, the poor, infirm, and helpless; showing clearly that it does not work for the general good of all, but separates a few from the mass of mankind, and works for their interest. We oppose your secret order, as it is our duty to oppose all who teach and practice secret working forms outside of the law of God.

1. In your first argument you say, "We are secret, as every family is or should be secret." This we believe is not quite true. God is the author of that sacred institution, the family. He is the author of all the obligations and duties public or private, secret or open, which rightfully belong to and enjoin upon every member of the family; and the family which holds and keeps no secret works or duties, only those taught and justified in the laws of God and nature, is not like you: it differs from you precisely in the same manner we do, and just to the same extent. If there be a family with a number of secret signs, rites and ceremonies not taught in the word of God, by which secrecies it works for its own interest and advantage, that family is like you, because you have both left the law of God in the secrets you have made for your own benefit.

You claim to be like the family "in regard to the personal affairs of any member which are submitted to us (you) for counsel, aid, admonition, rebuke or punishment." You need not boast of that as a peculiarity; for there is not a society of any kind, savage or civilized, that has not borrowed as much from God's primeval institution, the family. That, however, does not commend you or them as being right, unless your aid, counsel, admonition and punishment be given according to the law of God; but when your aid, counsel and admonition are given according to a secret code of rites, emblems and signs, all outside of the gospel, it is not one particle of evidence that you are right in the sight of God. We stand upon the gospel, and reject all your secret system that is outside of it as being wrong; because, as you say, it selects a favored few, and places them upon a secret code of preparation and training, to work by secrecy for their own welfare.

2. You say, "We are secret, as a merchant is secret, * * * in concealing the name of informants and their information." You may make your secret order after the pattern of a shrewd, financiering, secret-working merchant to fill his vaults by secret plans of self-defense and self-interest. Truly you do pattern after him. You take a part of community, those well to do in life, the rich, hale, popular, business man, that your funds may increase, and you may have power to help and aid each other; you train and teach them in secret signs to work for each other's benefit in trade, finance and almost every matter in which you have any interest, while you reject the poor and unfortunate, lest your funds should be exhausted. You are much more like the shrewd, secret-working merchant than you are like the God-given God-governed family.

3. You say, "We are secret, as Christ's followers are commanded to be, in bestowment of donations to distressed brethren and their families." In this you seem to boast of having some of the sacred divine truths of the gospel. It is true you have not got one good thing, not one good thought, word or action, to be observed in your lodge which the Christian has not already. He has the same good without joining your order. You have no good about your order, except what you have taken from the Bible, the law of the Christian; and you take the service and duties of the gospel and mix them up with your mystic rites and ceremonies, working with secret signs and rules for worldly, temporal, selfish purposes, like the secret working merchant. Why, then, should the Christian join your secret order, when he already has, in the church built of God, every good thing, every sacred, saving truth, which can be incorporated into this life, to bless and benefit the race of man? Why should not the Christian be satisfied with the God-given, perfect law, without adding your human, merchant-like compound to the unalloyed, perfect righteousnes of a gospel faith and practice? If you will show one good thing in your secret order, one duty we owe to God or man, which is not already enjoined upon the Christian by the law of God, then, and not till then, will you have even the shadow of an argument to prove that the Christian should join it. Your argument that we should accept your secret order because you have in it some gospel truth and service, is simply evidence against you, because no man has a right to take the service and truth of God and incorporate it with human inventions for temporal, selfish purposes. As well might the merchant or banker add the truth and service of God to his secret plans and signs for his own self-interest. If you should take the pure honey from the hive and mix it with gall, it would be mockery to ask the bee to come to your hive of bitterness to eat your compound. Such is your argument: you take the truth and service of God and mix it up with an institution of worldly, irreligious men, working secretly for worldly purposes, then you ask the Christian to join your order because there is some truth in it, when, by joining it, all he gets is the secret, selfish part of it, for the rest he had before.

4. You say, "We are secret, as every banker and business man is secret, in our modes of ascertaining whether a stranger applicant is a partner in those funds. * * * Each banker or merchant has secret signs." This is really your second argument over again, making the secrecy of your order after the model of the merchant, banker and business man, working secretly for self-interest and self-defense. If you had made it after the likeness of Christ and his apostles, it would be a thousand-fold better for mankind, and then you would have some right to ask the Christian to accept it; but as it is we cannot see how it can be any benefit to mankind generally, or right for the Christian, because we believe your institution to be as selfish as the merchant or banker, and more dangerous to public interest, because it monopolizes more power to confer favors and benefits upon its own members in finance and politics. What I have said of your third argument is proved true by your fourth one; that is, you have taken some of the gospel service and truth and mixed them in a secret institution made after the model of money-loving, secret-working worldly men, for self-interest.

You seem to stigmatize, with a good degree of contempt, those who would find out the secrecy of the merchant, banker, or lodge, and expose it to the public. But you must not blame me that I do not sympathize with you fully in this; for as your order is made after a model of men working secretly for self-interest; and as we oppose all your secrecy that is not required by the laws of God and nature, you cannot expect us to fully appreciate your horror at these secrecies being exposed. There are some things which the laws of God require to be kept secret, it would be really wrong for any one to expose them; but the secret signs and works of human invention for self-interest make a very different thing. The secret signs and works of the merchant, for his own interest, only serve to give him a chance to deceive other men, or to get advantages more than other men have, to neither of which has he any right. About the same is true of your secrecy: it works for your interest, by giving you advantages over other men in trade, finance, politics, or anything in which you choose to use it. These advantages which your lodge gives, you have no right to, either morally or religiously. They are given by a monopolizing, pledge-bound, secret-working power dangerous to the general good of the church and of mankind, because it gives advantages to a favored few that are not derived from the laws of God or nature. When you select out of community a prosperous, favored few, working secretly to give each other advantages over and above other men in finance, politics, religion, or anything else, as you have neither a moral or religious right to monopolize these extra advantages, you need but expect to find "some honest, high-minded people in all else" who cannot fully sympathize with you when the secrecy which gives these extra, unscriptural advantages is exposed.

You say a man has no more right to get your secrets and expose them than he has to "ask a wife to reveal the confidential conversation of her husband." You are just about right in that. If the confidential conversation of the husband be strictly in accordance with the laws of God and nature, and if he only confided secrets to which he had a legal, moral and divine right, then it would be wrong in any to seek, or in her to expose such secrets. But if the secret works confided to the wife by her husband were outside of the law of God—a secret plan to get some hidden advantage over other men, to get office or power that he might rule the church, the court, the state, or any other matter, secretly, for his own interest or for the interest of a political ring, then he has no moral or legal or divine right to ask his wife or any one else to keep such secrecy, no more than he has to ask them to keep any other wrong he does secretly.

You say, "Some honest, high-minded people condemn, without evidence, any so-called secret society." Is that not uncharitable? When all your secret signs, rites and ceremonies are entirely outside of the gospel, is that not some evidence to the Christian who takes the word of God as the man of his counsel? When Christ and his apostles give us no precept or example for your secret pledges, is it not some evidence to the Christian that the best, most holy and righteous men that ever lived on earth, after whom we should pattern our lives, have given an example without a single vestige of your secret warning by rites and signs outside the law of God?

[Concluded next week.]

THE NINTH NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Report of Board of Directors to the Corporate Meeting.

PRESENTED BY C. A. BLANCHARD, SECRETARY OF THE BOARD.

The Board of Directors have during the year held five meetings, viz., July 1st and Nov. 5th, 1875, and Feb. 6th, April 6th, and June 17th, 1876..

PUBLISHING HOUSE.

They have from time to time taken action in regard to the Publishing House Fund. Voting first to loan it through Baird and Bradley of this city, but since they declined to receive it, the money has been kept in the State Savings Institution. Inquiry being made as to the disposition of monies paid in should the attempt to secure the Carpenter Building fail, the Board voted that all monies subscribed and paid in to secure this building in case it should not be secured, should revert to the donors unless by them transferred to the General Fund. The General Agent secured for this fund one thousand dollars in Grant county, Indiana, on condition that a lecturer visit that place once a year, to hold meetings in prominent points, and collect the interest. This agreement was ratified. It was also agreed that so long as the labors of the General Agent were entirely occupied in securing the Publishing House, his expenses should be met by interest, and loans fron the Publishing House Fund. Ten thousand dollars for this fund having been secured April 1st, 1876, a meeting of the Board was held April 6th, at which Mr. Carpenter turned over to the Association the use of and profits arising from the property 221 West Madison Street. The deed to be given when $20,000 additional are secured.

PETITION TO CONGRESS.

A petition to Congress asking that body to revoke the charter of the Masonic Hall association, and other like things was circulated during the winter of 1874 and '75. It received over fourteen thousand signatures, and was during the last winter presented to Congress. The Corresponding Secretary forwarded it to Judge Zearing in the city of Washington, who at first asked Mr. B. G. Caulfield of Illinois to present it to the House. Mr. Caulfield agreed to do so but afterwards declined. Judge Zearing then asked Senater Augus Cameron of Wisconsin to present it to the Senate. Keeping his promise Senater Cameron had the petition presented, read, and referred, The Board of Directors at a subsequent meeting. passed a vote of thanks to Judge Zearing and Senator Cameron for their kindness in the matter.

AGENTS AND LECTURERS.

During the year Rev. J. P. Stoddard has filled the position of General Agent and Lecturer, laboring constantly and effectively, as will be seen from his report. Mr. Kiggins of Indiana, and Mr. Caldwell of Ohio, ceased to be connected with this body, with the last year. Mr. Hinman has continued his labors for the State of Illinois with excellent results. Mr. Barlow has been employed as lecturer for Michigan, and Mr. C. B. Remington as financial agent. The plan is working very successfully. The State Association of that State is directly responsible to these gentlemen. Other States have lecturers who devote a part of their time to the work. The real need of the lecture work is one active energetic man in every State, and money enough to pay him a fair salary. The majority of men and women in the Christian commonwealths that make up the United States of America are hostile to secretism in its form, spirit, methods and results. They only need instruction as to ways and means by which to make their sentiments effective. In order to this end there are two things that are most needed, viz., the Publishing House and one hundred thousand subscribers to the Cynosure. The Publishing House is already in possession of the Association, but the deed is not to be given until ten thousand dollars more are secured, in ntoes drawing interest, or money. This condition is not an unreasonably one. Mr. Carpenter is not only willing but anxious to give this building to the cause. He is a reformer from his youth and wants to give a home to this, the reform of the age. He does not however wish to throw his property away and he thinks that if he gives twenty thousand dollars others can afford to give thirty thousand, to secure a place where the whole truth can be uttered in the city of Chicago. This is no more than is fair, and every man who loves Christ and hates the devil ought to constitute himself a committee of one to see that the work of raising the ten thousand dollars is done and done soon.

THE CYNOSURE AND THE CENTENNIAL.

In regard to the Cynosure, little need be said. It is known and loved by every man whose heart is in this work. Its enemies are lodge-men and their allies, and they only. This paper has been published from the first year until the present at a loss. Not a great annual deficiency, but a constant loss. Were it not sustained by prayer, labor, and self-sacrifice, it would long since have gone to join the vast host of Masonic and Oddfellow publications, in the shades of oblviion. Is t not now easy to see that a division of forces will be a crime? It must be taken for granted. We ought to put our money and work into this paper until it has a circulation of at least 100,000. There are more than five times that number of men in this country at this hour who detest secretism who take no paper, religious or secular, which speaks against the lodge. This ought not so to be and must not so be; let us say, Shall not so be.

The distribution of tracts at the Centennial also merits more than a passing note. A stand has been secured in the main building where tract may be distributed. Ezra A. Cook & Co., have spent in securing, fitting up and filling this stand about one hundred and fifty dollars. They receive from it in return nothing. They offer the use of this stand to the Association on condition that some good man or men shall be sent to occupy it in the distribution of tracts and papers. It would seem to be very desirable that some one should be there in the performance of this work.

And now in concluding this report we have only to say, that the same hand that has been with us when we were weak and despised, is with us still. The cause for which we plead is that of God and humanity. Let our concern be to quit us like men, and be strong, and let the Lord do that which seemeth him good. He reigns in heaven. He does his will among the children of men. His cause is sure to triump.

NOTE.—In the Treasurer's report a few figures misrepresented facts. The report covered the year ending May 31, 1876; and in the assets the notes for the Publishing House Fund shod blue $10010.00.

FULL REPORT OF THE CONVENTION IN FARWELL HALL, CHICAGO, JUNE 20 TO 22.—ADDRESSES, RESOLUTIONS, REPORTS AND DISCUSSIONS.

Farwell Hall, Tuesday Evening, June 20th.

At eight o'clock the delegates and friends from the city had gathered to the number of about two hundred and fifty in Farwell Hall, and Rev. L. N. Stratton of Syracuse, N. Y., the newly elected president of the corporate Association, called to order and introduced Rev. Henry Cogswell of Wadsworth, Ohio, and Vice-president from that State for the National Convention, who presided in the absence of the President, Rev. D. R. Kerr, D. D., of Pittsburgh.

Pres. S. B. Allen of Westfield, Ill., responded to the invitation of the chairman, and led in prayer for the special presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit during the meetings of the Convention.

The assembly joined in singing "All Hail the power of Jesus' name," and then proceeded to arrange for future business by appointing the following committees:

ON ROLL:
J. G. Mattoon, West Unity, O.
H. A. Day, Ross, Mich.

ON BUSINESS:
Rev. J. L. Barlow, Fentonville, Mich.
Rev. J. K. Alwood, W. Unity, O.
John Dorcas, Shiloh, Iowa.

ON FINANCE:
C. B. Remington, Fentonville, Mich.
C. R. Hagerty, Chicago.
J. M. Wallace, Chicago.
T. Hodge, Chicago.

ON NOMINATIONS:
Rev. L. N. Stratton, Syracuse, N. Y.
Pres. H. H. George, D. D., Geneva, O.
Isaac Preston, Lockport, Ill.

REV. HENRY COGSWELL'S ADDRESS.

In the absence of the President of the Convention, Rev. Mr. Cogswell said it had been made his duty as presiding officer to make a brief address. From the comparatively small attendance this evening, he said, it might appear that our cause has not been advancing the past year in proportion to years previous. But a single item will show that this supposition can not be proved from small audiences altogether. In the Christian Cynosure within a few weeks, have been published the names of one hundred and thirty-two seceding Masons now living. We used to think that this system of Freemasonry had taken such deep hold on the ideas of the masses that nothing must be said about it. But Masonry is now uncovered; all its base arts are made known. We have sown far and wide and already we see the promise of a glorious harvest.

In respect to the lecturers in the reform, among whom the speaker claimed a place as a humble worker, we must not fail to give them due honor for their self-sacrificing efforts. The churches owe a great debt to Bro. Stoddard, the General Agent of the National Association. He is traveling up and down among them informing them of their danger from these secret orders, and their plain duty according to the Scriptures in regard to them. He is encouraging those church members who have come under the yoke of this bondage, and whose consciences have become awakened on the subject, to hope for the day when the yoke may be broken. Were it not for his efforts he who is now addressing you might yet have been under this oppressive yoke. I was conscience-smitten in regard to my connection with the lodge, yet seemed to be tied to the order; but I was led to see my way clearly to abandon the institution, and renounce its barbarous service and ungodly oaths. I seemed almost to take my life in my hand when I came out in the State convention at Mansfield, O., my home at the time, a year ago last February. It was a great effort, but Christ blessed me in making it, and gave me moral courage to face the enemy. Christians are fearful afraid of revilers, half-hearted for the truth; that is the reason Masonry is so strong. Did the Christian ministry but stand for Christ's truth the temples of the lodge would topple to the ground. The lecturers are going forth in the midst of obloquy and trial to do the work of the churches, work which they should not hold back from doing, work to which they are appointed of God, work laid out for them by the great Head of the church. These lecturers should be supported by the prayers and money of all the friends of truth.

This Association has started on a right foundation. It has begun in the name of Christ, and through faith in his name it will destroy these works of darkness. It holds that the victory will be given in answer to prayer; but we believe, too, that prayer will not avail without earnest work. Neither prayer nor labor can accomplish this alone. Our efforts are of no avail unless we have and practice both in the proper spirit. Thus we approach this reform, endued with this power. Unless we had labored, spoken, testified, spent money, prayer would not have availed to produce the evidence now before us of the progress of our cause. Thus Christ came to work out the will of God. Delegates should go home and work while they pray. Take he example of the Master and labor with all our powers; use all the gifts a good Providence has bestowed upon us. Labor with mind, body, heart and pocket and if these efforts are sanctified by prayer we shall not wait long for the victory of truth.

At the close of the address Past Master Ronayne, who wearing his regalia was seated with others on the platform, announced that the first degree in Blue Lodge Masonry would be worked on the stage on the following evening. After singing "Hold the Fort" by the audience, Pres. H. H. George of Geneva College, Ohio, was introduced and proceeded to address the convention on the character of Freemasonry as a false religion. His address, which will be published hereafter in this report, was most able and convincing and was received with marked attention by the audience.

At the close of the address the Business Committee reported the following which was adopted as the order for the next day:

A. M., 8:30 o'clock, prayer meeting.
9, business.
9 to 10:30, reports from State Lecturers.
10:30, reports of General Agent and Treasurer.
P. M., 2 o'clock, business.
3, addressbyRev. L. N. Stratton.
Evening, 8 o'clock, initiation in the first degree by Past Master Ronayne.

After notices from the entertainment committee and the benediction, the convention adjourned.

Wednesday.

MORNING.

At 8:30 o'clock delegates assembled in Farwell Hall for a prayer meeting. Rev. E. W. Bruce of Michigan presided. The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, followed by brethren Day, Barlow and others. It had continued about half an hour when a messenger came into the hall bearing the sad intelligence to Pres. Blanchard that his daughter, the wife of Bro. Stoddard, had been killed about an hour before by being struck by the engine, when about to take the train at Mather station, near Wheaton. The latter had just time to run and reach an out-going train. The news cast a deep gloom over the meeting, and prayers were offered that Divine consolation might be given to the bereaved husband, father and family, and sympathy and sorrow were expressed on all sides.

Soon after nine o'clock Vice President Cogswell called the convention to order to proceed with business. The Secretary, H. L. Kellogg, being absent at the scene of the distressing accident at Wheaton, Rev. E. W. Bruce was elected Secretary pro tem.

Pres. Blanchard made a brief statement of the facts of the calamity, that had fallen so suddenly and heavily upon himself and family, so far as they were reported; and Rev. J. L. Barlow led in prayer.

The reports of State Agent's being first in order, Rev. H. H. Hinman was called on for a statement of his work in Illinois during the year which he prefaced with a few remarks of condolence on account of the sad and heavy news that had just come in. In regard to his work he had lectured one hundred and seven times since the last Anniversary, in Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, but principally in Illinois. He had met with encouragment and sympathy often and in many places, but had also encountered many obstacles. There is much opposition but the work is steadily gaining upon it; and the Lord is opening the way for its final success.

Rev. J. L. Barlow, State Lecturer from Michigan gave a very favorable report of the work in his State, where he had commenced lecturing last December. He related an interesting fact in connection with his labors in Goodrichville, Mich., where at the time was a prosperous lodge; but now there is none. He had lectured one hundred and fifty times, and nearly always before good audiences. The tide of public sentiment in the State is setting towards our reform. A powerful sympathy is being created for it. Although not so sanguine as some for the speedy destruction of the lodges, yet the people are surely turning from them. One great point in our efforts is to save young men from the terrible snare. People had hardly any idea of the numbers of Masons all through the State who were anxious to be rid of the bondage of Freemasonry; yet from fear of some terrible consequences they are held back from an open renunciation of the fearful toils. We should thank God for the precious fruits borne to the truth already. It is true that they had yet to suffer some persecution, but eggs had been the severest trial in this direction he had been called to bear. The time when Masons might murder their enemies he hoped had forever passed away. He did not call them murderers or house-burners. We must depend for our success, under God, on persistent labor, such as has been put forth and must be continued. It was a startling fact in his experience that the strongest opposition to his work had been from the ministers of the Gospel. They seem to be most strenuously opposed to the work of the Association, yet have the fewest arguments to maintain their opposition. Our State society is growing stronger and stronger and we find that work and prayer is the secret of our success. He related some personal encounters with champions of the lodge which showed the illogical character of Masonic arguments and how they were abashed before the truth.

The convention at the close of Elder Barlow's remarks joined in singing "Rock of Ages," and Rev. Mr. Cogswell in a few words related some of his experience as a lecturer corroborative of what had been said.

In the absence of Mr. Stoddard, his report as General Agent and Lecturer for the year was read by Mr. C. L. Blanchard and was ordered to be printed in the Cynosure. The report is a statement at length of an encouraging year's work and will duly appear. The report of the Treasurer was postponed on account of Mr. Kellogg's absence. Pres. Blanchard in announcing the necessity of the postponement spoke of the reason, and in a few remarks dwelt on the estimable Christian character of Mrs. Stoddard, and her earnest efforts for the cause of the National Christian Association in which she had made many and great personal sacrifices. She plead for the purity of the church and against the admission of adhering Freemasons to the communion table.

Mrs. H. H. Hinman also spoke briefly of the virtues of Mrs. Stoddard and her useful Christian life.

The Committee on Nominations here made a partial report through Rev. L. N. Stratton, which was adopted as follows:

President; Rev. H. H. George, D. D., Geneva College Ohio.
First Vice-president; Rev. J. L. Barlow, Fentonville Mich.
Secretary; Rev W. H. French, D. D., Cincinnati, O
Afterwards were added—
Secretary, H. L. Kellogg, Chicago.
General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, Chicago.
Vice-presidents:
Prof. Milton Wright for Ohio
Rev. A. Hard for New York.
J. A. Conant, Esq., for Connecticut.
Rev. Halleck Floyd for Indiana.
Rev. A. M. Black, D. D., for Kentucky.
Rev. Flavel Bascom, D D. for Illinois.
Gen. J. W. Phelps for Vermont.
Robert Weir for New Hampshire.
Hon. Robert Feemster for Mississippi.
G. W. Needles for Missouri.
Rev. H. T. Besse for Kansas.
M. R. Britton for Wisconsin.
S. Hillman for Minnesota.
Pres. E. B. Kephart for Iowa.
L. G. Hurd for Nebraska.
J. W. Stetson for California.
Caleb Gray for Oregon.
Rev. P. B. Chamberlain for Washington Ter.
Rev. A. L. Post for Pennsylvania.
Rev. O. Wilbur for New Jersey.

Where shall the next Anniversary be held? was the next question acted on. The opinion of the convention was unanimous that Dayton, Ohio, was the best place in every respect and it was determined to meet there at a time to be fixed by the Board of Directors.

A Committee on Correspondence consisting of Rev. J. L. Barlow, Rev. H. Cogswell and Philo Carpenter was appointed.

It was decided to adjourn for the afternoon of the next day to give way for a mass meeting of the American Party.

No business being presented it was voted to hear five minute speeches from the delegates. Among those who improved this opportunity Pres. Blanchard remarked of the progress of the reform as it had fallen under his observation. It was in nearly every respect hopeful and encouraging to deeper faith and more earnest effort. Rev. Halleck Floyd of Indiana gave a brief report of the efforts of the United Brethren in Christ in Indiana to promote the cause, and took a very hopeful view of the outlook there.

Hon. J. B. Walker, the candidate of the American Party for the Presidency of the United States, was announced as being present in the audience and on invitation was conducted to the rostrum. and was received with applause, which he gracefully acknowledged but made no remarks.

Rev. W. H. French, D. D., was then introduced for an address on "Secret Societies and the Public Conscience," which will be printed in full. At its close it was voted to request copies of the addresses of the last evening with Dr. French's for publication.

The Committee on Correspondence reported through Rev. J. L. Barlow a lenghty communication, forwarded by Mr. J. A. Conant of Connecticut and prepared by Gen. J. W. Phelps of Vermont. It is an able appeal to the Christian churches and was requested for publication. It appears in another column.

After several announcements the convention adjourned until 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

AFTERNOON.

On the assembling of the convention in the afternoon the President elect Dr. H. H. George took the chair.

The following resolution presented by Rev. Henry Cogswell was adopted:

Resolved, That we request the press of this city to publish the constitution and by-laws of the National Christian Association and the list of corporate members of the same.

The Finance Committee reported by C. B. Remington, that $300 would be required to defray the expenses of the convention and ordered the taking of a collection in the evening.

The remainder of the afternoon was occupied with able addresses by Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, Syracuse, N. Y.; Linus Chittenden, Esq., of Crystal Lake, Ill.; Rev. J. M. Snyder of Wheaton, Ill.; C. T. Webb of Springfield, Ill.; and Gray of Oregon. These addresses will be reported hereafter.

Mr. Ronayne spoke briefly on the manipulations of Freemasonry in Chicago. He stated that while Dewit C. Cregier was receiving a salary of $3,000 from the city, he was paid a salary of $1,-500 by the lodges for services as Grand Master of Illinois. He spoke of the baneful effects of the thirty-six lodges with 4,000 members in the city, and announced that he had fully arranged for the exposition of the first degree in the evening.

The Chairman announced the order for the next day and the meeting was adjourned after the benediction by Rev. Dr. French.

EVENING.

[FROM THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

Farwell Hall contained a large audience, mainly men, last evening, gathered for the purpose of witnessing an expose of the work of conferring the first degree of Freemasonry by Edmond Ronayne, formely of Keystone Lodge, of this city, the performance being given in connection with the National Christian Association.

Preparatory to commencing the performance, Mr. Ronayne and the colored janitor arranged the stage. The chairs were taken off, and a small altar placed in the center, with a pedestal containing three tapers pointing east, north, and south, and a Bible and a gavel upon it, and a footstool close to it. To the left of the stage and in front of it was placed a small table containg Masonic books, and beside it a chair upon which there was a black-silk stovepipe hat.

Before commencing, a hymn—"Dare to be Daniel," etc.—was sung, and the Rev. Mr. Hinman delivered a prayer having special reference to the expose. A collection was also taken up to defray the expenses of the hall. The Rev. Mr. Barlow announced that at 10 o'clock this morning the second degree would be worked, and in the evening the third.

The cast of characters was as follows: Worshipful Master, Henry Cogswell; Senior Warden, M. R. Britten; W. A. Bartlett, Junior Warden; H. A. Day, Treasurer; Secretary, John M. Hodge; Junior Deacon, E. W. Bruce; Junior Deacon, C. T. Webb; Tyler, H. H. Hinman. The gentlemen were posted in positions allotted to similar officers in a lodge.

Ronayne, wearing a Past Master's apron and collar presented by Keystone Lodge, opened the proceedings with some introductory remarks. He said speculative Masonry was established in a grog-shop in London in June, 1717, and was based upon operative Masonry. He had been a member of Keystone Lodge, He asked the audience to constitute themselves a jury to try speculative Freemasonry, and he would act as prosecuting attorney. He would suppose that Freemasonry had been indicted on several counts, and one of those counts was that Masonry was a falsehood from beginning to end, and one of the most monstrous on the face of the earth. Lodges were anciently dedicated to King Solomon because he was the first Most Excellent Grand Master. Here was the assertion that Solomon and John the Evangelist, and John the Baptist, were the most ancient Masons. There was no such thing as the Golden Fleece, and the best Masonic writers could not substantiate the assertion. The speaker then read the prayer repeated at the State Grand Lodge meeting, and pronounced it a lie. He presented the Grand Lodge report for 1874, compiled by Joseph Robbins, and the future Grand Master of Illinois, and was about to read from it, when he digressed, and said that, if he did not prove the falsity of Freemasonry, he hoped the audience would pronounce him the biggest fraud in Chicago, when he was interrupted by cries of "You are!" "You are!" Turning to the direction whence the voices came, he said he recognized them, and challenged them to come forward and controvert him. He again referred to the printed report to prove from its pages that Masonry did not exist in Solomon's time. He also gave a sketch of the origin of the degrees. When he was a little boy he heard nothing but Masonry, and he grew up in awe of it, but when they made him take off his pantaloons, put the rope around his neck and dragged him around the room, he did not think there was much divinity in Freemasonry. He inveighed strongly against the antiquity of Masonry. He said that Rob Morris had carried in his hat a lodge of Free-Masons when he went into Jerusalem. The 'Freemason's Monitor" and its author, Webb, were ridiculed. This warfare was not against Freemasons, but against the principles of the craft. He was about to read the oath of Washington taken in allegiance to George III., when he was interrupted by a man in the back part of the hall, who came forward and insisted upon being heard. Considerable confusion ensued, and Ronayne insisted on the interrupter taking his seat, saying to the audience that he was no Mason; that Masons were gentlemen, and would not act like that. The individual subsided and went back to his seat. Ronayne then asked if Washington had perjured himself when he rebelled against tne King, and proceeded to give a description of the work of conferring the first degree, illustrating his explanations by taking his place in the position represented by the supposed officers of the lodge. He repeated all the questions and made all the signs and answers necessary to effect his purpose, interspersing the expose with assertions regarding the falsity of many of the expressions, and frequently ridiculing them as silly. He called upon the audience to imagine their business men, their Doctors of Law, and their Doctors of Divinity going up into a garret and performing such tomfoolery.

Before bringing in from the ante-room the candidate of Masonry, he denounced the pretended benevolence of the Masonic body, and cited instances in proof of his assertions.

After going through the formula of questioning the candidate. Ronayne called upon the Junior Warden to bring him in, and a young man appeared with a mask on, a "cabletow" about his neck, and dressed in shirt and drawers, the left leg of the latter garment being rolled up to the knee. The left foot was bare, and the right was covered with a slipper. Ronayne again challenged any Mason to come forward and defend the ancient rnstutition. The candidate, who, for his purposes, the lecturer represented as "the Rev. Dr. James Hunt," was then led about from one "officer" to another, and repeated the questions and answers. He asserted that every Mason present who witnessed the ceremony of making a clandestine Mason was violating his obligation, and if he was Master of a lodge he would go about the hall and take the name of every one of them and report them to the lodge for dismisial. He said it was impossible for Masons to keep their obligations. The candidate was next led to the altar, where he knelt upon the footstool and placed his left hand under the Bible and his right on its open pages, and took the obligation. Ronayne again asserted that Masonry was a lie from beginning to end and that no one in a lodge had any more authority to administer the oath than he had, and the obligation just taken was just as binding. He said Masonry was bad, but Odd-Fellowship was the biggest humbug of the two. He characterized Good Templars' lodges as great sparking institutions, and made similar references to other orders, which were offshoots of Masonry. The white investiture was given the candidate and he was declared a Mason.

Address to the Christian Churches of the United States.

MEN AND BRETHREN:—In this first centennial year of our national existence, we feel that we have an important matter to bring to your attention. We believe that it is especially incumbent on every Christian person, to aid in taking some active measures to prevent the church of Christ from relapsing into pagan worship.

The religious worship of secret and mystic arts, observed in ancient times, before the coming of our Savior, and particularly in Greece, has been revived in our later days under a new form, and has received a new impetus and expansion which ought to fill witn alarm and concern all who a. devoutly, attached to the Christian religion. This modern form of pagan worship had its origin in a London drinking shop, in 1717, and is known under the generic name of FREEMASONRY.

If the importance of this new phase of paganism were to be estimated by the lowness of its origin, we should have nothing to say, believing that the enlightened opinion of the age, in the ordinary course of action, would prove sufficient to cope with its evils; but unfortunately, aspiring from its humble birth-place, and in a most crafty and heartless mockery of the Christian religion, it has grown into such enormous proportions, that it is now over-shadowing with a deadly influence both the church and the state. Though taking its rise in a grog-shop, of which it seems in every way a worthy emanation, it not only intimidates the press, and exercises a controlling power in our elections, but it has come at length to assume all the pomp and pretension of a sanctimonious religion, erecting vast and costly temples in which the name of Christ is but an alien sound; dedicates its altars, has its Christless form of prayer, its liturgy, its hymnal, its baptism, its funeral services commending souls to a future life not opened up by Christ; maintains its priesthood of the most lofty pretensions, which may be composed of men who detest Christ as an imposter, gives alms in the name of Masonry, and not of Christ, and yet, nevertheless, intrudes its members upon the holy communion of the Christian church, which it ambitiously rivals, claiming to be better even, than the church itself. It puts the spirit of secret collusion, which may animate a band of pirates, on a level with the communion of saints.

This new form of paganism, when examined through its own books, and the open demonstrations of its members, as well as by the testimony of those of its victims who have turned state's evidence, is a system of fraud and imposition from beginning to end; and yet so cunningly devised as to mislead the unwary and unsuspecting, and especially those who have been reared in a simple, honest regard for religion divested of priestcraft and cunning, as have been in former years the people of the United States. It is a great and fatal error to allow this fraud and imposition to hold any place in the Christian church, since the Christian religion is the religion of Truth, and not of sublety, fraud, and imposition. We are, as Christians, commanded not to be yoked together with men who teach guileful arts, fraud and imposition; but to come out from among them and be separate. We must not practice the arts of secret mystification, nor even whisper in the ear that which may not be published on the house-top. In secret our Saviour said nothing.

State Nominating Convention in Ind.

The delegates who recently met in State Convention at Muncie, Delaware Co., Ind., to nominate an anti-secret State ticket and Presidential electors, after due deliberation decided to postpone action until Tuesday, August 1st, 1876.

And the friends of the cause are hereby notified that said convention will meet at Fairmount, Grant Co., Ind., as above stated. Delegates will be entertained while at the convention. Dr. Cook of Albion, Ind., has promised to be present and address the convention. Other good speakers are expected and will no doubt be there. Prof. Thomas Bell and daughter of Alexandria, Ind., have promised to be present and supply the convention with vocal and instrumental music.

Friends in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, requiring Past Master Ronayne's services in the lecture work will please communicate at once with this office, so as to secure his exposures in August and September. Friends in Illinois can be visited in July by writing as soon as possible to

E. Ronayne, Cynosure Office.

—Gen. Phelps of Brattleboro, Vt., has sent for publication the interesting proceedings of the Windham Co., Vt., Anti-masonic Society, which on account of the National Convention proceedings are held over for a week. Freemasonry has lost in numbers in Vermont during the past year. No auxiliary has a better right to be heard than that which Gen. Phelps represents.

—While the Chicago papers reported the Convention fairly, the expositions by Mr. Ronayne, and especially his powerful impeachment of lodge management was hardly mentioned. No doubt the reporters did their duty, but the managing editors, fearful or obedient tracklers, suppressed their report.

—Past Master Ronayne returned on last Thursday morning from Plano, Ill., where he publicly worked the three degrees of the "Ancient Craft," to large and appreciative audiences, occupying one night for each degree. In the early part of the month he rendered similar services to the good people of Washburn and Saybrook. An account of the Saybrook meetings by Bro. Knipple will be found elsewhere.

The War in Saybrook, Ill.

Dear Cynosure:—I wish you to say to your many readers that the reform work has started off with a will, in the village of Saybrook, Ill. On the evenings of the 6th and 7th, inst., Rev. H. H. Hinman delivered lectures in the interest of our cause, with good effect. The ire of the dark kingdoms of our town was at once raised to boiling heat. And they continued to boil until a few days of cold and wet weather cooled the atmosphere, and now the din of battle is dying away on the distant breeze. Not content with the first attack we had the champion, E. Ronayne, to visit our place and deliver lectures, and work the first three degrees of Masonry on the 14th, 15th and 16th inst., which he did so clearly and conclusively as to leave no room for honest doubt of his perfect knowledge of Masonry.

While some of the Masons, and we would suppose them to be of the ignorant or the dishonest class, declare him to be a consummate liar, others say, "It is just as they served me when I went in." The non-Masons, except those who bray for the Masons, say that had Mr. Ronayne come without a word of testimony as to his former connection with the lodge, the manner in which he treated the subject was conclusive evidence that he had been a Mason and was master of his business. Several Masons have testified to the correctness of the exposures; some have said, "I have attended lodge for the last time," and several young men who had contemplated joining the Masons, say now: "I want no Masonry in mine," that is, "I want none of the vile thing." The people in general are convinced of the wickedness of the institution.

The Masons say we have strengthened their cause, and that they have already had two applications for admission to the lodge. So mote it be. But we are fully persuaded in our own mind, that any man, who, after seeing Freemasonry so clearly and conclusively demonstrated to be a glaring falsehood and a hum-bug from first to last, as was done here by Mr. Ronayne, will seek admission to the lodge, is of little benefit or credit to either Masonry or civil society, and the more they get of that class the worse it will be for the order.

The Mason's themselves gave the strongest evidence of the truth of Mr. Ronayne's charges against the system, and the correctness of the exposures by their repeated attempts to interrupt him in his work. The first evening they were quite orderly; the second evening they became very boisterous; and the third evening they came prepared for the best, and most honorable defence that is was possible for the craft to make, which was a full supply of eggs, which I suppose they intended to apply externally, to the Worshipful Master and his subordinate. But alas, as all bad men are cowards, so were these Masonic bandits, who left the field in dismay, considering it better economy to cook and and eat their eggs, than to squander them to their own shame. We anticipated at no distant period the organization of an association in this township, auxiliary to the State and National Associations.

Our Centennial Letter.

A gigantic system of robbery—A pitiable case of lodge slavery—Subscriptions and Contributions—Visits of Friends—Throat Cutting a Duty of Masons—Street Car Incidents.

June 21.—I may well say that these secret orders are a covertly; systematized robbery of those outside. The people feel it so, and begin to cry out inquiringly for help. They see it in legislation, in the administration of law, in litigation, in commerce, in church and in the social circle; and are alarmed and ask, "What are we coming to?" as well they may. These murmurings seem to be everywhere. The same cry comes up from every quarter of our country; from South and North and from East and West, and also from foreign countries, and from the islands of the great oceans. It is the voice of the oppressed, and God hears it, and has come down to deliever them. These self-styled benevolent orders are no less than despots in disguise. I fearlessly affirm that I can demonstrate this statement to the satisfaction of any unprejudiced mind.

I will state a case that occurred yesterday right in point, where a man acting in the spirit of Masonry held in surveillance one of its members struggling for freedom from its clutches. I was talking with the latter while the former watched us with Masonic interest and earnestness. He would step from one place to another around about us to get a better chance to eaves-drop, and at times come right to us and listen. The one with whom I was conversing, supposing he was overheard saying something unfavorable to Masonry, changed his whole aspect and mind, bearing and language, and said, "I have made promises to Masons and I would sooner have my head cut off than go back on my word." Yet after the other left he gave me to understand again that he did not favor the institution. If it holds such an iron hand over its own members, what will it do with others? After the struggling one left the watcher went way around some back cases and wound around through the narrow alleys and found my man and followed him up and talked with him not 200 feet from me, a half hour or more I think. I occasionally stepped out where I could see them. Their conversation seemed very earnest as indicated by the gesticulations.

It is wonderful to see how many almost every day will inform me that they abhor and groan under their slavish bondage. They do not say this in these words, but plainly indicate it.

Great good I think could be done by distributing tracts on the cars and steam-boats. If I had means to travel I think I could distribute as many or more in that way than here.

June 23.—I have taken a subscription for the Christian Cynosure (the first) and the money for it, $2.20.

I think I have reported to you the names of two persons who gave each a dollar for the tract cause. And to-day Mr. Wm. Banks of Phœnixville, Pa., gave me a dollar to use in any way I chose for the Anti-masonic cause. I told him I would put it in the tract fund, to which he readily assented and so I put it down in my book.

A friend, Jacob Hanna, from Virginia, called to see me in response to the request in the Cynosure. He is a hearty worker, a brother of Rev. John H. Hanna, who has written for the Cynosure. Bro. Whipple and wife, and also friends from Wheaton, called also to-day, which cheered me much. It occurred just after a young upstart of a Mason had given me a menacing caution with emphasis, and I as emphatically assured him I did not stand in fear, and told him to try it if he liked. I intend Masons shall understand that I submit to no despotic surveillthey can impose, and that they have no privileges or rights above other people, because of their relations to that order.

A Mason told me to-day that part of the oath of the third degree that binds to keep a Master Mason's secrets, murder and treason excepted, was all right and not contrary to Christianity nor Christ's teaching, and that a man who will not keep his oath with Masons ought to have his throat cut. So you can see what real Masons mean by these oaths. All the difference between him and many others is that he is fool-hardy enough to talk right out what others would rather he and his like would say, than to say it themselves.

June 25.—I am trying to enlighten some of the "jacks" who are equally as blind as those sworn to secrecy. A man and his wife of the order just named, "pitched on to me rough-shod," as the saying is, as I was distributing tracts on the cars, when coming home from the Centennial this evening. The woman was a little upstart from Boston or New York, I have forgotten which, and said to me she knew Masonry was a good thing for her father was a Mason and the best man in the world or one of the best. I told her my father was of that class, and renounced Masonry, and the Masons, according to a previous threat, shot at him. And she very angrily told me I ought to be ashamed of myself peddling such stuff against so good an institution. I suppose her husband, who sat by her side, cautioned her by a nudge, for she subsided and looked herself as she said I ought to. Perhaps it was her reflection upon how she "spoke in meeting." I take these matters very coolly and perhaps that has a cooling influence. Well, a man right behind the two spoken of, began very imperiously to brow-beat, and held up a tract he had received and tore it in pieces before my eyes; the first and only one treated with any such disrespect. I said to him, "You can tear that, but you cannot tear the truth." I am getting more into this work of giving out tracts outside, in the depot and in the cars, and I find that generally the people are eager to get them.

I most devoutly wish the people generally who are opposed to sworn secrecy understood this matter and would lay aside their timidity and

"If thou hast whispered, whisper no longer;
But speak like the thunder, louder and stronger."

It needs but courage, soft words and hard arguments, with God's blessing, to win. I say to Masons, "God is in this work and they had better stand from under; that we have constitutionally guaranteed rights that overtop all their secret societies." A. D. FREEMAN.

Sabbath Desecration.

On Sunday, June 11th, was displayed a scene of secret order chivalry in the Presbyterian church of Paris, Ill., at the funeral ceremonies of a deceased Odd-fellow.

At 10:30 the Paris Brass Band commenced to play at the Hall, where the remains had been taken from the residence, and the procession marched from the Hall to the church. The fraternity marched in about 120 in number, some in full uniform including swords. After the services were ended the corpse was taken to the cemetery, and after the burial the fraternity marched from the grave to the Hall accompanied all the time by the band music.

It was just five hours from the time the band commenced to play until all the ceremonies were brought to an end. All this music and ostentation was on the Sabbath, and connected with it all were church members. At the close of the whole affair I heard a lady remark to another: "Don't you think it was solemn to see them in their uniform around their dead brother, in the church? I think they looked so nice." The lady so much interested and compassionately moved was a Good Templar of high degree, a church member of the Presbyterian denomination and a great advocate of all secret orders.

In looking over the congregation you could discern between those that were members of a secret order of some classification and those who were simply Christians. The former wore a look that bespoke their inward emotions in sympathy with the whole proceedings; the latter class wore a dissatisfied look mingled with sorrow and acquiescence. One old gentleman, a true Christian, said to me, "I don't like this?" "What don't you like?" I inquired. He answered, "This thing of reserving seats for so many of the secret order fraternity when others need the seats." Meanwhile the tears bathed his eyes as they did many other eyes of those opposed to the sacrilegious performance. "Well," said I, to the old gentleman, "you know how this is; they are determined to rule and we are powerless. We can't prevent it. If we object to it or complain they will readily ask us what we are going to do about it, and give us a shower of misrepresentation in a short time."

How long must these things be? Must our church be prostituted to these secret orders? In other words, schools of iniquity, that are painted over with the white color of innocency and sail under the plausible streamer of charity, when in reality they are a rotten mass of selfish avidity in pursuit of the balance of power to enrich themselves and impoverish others, and then call themselves a necessity to true Christianity. W. J. HOLT.

OUR MAIL.

R. H. Tudor, Ebensburg, Pa., orders political tracts and writes:

"I am giving my paper to my neighbors after reading it. Our county is flooded with Freemasonry and I would like to have somebody come here to lecture on the subject. If there will be an electoral ticket in Pennsylvania I want to get hold of it. I intend to cast my vote for Walker, and may get more to do likewise."

P. W. Sheibly, Collins, Ill., writes:

"I heard the State Agent last night and he gave the Masons Hail Columbia."

Geo. H. Williams, Putnam, Conn., writes:

"All that is needed is to spread the light—urge the truth upon the attention of men."

Burges Smith, Clifford, Pa., sends his renewal and writes:

"I have been almost lost without the Cynosure. It seems to me that part of the house has been missing ever since the paper stopped."

A. D. Low, Atlantic, Cass Co., Ia., writes:

"Do request the brethren who write for the Cynosure, especially those in Iowa, to give the names of their respective counties as well as their post offices, so that we may know as nearly as possible where they hail from."

We will endeavor after this to publish the county with the rest of the address as often as possible.

W. Richie, Oakland City, Gibson Co., Ind., writes:

"Please to state in the columns of the Cynosure whether the nominees for the Presidency, Hays and Wheeler, are secret society men of any order. I know it will interest your readers."

A reporter of the Chicago Tribune affirms that they are both high Masons.

L. D. Brown, Montmorency, Tippecanoe, Ind., writes:

"Dear friends of God's truth: It gives me courage in this good cause to send you one more subscriber to the Cynosure. I do all I can for the cause in moderation to all men, for just here we who know and see the truth are apt to go astray, for 'oppression maketh a wise man mad.,' I do not believe we shall ever see the downfall of the power of Freemasonry till God arise to vindicate his truth and show to man his folly. O for the glad day when this evil spirit shall be cast out from our nation and our world, for he will rule till God cast him out."

L. A. Wickey, Franklintown, York Co., Pa., writes:

"We are trying to get up an anti-secrecy convention in this part of the State. We have lost a strong and fearless friend in the death of Bishop Edwards. May his mantle fall on many others. I tried last week to find Bro. Freeman's anti-secret book-stand on the Centennial grounds, but failed. Would it not be well to have a standing notice in the Cynosure stating where he may be found. I would have taken nearly a dozen persons to the place if I could have found it. May the Lord bless him in his work of faith and love."

Lesson for July 16.—Solomon's Temple.

SCRIPTURE.—2 Chron. iii. 1-17. Commit 1-6; Primary verse, 1.

1 Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, where the Lord appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

2 And he began to build in the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

3 Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits after the first measure was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

4 And the porch was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was a hundred and twenty: and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

5 And the greater house he ceiled with fir tree, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm trees and chains.

6 And he garnished the house with precious stones for beauty: and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof, and the doors thereof, with gold, and graved cherubims one the walls.

8 And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

10 And in the most holy house he made two cherubims of image work, and overlaid them with gold.

11 And the wings of the cherubims were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was five cubits also, joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubim spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet and their faces were inward.

14 And he made the vail of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and wrought cherubims thereon.

15 Also he made before the house two pillars of thirty and five cubits high, and the chapiter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.

16 And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them upon the heads of the pillars; and made a hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.

17 And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right hand Jachin, and the name of that on the left Boaz.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Behold, the heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded."—K. viii. 27.

TOPIC.—An House for God.

—Every place of worship is suggestive of two things: 1. The sacrifice that has been made for us; 2. That it is God's threshing-floor, where he separates his wheat from the chaff. Each one is a call to remember God's love, and the coming judgment. Luke 19: 10; John 3: 16; Rom. 5: 8; 1 John 4: 9, 10: Mal. 4: 1; Matt. 3: 11, 12; 13: 30, 40; 2 Thess. 1: 8.

—If we can not build the temple, let us with humility and alacrity prepare the material for its building, if God will permit us to do that. Let us take any place that God assigns us—content to be anything or nothing, just as he wills. He makes use only of those who are thus willing to be used. Ps. 138: 6; Matt. 7: 24, 25; Luke 1: 52; Rom. 8: 9; 1 Cor. 1: 26–29; Eph. 2: 22; Jas. 1: 9, 10; 4: 6, 10; 1 Pet. 5: 6; 1 John 2: 17.

—The promise of the abiding presence of God, which he made to Solomon, he also makes to us. If we but walk in his statutes, execute his judgments, and obey all of his commandments, his Spirit will be with us constantly instead of periodically. He does not forsake us—it is we that forsake Him. Gen. 28: 15; Deut. 31: 6, 8; 1 Sam. 12: 22; Josh. 1: 5; Judg. 10: 13; Ps. 37: 25; Jer. 2: 13; Heb 13: 5; Rev. 21: 3.—The National Sunday School Teacher.

Farm and Garden.

RAISING TOMATOES:—Burr tells us that the French mode of raising tomatoes is as follows: As soon as a cluster of flowers is visible, they top the stem down to the cluster, so that the flowers terminate the stem. The effect is that the sap is immediately impelled into the two buds next below the cluster, which soon push strongly and produce another cluster of flowers each. When these are visible, the branch to which they belong is also topped down to the level: and this is done five times successively. By this means the plants become stout dwarf bushes, not above eighteen inches high. In order to prevent their falling over, sticks or strings are stretched horizontally along the rows, so as to keep the plants erect. In addition to this, all laterals that have no flowers, and after the fifth topping, all laterals whatever, are nipped off. In this way the ripe sap is directed into the fruit, which acquires a beauty, size and excellence unattainable by other means.—Boston Globe.

EARLY TOMATOES:—To get early tomatoes, says a writer on the subject, you must, as soon as your tomato plant has made four leaves, pinch the top bud from the stem, then take up the plant, pinch off two inches from the top root and transplant it in a common box frame, where the soil is rich and loamy. The box will keep off the wind, and plants sown and grown there eighteen inches apart, will produce fruit two weeks sooner than the same planted in the open ground. A mat or a few boards, spread over the frame at night, will keep them from frost, and is far easier and quicker than going over a field nightly, and setting boxes over each hill. As soon as the plants have set fruit on two blossoms of each branch, and the top has grown two to four leaves, the pinching off the ends of each branch and top should be again put in practice.

SALTPETER is the cure for the currant worm. Several gardens were saved last Summer, and all the worms therein destroyed, by the following mixture: To a barrel of soft water add a pailful of soft soap, and three-quarters of a pound of saltpeter, dissolved. If a garden syringe is not handy, throw the liquid on with a broom. If the first dose is not enough add a little saltpeter and try again.

A DISCOVERY ABOUT CORN.—The Western Rural tells of a man who plants, two or three weeks after the crop is planted, a new hill of corn every fifteenth row, each way. And this is the reason: If the weather becomes dry after the filling time, the silk and tassels both become dry and dead. In this condition, if it should become seasonable, the silk revives and renews its growth; but the tassels do not recover. Then, for want of pollen, the new silk is unable to fill the office for which it is designed. The pollen from the replanted corn is then ready to supply silk, and the filling is completed. He says nearly all the abortive ears, so common in all corn crops, are caused by the want of pollen; and he has known ears to double their size in this filling.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1876.

A CARD.

CHICAGO, July 3rd, 1876.

To the numerous friends throughout the country who have written words of sympathy and encouragement in view of the sudden and yet mysterious event which has taken my companion to heaven and left her husband and little ones to contend a little longer for the "precious faith," and to those who have written me on business during the past few days,—all beloved in Christ, let me say I have been partially unfitted to attend to correspondence and much occupied with thoughts and labors that could not be delayed. My little ones are now arranged for and my personal matters so adjusted as to permit me to resume my duties in the work of the National Christian Association. I shall give my best energies to this work, and while sensible that I have lost a wise counselor and efficient helpmeet, I shall still hope by the blessing of God in answer to your prayers to do something for the Master. Your kindness and words of tenderness will ever be had in grateful remembrance by

Your brother in Christ,

J. P. STODDARD.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON.

The Sixteenth Anniversary of Wheaton College was one of the most hopeful in its history. The unanimity with which the Board of Trustees took a more decided stand than ever against the aggressions of the lodge upon the institution was a fact of deep interest to all our readers.

The Anniversary exercises began on the Sabbath, June 25th. Rev. N. Prentiss of Aurora, Ill., a member of the Board of Trustees, preached the Baccalaureate sermon from Rom. i. 21, a discourse reviewing the rationalistic systems of the past century, and their influence upon education, public conscience and the church. Pres. Blanchard at the close of the sermon gave the farewell words of counsel to the Graduating Class.

In the evening Prof. Fisk of the Chicago Theological Seminary gave an earnest and able address before the Society of Inquiry on the aggressive nature of Christianity, which was forcibly presented from the facts of its history and from its character.

The annual entertainment of the Literary Union in which the five societies of the insitution participated was attended by a large audience on Monday evening, and reflected great credit on all the participants. The feature of the evening was an oratorical contest in which representatives from each society engaged. The judges disagreed in their award of the honors; two voted the first place to an oration on "American Ideas" by O. N. Carter, two to C. L. Blanchard's oration on "The Closing Century," and one gallantly referred it to Miss A. Jennie Carothers for her essay on "The Evils of Ignorance."

On Tuesday the Board of Trustees met and elected Hon. J. B. Walker of Wheaton, Cyrus Meachen, Esq., of Oak Park, and Rev. J. B. Beekman of Byron, to fill vacancies. The latter was elected in preference to other gentlemen proposed, in other respects equally qualified, on the sole ground of his public position against the lodge. Another trustee, Mr. J. C. Wheaton, whose action in fitting up, with others, and renting a hall to Wheaton Lodge has been condemned in the Cynosure, has agreed to resign when his name shall be removed from an obligation assumed by the College Building Committee. This arrangement was ratified by the Board. The friends of the College everywhere will rejoice to learn of this firm stand taken by the Trustees for the principles of the institution.

Tuesday evening the annual meeting of the Alumni Association was well attended and the exercises of surpassing interest. The address by Mr. B. T. Pettengill of Peoria, Ill., class of '73, entitled, "Out in the World," is mentioned by all as a fine effort, and the essay by Miss M. E. Nash, class of '74, on "Now is the High Tide of the year," merited equal praise.

Commencement Day beheld a large audience overflowing into the aisles and halls of the College Chapel, gathered from near and far to witness and enjoy the graduating exercises. The decorations were, while more elaborate and profuse, in better taste than usual. After prayer and the opening hymn, "God Save the State," led by Prof. F. G. Baker, with Prof. Martin at the organ, the class exercises proceeded in the following order:

Felicia H. Hiatt, essay with salutatory, "American Olympiads."

M. L. Holt, oration, "Labor."

Emily D. Knight, essay, "Hidden Things."

Wm. Osborne, oration, "Human Freedom."

Augusta C. Smith, poem, "Life."

J. F. Snyder, oration, "The Power of a Positive life."

J. Leander Stratton, oration, "Creations of Culture."

W. I. Wheaton, oration with valedictory, "Creations of Culture."

Then followed the Class Song by a member of the class and Prof. S. W. Martin, which was finely sung by Misses Hiatt and Smith and Mr. Stratton.

Mr. J. K. Wheeler of Austin, Ill., delivered the Master's Oration on the subject: "Freedom of the Individual;" and Pres. Blanchard conferred the degrees upon the class in his usual felicitous style.

The exercises were enlivened with music by the Excelsior Orchestra, and were not too long to weary the audience, the coolness of the day relieving also from fatigue.

Of the merit of the different speakers it will not be thought invidious to say that Mr. Osborne's oration was received with the greatest marks of approbation. He concluded amid rounds of applause and a shower of boquets. Nature gave him a fine voice and manner for public speaking, and Pres. Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation offered an opportunity to cultivate them, and for once Caucasian superiority was forgotten.

The evening of so pleasant and profitable a day introduced a brilliant concert under the lead of Louis Falk, organist of the Union Park Congregational church of Chicago; followed by the ever welcome President's call in the College parlor.

The following circular indicates that the patrons are apprehensive of too great publicity for the good of their "Craft." Acting probably on the papal maxim, "ignorance is the mother of devotion," the following has been widely distributed from head quarters:

"CIRCULAR TO GRANGERS.

To Master and Overseer:—You are respectfully requested to guard against any exposure of the manuals to unauthorized persons and to urge all officers to do the same. None but officers and past officers are authorized to have manuals in their possession, and they should not allow them to be read or examined by any person who has not taken the fourth degree. This caution is now of particular importance as the latest edition embodies in the ritual some directions formerly contained in the key alone."

By order of Executive Committee National Grange.

Chicago Street Talk.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A Freemason told me lately that Mr. Ronayne was about right, and that he had not been in a lodge for twelve years. Another, a religious man, had taken seven degrees, and after having endured much from conscience, decided to resign, and did so in a full meeting of the fraternity, some of whom were greatly enraged, while he assured all that he had determined to leave them, be the consequences what they might. He was closely watched for a time, but did not actively denounce the system, and now he believes that only his good name and interests in his calling, are, or may be injured by his ancient brethren. Another, who had been a church member, denounced Ronayne as a perjurer, and pronounced CHRIST a SECTARIAN! He quoted Scripture readily and reminded me of him who met Jesus in the wilderness, but failed so utterly. O yes, verily, the Scriptures are quoted by Freemasons as food for the minds of young or old men, but when they are quoted correctly, alas for Freemasonry! "Jesus only" ought to be master of heart and conscience; and as Moody says, "there no room in the human heart—it is too small—to hold Christ and the devil." T.

CHICAGO READERS PLEASE NOTICE: the regular meeting of the Chicago Christian Association will be held Tuesday evening, July 11th, at 221 West Madison Street.

—The popularity of Mr. Ronayne's "Freemasonry at a Glance," and the urgent requests to publish it again, and by some to keep it standing from week to week, has induced our Publishers to print it in this issus on pages 12 and 13.

—On another page it is stated that the Chicago papers did not report Mr. Ronayne's lectures and exposition; it should more correctly be said his exposition of the third degree, which took place on Thursday evening and was repeated before a full audience in Farwell Hall on Friday evening. The effect of this exposition upon the fraternity is wonderful. They avoid mentioning what has been to them a proclamation of their disgrace.

—A letter directed to the Treasurer of the N. C. A., and postmarked La-Fountaine, Ind., contains $1.00 for one copy of Ronayne's book, but with no name signed. Ronayne's book is 50cts per copy. The writer will please send his name and direct what shall be done with the remaining 50cts.

UNITED BRETHREN COLLEGES.—Catalogues have been lately received of the Otterbein University, Westfield College, Ill., and Western College, Linn Co., Iowa. The former is located at Westerville, near Columbus, O., and has had the attendance of 203 students during the year. The fall term begins August 9th and continues to Dec. 19. Rev. H. A. Thompson is President. Western College, Pres. E. B. Kephart, had 219 students from eight States during the year. Fall term opens August 30th and closes Nov. 29th. At Westfield, Pres. S. B. Allen has looked after the culture of 183 students. The college year opens August 16 next and continues till Nov. 7th. Each catalogue contains an historical sketch of the institution, prepared for the Centennial.

WHEATON COLLEGE.—This well-known institution has obtained the usual degree of prosperity during the year just closed. Students numbering 213 were in attendance, and at the commencement last week, the sixteenth, the number of graduates was increased to more than one hundred. The fall term opens September 15 and continues fifteen weeks. Any information will be furnished on applying to the President at Wheaton, Ill.

PRAIRIE DU SAC, WIS., June 24.

Editor Cynosure:

In reading Dante (Paradise Canto V.) I met with the following lines which, though written six hundred years ago, contain advice which it would be well to follow now. Perhaps you may think them worthy of an insertion in your paper. C. H. SMITH.

"Take thou no vow at random; ta'en with faith
Preserve it; yet not bent, as Jephthah once,
Blindly to execute a rash resolve,
Whom better it had suited to exclaim,
'I have done ill,' than to redeem his pledge
By doing worse."

The Master's Hat.

In answer to several inquiries made as to the reason why the "Worshipful Master" wears his hat in the lodge, I will briefly remark that he does so because for the time being he is the representative of a king—and that a most despotic one—Solomon the arbitrary ruler of Israel. And inasmuch as a king wears his crown when seated upon his throne, so the "Worshipful Master" must wear his plug when seated in the oriental chair. In connection with this there is a "catch question" very frequently asked by Masons the answer to which is eminently scientific, and is worthy of being remembered, namely, "Where does the Worshipful Master hang his hat?" Answer, "On a peg between his shoulders."

E. RONAYNE.

Sabbath and the Centennial.

WHEREAS, our government comprised, in its origin, many of the Sabbath-keeping people of the old world who came here not to imperil or surrender any of their religious principles, but to throw around these a security superior to that enjoyed in their fatherland; and

WHEREAS, These purposes have been, throughout our entire history, expressed in many official documents, among which are the memorable words of the Constitution written and subscribed by the Pilgrim Fathers on board the Mayflower for their future government: "Having undertaken to establish this for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith;" and the memorable words of the ordinance of 1787: "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government, schools and the means of instruction shall be forever encouraged;" and,

WHEREAS, Christianity is part of the common law in England and these United States by the decision of the highest authorities in both countries as well as by civil enactment placed from time to time upon the statute book: therefore,

Resolved, That we do hereby express the most unqualified approval of the rule adopted by the U. S. Centennial Commission closing the buildings of the Exposition on the Lord's day, thus honoring God by keeping his commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" and regarding the enactments of this and other States requiring observance of this day and securing an interest and esteem for the Exposition which could not have been had on other conditions on the part of the Sabbath-keeping portion of our people.

June 18th, 1876.

This paper was adopted by a mass meeting held in Darlington, Pa., composed of members of four or five different denominations worshiping in this place and vicinity. The adoption was unanimous with direction to publish in papers friendly to the action of the Centennial Commission on the Sabbath.

REV. MR. JOHNSTON, Chairman;
G. MCELHENNY, Secretary.

Religious Intelligence.

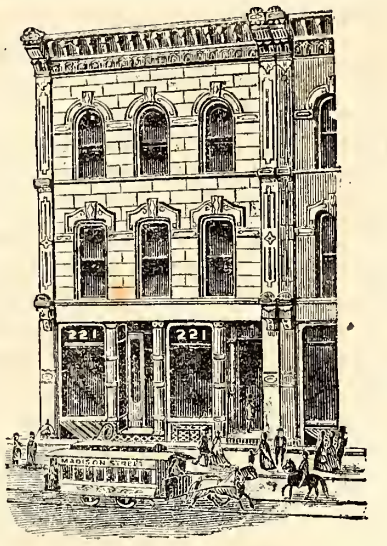
—The Jewish Messenger calls upon the police of N. Y., to look after the Jewish traders who observe neither their own Sabbath nor the Christian Sunday, but do business on both days. The Messenger says, "They should be taught a sharp lesson that one Sabbath must be strictly observed, and that lawlessness and impiety must not be encouraged in this great city."

—The opening Sunday-school meeting at Chautauqua Lake will be a Natural Science Conference designed to illustrate the relation of natural science to the study of the Bible. It will begin Wednesday morning, July 26th, and will last three days. One feature will be the delivery of scientific lectures by competent scholars. A daily paper, The Chautauqua Assembly Herald, will also be published for three weeks.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church reports progress. The hard times have been very much in the way of erection of churches; still parishes are being continually organized. In Cumberland, Md., Digby, Nova Scotia and Charleston, S. C., self sustaining churches, have been formed during the past month. Twelve churches are in operation among the South Carolina freedmen. There are now three churches in Baltimore, seven in Philadelphia, and eight in Chicago. The annual council meet in Ottawa, Canada, July 12th.

—The Friends yearly meeting in England was recently held. The membership was reported at 1,420, an increase of 52. It was recommended that a school be opened in Australia. About $30,000 was gathered the past year for missions in India and Madagascar, and $10,000 was spent in circulating the Scriptures and other publications.

News of the Week.



—The Democratic Convention at St. Louis nominated Gov. Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, on the second ballot, and Gov. Thos. A. Hendricks, of Indiana, by acclamation, for President and Vice-President of the United States.

—Ex-Speaker Blaine has been again prostrated with a kind of malarial fever presumed to be a result of the sunstroke experienced just before the Cincinnati convention. He has been taken to his home in Maine.

—The certainty of war in Europe is expressed in the following dispatches:

BELGRADE, July 2.—The war proclamation of Prince Milan was promulgated on Saturday, and a state of seige proclaimed throughout Servia. The manifesto says: "The Prince, animated by ideas of moderation, offered to send an envoy to come to an understanding. The Porte ignored the conciliatory offer, and continued to send fresh troops. It is necessary to enter the insurgent country in order to pacify it and organize principles of justice and legality without distinction of religion, and without failing to respect the integrity of the Ottoman Empire."

—A special from Cettinge, dated Sunday, containing the following important details: Montenegro sent to-day her declaration of war to Turkey. The declaration contains a summary of her grievances against the Porte, particularly the blockade of the southern frontier, the Porte's evidently hostile intention towards Montenegro, and the impossibility of reforms in Herzegovinia. The people received the proclamation with great enthusiasm. The Prince started on Sunday morning for Herzegovinia by way of Gahova.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

My School.

I sat in the school of sorrow;
The Master was teaching there
But my eyes were dim with weeping,
And my heart oppressed with care.

Instead of looking upward,
And seeing his face divine,
So full of tender compassion
For weary hearts like mine—

I only thought of the burden,
The cross that before me lay,
The clouds that hung thick above me,
Darkening the light of day.

So I could not learn my lesson,
And say, "Thy will be done,"
And the Master came not near me,
As the leaden hours went on.

At last, in despair, I lifted
My streaming eyes above,
And I saw the Master watching,
With a look of pitying love,

To the cross before me he pointed,
And I thought I heard him say,
"My child, thou must take thy burden,
And learn thy task to-day.

Not now may I tell the reason,
'Tis enough for thee to know,
That I, the Master, am teaching,
And appoint thee all thy woe."

Then, kneeling, the cross I lifted,
For one glimpse of that face divine
Had given me strength to bear it,
And say, "Thy will, not mine!"

And so I learned my lesson,
And through the weary years
His helping hand sustained me,
And wiped away my tears.

And ever the glorious sunlight
From the heavenly home streamed down,
Where the school-tasks all are ended,
And the cross is exchanged for the crown.

Selected.

A Thrilling Incident.

In the winter of 1870, I had occasion to go from Green Bay to Chicago, on the N. W. railway. At Oshkosh we were joined by a delegation of lawyers, on their way to Madison, the capital, to attend the legislature, then in session. They were all men of more than usual intellect, and of exceptional character. Two were ex-judges of the circuit court, and one I had seen chairman of the Young Men's Christian Association. The party found seats near together, and after the first salutations were over, and the news duly discussed, began to look about for means to while away the time. After a while some one proposed a game of cards. No sooner said than done. Two seats were turned apart so as to face each other, a cushion improvised for a table and three of our lawyers, including the chairman of the Y. M. C. A. and a Chicago runner on good terms with them, were soon deep in the mysteries of a game of euchre.

I was surprised to see Christian gentlemen and judges of law and equity; leaders of society, makers of public sentiment, law-givers for a great State, directors of public morals, supposed to be public exemplars of all that is good, and guides to the young, thus setting publicly their seal of approval to a most dangerous and evil practice. To be sure they played for stakes no higher than the cigars for the party. But it seems to me that in the eyes of all discreet persons this does not change the act nor lessen the danger of its example, but rather heightens it; as from the less to the greater is the invariable course of crime. But I did not intend to moralize on paper, but was about to say that while I was filled with such thoughts as these, one of the party grew tired of the game, and our remaining judge was invited to take his place. I saw the blood mount in an honest blush of disapproval to his manly face, and he hesitated and drew back. But the game had become interesting, and his excited companions urged him. "Come Judge, take a hand," they cried, "We can't go on without you." So the judge slowly rose from his seat, inwardly condemning the act as I evidently saw, and stepping forward took a seat among the players and the game went on.

I had noticed an old lady in a seat to the rear of the players, who had got on board at Menasha, I believe. Gray and bent with age she had sat abashed, and, with eyes closed, seemed asleep most of the time till the train, stopping at Oshkosh, took on board the company of lawyers. She then underwent a change and became greatly interested in the company, looking often from one to the other as if she recognized them all, or was trying to recall their faces. When the game of cards was started she became very restless, would hitch uneasily about in her seat, take up the hem of her faded apron and nervously bite the threads. Once or twice I thought she wiped her eyes under her "shaker bonnet," but could not tell. She acted so strangely, I became more interested in her than in the players, and watched her closely. She got up after a time and tottered forward holding on to the seats as she passed. She brushed against Judge——in passing, but he had become interested in the game and did not notice her. Reaching the water-tank at last, she drank a cup of water and took a seat near the door with her back to the players. But she did not long remain there; rising again with difficulty, she tottered back towards her former seat, but reaching the players, she passed directly in front of them, and now, greatly excited, threw back her bonnet from her face, and looked around the company. Her action at once arrested their attention, and, pausing in their play, they all looked up inquiringly.

Gazing directly into the face of Judge ——, she said in a tremulous voice: "Do you know me, Judge——?"

"No, mother, I don't remember you," said the Judge, pleasantly. "Where have we met?"

"My name is Smith," said she, "I was with my poor boy three days off and on, in the court room, in Oshkosh, when he was tried for—for—for robbing somebody, and you are the same man that sent him to prison for ten years, and he died there last June."

All faces were now sobered and the passengers began to gather around and stand up all over the car to listen and see what was going on. She did not give the Judge time to answer her, but becoming more and more excited, she went on. "He was a good boy if you did send him to jail. He helped us clear the farm, and when father was took sick and died he done all the work, and we was getting along right smart, till he took to going to town and got to playing keards and drinking, and then, somehow, he didn't like to work after that, but used to stay out often till most mornin', and then he'd sleep so late, and I couldn't wake him when I knowed he'd bin out so late the night afore. And then the farm kinder run down, and then we lost the team; one of 'em got killed when he'd been to town one awful cold night. He staid late and I 'spose they had got cold standin' out, and got skeered and broke loose and run most home, but run agin the fence and a stake run into one of 'em, and when we found it the next morning it was dead and the other was standin' under the shed. And so afisr a while he coaxed me to let him sell the farm and buy a house and lot in the village, and he'd work at carpenter work. And so I did, as we couldn't do nothin' on the farm. But he grew worse than ever, and after a while he couldn't get any work and wouldn't do anything but gamble and drink all the time. I used to do everything I could to get him to quit and be a good, industrious boy agin, but he used to get mad after a while, and once he struck me and then in the morning I found he had got what little money there was left of the farm, and had run off After that I got along as well as I could, cleaning house for folks and washing, but I didn't hear nothing of him for four or five years; but when he got arrested and was took up to Oshkosh for trial, he writ to me."

By this time there was not a dry eye in the car and the cards had disappeared. The old lady herself was weeping silently and speaking in snatches. But recovering herself, she went on:

"But, what could I do? I sold the house and lot to get money to hire a lawyer, and I believe he is here somewhere," looking around. "O, yes, there he is, Mr.——," pointing to Lawyer——, who had not taken part in the play. "And this is the man, I am sure, who argued agin him," pointing to Mr.——, the district attorney. And you, Judge——, sent him to prison for ten years. I spose it was right; for the poor boy told me that he really did rob the bank, but he said he must have been drunk, for they had all been playing keards most all night and drinking. But, Oh, dear! it seems to me kinder as though if he hadn't got to playing keards, he might a been alive now. But when I used to tell him it was wrong and bad to play, he used to say: 'Why, mother, everybody plays now. I never bet only for the candy or the cigars, or something like that.' And then when we heard that the young folks played keards down to Mr. Culver's donation party, and that 'Squire Ring was going to get a billiard table for his young folks to play on at home, I couldn't do nothing at all with him. We used to think it was awful to do that way, when I was young, but it jist seems to me as if everybody nowadays was going wrong into something or other. But may be it isn't right for me to talk to you, Judge, in this way, but it jist seemed as if the very sight of them keards would kill me, Judge; I thought if you only knew how I felt, you wouldn't play on so, and then to think, right here afore all these young folks. May be, Judge, you don't know how younger folks, especially boys, look up to such as you, and then I can't help thinking, that may be if them as ought to know better than do so, and them as are higher larnt, and all that, wouldn't set sich examples, my poor Tom would be alive and caring for his poor old mother; but now, there ain't any of my family left but me and my poor little gran' chile', my dead darter's little gal. and we are going down to stop with my brother in Illinoy."

Tongue of men or angel never preached a more eloquent sermon than that gray, withered, but old lady, trembling with old age, excitement and fear that she was doing wrong. I can't recall the half she said as she, poor, lone, beggared widow stood before those noble looking men, and plead the cause of the rising generation. The look they bore as she poured forth her sorrowful tale, was indescribable. To say that they looked like criminals at the bar, would be a faint description. I can imagine how they felt. The old lady tottered to her seat, and taking her little grand-child in her lap, hid her face on her neck. The little one stroked her gray hair with one hand and said. "Don't cry, ganma, don't cry, ganma." Eyes unused to weeping, were red for many a mile on that journey. And I can hardly believe that any one who witnessed that scene, ever touched a card again. It is but just to say, that when the passengers came to themselves they generously responded to the Judge, who, hat in hand, silently passed through her little audience.—Selected.

Two Sets of Recipes.

I.

Are you deficient in taste? Read the best English poets, such as Thompson, Gray, Goldsmith, Pope, Cowper, Coleridge, Scott and Wordsworth.

Are you deficient in imagination? Read Milton, Akenside, Burke and Shakespeare.

Are you deficient in power of reasoning? Read Chillingworth, Bacon and Locke.

Are you deficient in judgment and good sense in the common affairs of life? Read Franklin.

Are you deficient in sensibility? Read Goethe and Mackenzie.

Are you deficient in political knowledge? Read Montesquieu, the Federalist, Webster and Calhoun.

Are you deficient in patriotism? Read Demosthenes, and the Life of Washington.

Are you deficient in conscience? Read some of President Edward's works.—Independent.

II.

Very good for those who have access to a choice library, or means to purchase for themselves. There is for the less favored class a very good substitute. Read critically, with a view to the style and dignity of thought.

For defective taste—Christ's sermon on the mount; Paul's address to Agrippa, and the Epistle of James.

For imagination—The descriptive passages in Job, and generally the Apocalypse of St. John.

For reasoning—Christ's refutation of the Sadduces and generally the Epistle to the Romans.

For judgment and good sense—Solomon's Proverbs.

For sensibility—The last chapters of any of the four Gospels: the Book of Ruth.

For political knowledge—Study the Constitution of the Jewish Commonwealth, as described in the first books of the Bible.

For patriotism—The life of David; the restoration after the Babylonish captivity.

For cultivation of the conscience, you can scarcely go amiss. Peter's, John's and James' Epistles, and above all the words of Christ.

This is no ad captandum suggestion. The Scriptures furnish the best models and the most suggestive materials to be found in the English language.—Interior.

Motherly.

What a dear old Saxon epithet is the word "motherly!" Motherly kindness, attention, nurture! The word is never unwelcome when fairly applied. Motherly influence; who has not felt it? Motherly love; who has not enjoyed it? Motherly self-denial; often the secret heading of the longest chapters of her life, the memory of which long survives them all. Motherly self sacrifice; true to the last, often appearing in some posthumous expression, like the voice from the tomb. My friend, the Rev. John Burbridge, of St. Stephen's, Sheffield, put it to the mothers and sons of his church: "Does not history tell us how St. Augustine, Theodoret, Basil, and Chrysostom owed everything to a mother's prayers? Have we not read how Bishop Hall was dedicated to the service of Christ by his mother on her death-bed; how Payson traced all his hopes and usefulness to this Christian nurture of his home: how Brainard ascribed his deep religious feeling to the education of his early years; how Philip Henry and his five sisters avowed that what piety they possessed they owed, under God, to their parents; how James Montgomery traced his love for spiritual things to the instruction received in childhood; how the mother of the Wesleys left impressions on the characters of her illustrious sons which were never effaced; how Romaine, Doddridge, Felix Neff, Leigh Richmond, Richard Knill, and Robert Moffatt, all tell of the melting and moulding influence of the Christian homes amid which they were reared?"—Quiver.

A Fatal Habit.

Irresolution is a fatal habit; it is not vicious in itself, but it leads to vice, creeping upon its victims with a fatal facility, the penalty of which many a fine heart has paid at the scaffold. The idler, the spendthrift, the epicurean and the drunkard, are among its victims. Perhaps in the latter its effects appear in the most hideous form. He knows that the goblet which he is about to drain is poison, yet he swallows it. He knows; for the example of thousands has painted it in glaring colors, that it will deaden all his faculties, take the strength from his limbs and the happiness from his heart, oppress him with disease and hurry his progress to a dishonored grave, yet he drains it. How beautiful, on the contrary, is the power of resolution, enabling the one who possesses it to pass through perils and dangers, trials and temptations. Avoid the contraction of the habit of irresolution. Strive against it to the end.

Proposed Reforms.

A writer in the Watchman gives some very good suggestions that Christians would do well to consider. Concerning some of the means employed to raise the necessary money to carry on the church and Sabbath-school, he says the Centennial year is an excellent time for a new departure for the more excellent way in all matters. Suppose that, from this time, the Christian church abandon all lottery schemes, and all clap trap and other frivolous ways of obtaining money for promoting Jesus Christ's cause upon earth, all fairs or other catch-penny arrangements for getting people's money without their self-sacrifice, and in place of all this let the appeal be to men, women and children, as to their duty to God and humanity. We may not for a time, perhaps, realize so great a volume of contributions; but the sterling worth will be there under God's blessing, and by the same power will accomplish as much good for his cause, and, being the result of the principle of true benevolence will be steady and reliable.

From this time let no one be allowed to go from class to class, or person, in our Sabbath-school, soliciting money for presents to superintendent or teacher, thus compelling the poorer children to give from their penury, or make a declaration of their poverty or inability; but rather if a gift is determined upon, let the box be placed in a conspicuous place, and properly advertised, then let the gift be free and without compulsion or pressure. It is quite common for the poorer children to make the largest contributions in these matters from the desire to disguise their poverty.

It is quite common in our parishes for overzealous persons, wishing, perhaps, to commend themselves to their pastor, or to obtain conspicuity otherwise, to start a subscription paper for a pastoral donation. Some of these gifts are very large, viewed in the light of the debt of the struggling church, large in view of the pew taxes uncollected, immense in view of the suffering church, pretty large sometimes in view of the pastor's liberal salary. I think it would be an excellent plan, where the pastor is not really taken by surprise, for him to instruct the canvassers not to receive contributions from any poor widows, orphans, or others poorer than himself, or from those neglecting to pay their pew rent, or from any who find it inconvenient to help the poor of their own faith or of any other, or from the man who owes for his house rent, groceries, doctor's bills, or board bill. In short, let all kinds of people who already groan, being burdened, be exempted from the donation tax. You may be sure that this course would afford relief to a multitude of people who don't like to say no, but cannot consistently say yes. Let us try these new plans for a hundred years, and we can then try some other plan if this does not work, though I think this will bring in the millennium, when we shall be all right.

Children's Corner.

Four Years Old.

"I'm four years old to-day, papa!
I guess you didn't know.
How very old and big and strong
In one night I should grow:
For last night, when I went to sleep,
Your boy was only three!
Just see how tall I am to-day—
Papa, do you know me?
I'm four years old!

"And now I am almost a man
And want a candy-store—
To sell ice-cream and nuts and figs,
And lots of good things more—
And—oh—I want a big black dog
To keep bad boys away—
A pony, just as white as snow,
To ride on every day—
I'm four years old!

"I'm sorry for poor little Ned;
Just think, he's only two!
But, if he lives, he'll grow a man,
And all these nice things do.
I'll give him all my tops and balls,
My dresses and my toys,
For things like these are very nice
To please such little boys!
I'm four years old!

"What! four years old! My little son,
You fill me with surprise;
My boy become a man so soon!
Can I believe my eyes?
Ah! golden time, so full of hope,
So fresh and sweet and fair!
I well remember now the day
When I, all free from care,
Was four years old!"

The Two Enemies.

There was once a little boy who had everything his heart could desire: a large house, a beautiful garden, a pony and a dog, and many playthings. He had an indulgent mother and two nurses, and they all tried to please him. If he asked for sweetmeats they were given to him, if he wished for coffee and cakes for breakfast, instead of bread and milk, he had them. In the Winter he did not walk out when it was too cold, nor in the Summer when it was too hot: and yet in the evening he would look as tired as if he had broken stones all day.

When he was twelve years old his mother grew alarmed, for every day he seemed to have a new form of illness. She took him to the best doctors, but the medicines were of no use, for he threw them in the corner, as he had done his lesson-books and his slate.

At length his mother took him to a physician in the neighboring town. The physician quickly found out what ailed the little boy, and promised to send a prescription that would cure him. The next morning this letter came:

"Dear Sir: You have two poisonous serpents within you, that are consuming your vital powers daily and hourly. I cannot cure you unless you come and live an hour's distance from my house, and then I will give you a powder, which, with a lotion in the afternoon, will kill the serpents. But the powder will be of no avail unless you go to school two hours after it; and the lotion will require a long walk before taking it. If you do not take my medicines you will not hear the birds sing next spring."

The mother of the little boy and the nurses were very angry, but the physician said that if they would not follow the prescription they might go to another doctor.

Then his mother took her sick little boy to some lodgings an hour's distance from the physician house.

The first morning the little fellow could scarcely creep along. The mother and the nurses drove along in a carriage behind him, to pick him up if he should grow too tired. "The cruel physician?" said the nurses. The next morning the boy was very tired, but the third and fourth day he could not help listening to the cuckoo, and thinking the air was sweet and balmy; and the fifth day he even relished the bread and milk in which the powder was mixed.

Thus for six weeks he walked, and went to school every day; his cheeks grew rosy and his eyes bright, and he no longer pushed his bread and milk away, and he slept soundly all through the night. His mother was going to take him home, but the physician said:

"The serpents may be killed, but they may have left young ones. Unless you give him bread and milk for breakfast, and send him to school, and give him no sweetmeats, they will grow within him and kill him."

The mother gave the physician a large fee, and took her little boy home. But when he was grown up, and had become a tall, strong man, he called on the physician to thank him for his prescription, for he had learned the names of the two poisonous serpents; they were—Laziness and Greediness.

Do Everything Well.

Boys, you have now arrived at an age when you must begin to think about doing something for yourselves. The first piece of advice I have for you is "to do everything well" which you undertake. There is little danger of you being too particular in that respect. A boy who is careful to draw a straight line on a slate, is very likely to make a straight line through life. There is no position in life in which you will not be called upon to be as exact as possible. Step into a jeweller's shop and see how careful the workmen must be in finishing the article he holds in his hands. Remember that a mistake is little less than a crime. I have rarely ever seen a man who was very particular about his affairs who was not successful.

There is one great danger which besets many young men at the present day. It is the disposition to avoid all solid improvement, and take up with subjects that require no thought. Boys are very fast at the present day. I can remember fast boys long before you were born; but they never made solid and useful men. Nobody ever trusted them. They never filled any important office or station. They usually became small men because they had no capital in their heads with which to work out a living.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chaptor are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pagenes,
Price, $1.35.

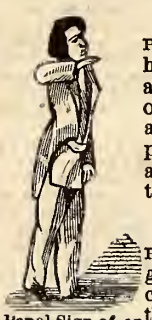
FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE.

ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.

The Holy Bible on the altar is usually opened at the 123d Psalm and the square and compass placed thereon, the latter open and both points placed below the square.



PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.—He is ushered into the "preparation room," where he meets the Junior Deacon and Stewards who divest him of all his clothing except his shirt. He is then handed an old pair of drawers which he puts on; the left leg is rolled up above the knee; the left sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, a hoodwink is fastened over both eyes, a rope, called a cable-tow, is put once around his neck, and a slipper (with the heel slip-shod) is put upon the right foot.

Preparation of Candidate E. A. Degree.

Due-guard of an E. A.

Penal Sign of an E. A.

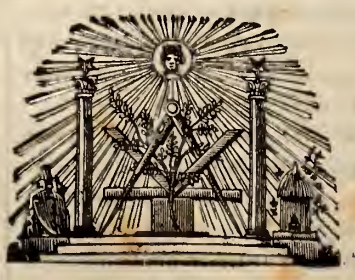
DUE-GUARD OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Hold out the left hand a little in front of the body and in a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open and palm turned upward. Now place the right hand horizontally across the left and about two or three inches above it.

PENAL SIGN OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly; at the same time raise the right arm and draw the hand, still open, across the throat, thumb next the throat, and drop the hand hand perpendicularly by the side. These movements ought to be made in an off-hand manner, without stiffness.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD:—(The usual way outside the lodge.) Simply draw the open hand carelessly across the throat and let it fall down by the side.

Candidate taking Entered Apprentice Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—"You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked left knee, your right forming a square, your left hand supporting the holy Bible, square and compass, your right resting thereon, in which due form you will say, I, with your name in full, and repeat after me."



GRIP OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the first knuckle-joint of the first finger near the hand. If the person whom you are shaking hands with is a Mason, he will generally return a like pressure on your hand.

ENTERED APPRENTICE WORD—Boaz. It is the name of this grip.

ENTERED APPRENTICE STEP.—Step off one step with the left foot and bring the heel of your right foot to the hollow of your left.

FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE.

The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 7th chapter of Amos and one point of the compass elevated above the square.

Preparation in Fellow Craft Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE:—He is ushered into the "preparation room" as before, and divested of all his clothing as in the preceding degree. In this case the right leg of the old drawers is raised up above the knee, the right sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, the slipper is now put upon the left foot, the left heel being slip-shod. The hoodwink is again put over both eyes and the cable-tow is put twice around the naked right arm and an apron tied on, in which condition he is "duly and truly prepared" and led by the Junior Warden to the door of the lodge as before.

Candidate taking Fellow Craft Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked right knee, your left forming a square, your right hand resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass, your left forming a right angle supported by the square in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full, and repeat after me.

Due-guard Fellow Craft.

DUE-GUARD OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Hold out the right hand a little from the body and on a line with the lower button of the vest, the palm being open and turned down-ward; also raise the left arm so as to form a right angle at the elbow, from the shoulder to the elbow being horizontal and fore-arm perpendicular.

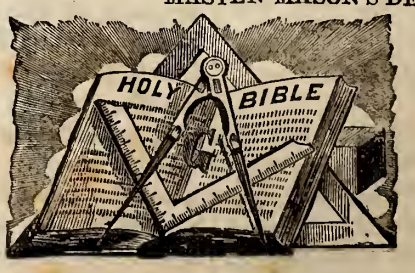
Sign, Fellow Craft.

SIGN OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly to the side and at the same time raise the right hand to the left breast, with the palm towards the breast and the fingers a little crooked; then draw the hand smartly across the breast from left to right and let it drop perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE GUARD.—(The usual way outside the lodge). Draw the right hand, palm open and fingers a little crooked, smartly across the breast from left to right and drop it carelessly by your side.

PASS-GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the first and second knuckles of the right hand. Should the person whose hand you hold be a Fellow Craft, he will return a like pressure on your hand, or else may give you the grip of an Entered Apprentice.

PASS OF FELLOW CRAFT—Shibboleth. It is the name of this grip.



REAL GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other by the right hand as in ordinary hand-shaking and press top of your thumb hard against the second knuckle. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Fellow Craft, he will return a similar pressure on your hand, or may possibly give you any one of the two preceding grips.

WORD OF FELLOW CRAFT—Jachin. It is the name of this the real grip.

FELLOW CRAFT OR SECOND STEP.—Step off one step with the right foot and bring the heel of the left foot to the hollow of the right; your feet forming the angle of an oblong square.

MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.

The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes and both points of the compass elevated above the square.

Preparation of Candidate in Master Mason's Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.—He is conducted into the preparation room as in the preceding degrees. All his clothing is removed as before; both legs of the drawers are tucked up above the knees, both sleeves of the shirt are tucked up above the elbows, both breasts of the shirt are turned in, making both breasts bare. The hoodwink is again fastened over both eyes and the cable-tow is put three times around his body. No slipper is used in this degree. Should the shirt be closed in front, it must be taken off or turned front-backwards, as both breasts must be bare. An apron is then tied on and worn as a Fellow Craft, and thus he is "duly and truly prepared."

Candidate taking Master Mason's Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate, "You will advance to the altar, kneel upon both your naked knees, both hands resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full and repeat after me"

Due-guard Master Mason.

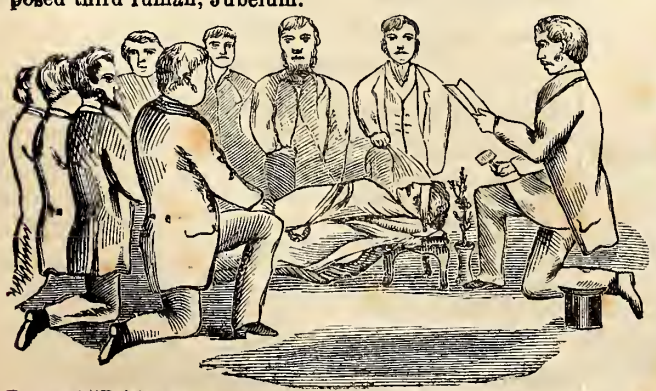
Penal Sign, Master Mason.

DUE-GUARD OF A MASTER MASON.—Extend both hands in front of the body on a line with the lower button of the vest with the palms open and turned downward, both hands being close together, thumbs nearly touching.

SIGN OF A MASTER MASON.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly and drawing the right across the body from left to right side on a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open as before, palm downward and the thumb towards the body. Then drop the hand perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD.—(Ordinary manner outside the lodge.) Simply draw the right hand as above described, carelessly across the body and drop it by the side.

PASS-GRIP OF A MASTER MASON.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the second and third knuckles. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Mason he may return or give any previous grip.



PASS OF MASTER MASON—Tubal Cain. It is the name of this grip.

STRONG GRIP OF A MASTER MASON OR LION'S PAW.—Grasp each other's right hands very firmly, the spaces between the thumb and first finger being interlocked and the tops of the fingers being pressed hard against each other's wrist where it joins the hand, the fingers of each being somewhat spread.

CANDIDATE AS HIRAM ABIFF FALLING INTO THE CANVASS, having been struck in the forehead by the setting maul of the supposed third ruffian, Jubelum.

Prayer at "Raising Hiram Abiff," (Candidate) See Ronayne's Hand-Book

FIVE POINTS OF FELLOWSHIP.

Five Points of Fellowship.

Worshipful Master:—Which are the five points of fellowship?

Senior Deacon:—Foot to foot (Master and candidate extend their right feet, placing the inside of one against that of the other). Knee to knee (they bring their right knees together); breast to breast (they bring their right breasts together); hand to back (Master places his left hand on the candidate's back, the candidate's is placed by the Deacon on the Master's back); cheek to cheek or mouth to ear (Master puts his mouth to candidate's right ear thus bringing the right cheek of each together. See figure).

MASTER'S WORD:—(whispered in the ear of the candidate), Mah-hah-bone, after which the candidate whispers the same word in the Master's ear.

Grand Hailing Sign, Second position.

GRAND HAILING SIGN OR SIGN OF DISTRESS OF A MASTER MASON.—Raise both arms perpendicularly above the head and let them fall by three distinct motions. The first motion brings the arms to the position as seen in the figure, from the shoulder to the elbow horizontal and from the elbow to the finger-tips perpendicular. In the second motion the arms from the shoulder to the elbow are nearly close to the sides, from the elbow to the finger-tips still upright, and in the third motion the hands are dropped to the side. The words "O Lord my God, is there no help for the Widow's Son?" are never to be given with the sign outside the lodge-room. They are given only in the dark or when the sign cannot be used.

MASTER MASON OR THIRD STEP.—Step off one step with the left foot and bring the heel of the right to the heel of the left, the feet forming the angle of a square.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.
BY JEREMY L. CROSS, Grand Lecturer.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Author, Containing all the Emblems explained in the Degrees of entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason. Designed and arranged agreeably to the Lectures.

A PRACTICAL Guide to the Ceremonies in the Degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25: paper, 75 Cts.

Although this Monitor is extensively used in the Lodge, especially in Conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an "exposition," and not allowed as authority.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry.

ILLUSTRATED by a large number of Engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies.
Price, $5.00.

DUNCAN'S MASONIC RITUAL AND MONITOR,

PROFUSELY Illustrated with Explanitory Engravings, and containing the entire Ritual and work of the Order for the Seven Degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a Standard Text-Book in the Lodge, and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though almost every officer of the Lodge makes use of it. Price in cloth, $2.50.

FEMALE MASONRY.

MANNUAL OF THE ORDER OF THE EASTERN STAR.

Containing the Ritual, Symbols Lectures etc., of the five Degrees of "Adoptive Masonry:" Jeptha's Daughter; Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustraited and handsomely bound.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV, A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage 5cts. per 100, TRACTS FREE.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts,

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Loss in one week, 166

This first of the month is the time for pruning off unrenewed subscriptions.

THOS. MARLON, of Noble county, O, is collecting renewals. He sends in seven names and will see other subscribers whose time is out. Such examples are worth following.

JOHN MORRISON, Mt. Palatine, Ill., sends four renewals and two new subscriptions.

Jan. 3d the Cynosure mail list numbered 3,513; July first, six months later, it numbers 3,714; making the total solid gain in six months, 201. This is encouraging.

Our readers who pay for the paper have the satisfaction of knowing that they are not sending out hundreds of papers to persons whose subscription are in arrears. The "CASH in advance" plan seems to be the only just one, and although it keeps the mail list down we believe it will be THE SUCCESSFUL PLAN. Will all our friends help us to make it successful: first, by renewing promptly your own subscriptions? Second, by securing as many renewals and new subscriptions as possible from others?

We thank our unforgetful friends for past favors.

The beautiful engraving "Signing the Declaration" has at length been received, together with the key and facsimile of the Declaration itself.

These pictures please every one who see them so far as we have observed. They can be obtained at the very low price of fifty cents cash. Or we will give these engravings as a premium to any one sending us a new subscription with $2 20, or two renewals with $4.40.

—Does your subscription expire in July? Please renew promptly.

Topics of the Time.

The sentence of the United States Court, Judge Blodgett presiding, on the whisky ring, is received with satisfaction by the public so for as it manifests a vindication of law and does not exculpate the offenders, yet the choice of the highest sentences in most cases is not so readily accepted by those who would see crime punished without regard to the wealth or political standing of the culprit. A fine of $10,000 and six months in the Cook county jail was the sentence of Rehm, and two years imprisonment and $5,000 fine of Hesing, who were the head and front in this offending. The severity of the imprisonment is considerably modified, too, when it is known that the county commissioners can make special provision for these noble inmates, which they have not been slow to do, setting apart and furnishing the grand jury room for their comfort. Of the fourteen thus far sentenced nine are Freemasons of more or less influential not effecting the Judge, doubtless did influence U. S. Attorney Bangs standing, a fact, which though and the prosecuting lawyers; for in at least one case, the worst of all, they interceded for clemency. One of the ring through their management was sent out to Dupage county jail to be cared for by Wheaton lodge of which he is a member. As he has to disgorge but a small proportion of the thousands he is said to have gained by defrauding the government, and the lodge meets in a building owned by him, they will no doubt care for this unfortunate member.

The Servian war now vexing Europe promises to extend its limits and bring Russia and Austria into the strife, if not generally involving the European nations. The prince of Servia held back long from the struggle urged on him by Montinegro and his own people, fearing the power of the Turks in war would wear out the patriotism of his people; but the plan now understood is that the revolted provinces shall open the war and in case of its protraction the stronger neighbors will help them through. It is not to be supposed that they will brook the strengthening of Moslem power in Europe by victory. And this is the supposed mission of the large Russian army drawing near to the scene of action. The campaign seems to be directed in three distinct movements: first, westerly along the river Savc on the north-west of Servia under the ex-Austrian general Zuch; second, on the south-east, under the Russian Tchernayeff, an army has pushed victoriously toward the Balkan mountains, threatening Sofia, a place of strategic importance, and uniting with the Servians a large force from Bulgaria. A third movement is by the Montenegrins northward, threatening the Turkish possession of Bosnia. The second column has been victorious in its engagements, but defeat has visited Gen. Zuch and the occupation of the Danube by Turkish gunboats clouds the prospects of the Servians. What shall be gleaned from the conflicting dispatches during another week may point to an early engagement of other nations in this strife against Moslemism.

Vermont is probably the only State in whose statutes can be found a law against extra-judicial oaths such as are given in the lodge. Although not so deeply interested in the reform against the lodge, the citizens of the Green Mountain State do not outgrow the sturdy lessons of the generation now passing away, and while we do not see such activity in opposing the lodge as in New York or farther West, yet probably no other State can show that Freemasonry has lost in actual numbers during the past year. This is a record of which any State might be proud and will encourage the earnest men who stand with General Phelps against the incursions of secretism.

Welcome to the Nations

[Hymn by Oliver Wendell Holmes of Massachusetts for the Fourth of July Celebration at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, under the direction of the United States Centennial Commission, sung by the great chorus under P. S. Gilmore to "Keller's Hymn".]

I.

Bright on the banners of lily and rose
Lo the last sun of our century sets!
Wreath the black cannon that scowled on our foes,
All but her friendships the Nation forgets!
All but her friends and their welcome forgets!
These are around her: Bnt where are her foes?
Lo, while the sun of her century sets
Peace, with her garlands of lily and rose!

II.

Welcome! a shout like the war trumpet swell
Wakes the wild echoes that slumber aronnd.
Welcome! it quivers from Liberty's bell;
Welcome! the walls of her temple resound!
Hark, the gray walls of her temple resound!
Fade the far voices o'er hillside and dell;
Welcome! still whisper the echoes around;
Welcome! still trembles on Liberty's bell!

III.

Thrones of the Continents! Isles of the Sea!
Yours are the garlands of peace we entwine:
Welcome, once more, to the land of the free,
Shadowed alike by the palm and the pine,
Softly they murmur, the palm and the pine,
"Hushed is our strife, in the land of the free;"
Over your children their branches entwine,
Thrones of the Continents! Isles of the Sea!

Female Masons.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

The first degree in adoptive Masonry is called the degree of Jephtha's daughter, and its symbol is a vial and a sword. It is founded on the well known vow of Jephtha to sacrifice whatever should first come to meet him, to which is added the story that the daughter insisted on her right to be decapitated with her face unveiled, and not to die as a criminal.

In the manual of the degrees of the "Eastern Star" we find the following (page 25): "The structure of Masonry is in its obligations and principles peculiar, and we as Master Masons are taught to respect the binding force of a vow, therefore when we find in Bible history, who submits to wrongs, to sufferings, and death, to secure the sanctity of a vow, we seize upon that character as our own. We adopt or surround it with fraternal protection. We hail it as a Masonic character and we claim whatever credit, or honor may be associated with it. Such a character fully delineated we discover in the book of Judges, under the title ot Jephtha's daughter, and we have so surrounded the SACRIFICE of that noble and heroic woman with emblems and legends, and tokens of recognition as to make it a section in ADOPTIVE MASONRY."

Now we protest that this Masonic idea of a vow is wholly immoral and unchristian. True, Jephtha's vow was strictly Masonic. He promised to perform an unknown obligation. His fulfillment of it was strictly Masonic, for Masonry knows no release from its obligations. The course of Jephtha's daughter in consenting to its execution was also truly Masonic, and Masonry could scarcely have found elsewhere a more striking illustratration of its principles in that one respect. But the whole transaction from beginning to end was terribly wicked. Jephtha had no right to make any such vow. He committed an act of horrible murder when he executed it. His daughter had no right to consent to its execution. It was not noble in her to do so, but was rather a most unholy consent to a terrible crime, perpetrated with a spirit of heathenism. She had no right to give her life for any such purpose. No good end was to be attained by it. The honor of her father was to be promoted, not by his keeping, but by his breaking his vow. As a faithful and noble daughter she ought to have insisted that he should obey the Divine Law as given in Ex. xx. 13, and also in Lev. v. 4.

However these crimes may be paliated in view of the darkness of the age in which they lived, it does not become virtue, and when Masonry holds it up as virtuous and worthy of imitation, when it teaches Christian women to emulate the example of Jephtha's daughter, they teach an immoral lesson, and become corrupters of public morals.

Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink.—John vii. 37.

The superiority of some men is merely local. They are great because their associates are little.—Johnson.

The Principles of Secretism Contradictory to Morals and Religion.

[Concluded.]

5—You say, "We are secret in our forms and ceremonies of initiation." These secret forms and ceremonies by which you initiate your members are conclusive evidence that they are not founded on Scripture. And the manner in which you mix them up with the religious service and teaching of the Gospel is as foreign from the precept of inspired men as the Mussulmanic rites of the Koran.

You say, the use of your emblems in the instruction of your members is a secret. This, too, is a human drapery you would add unto the duties of the Christian. These emblems and your secret use of them can no more be found in the Gospel teaching than the golden calf of Aaron. Through the idols are taught the faith and duties of the pagan; through your emblems are taught the secret duties of the Odd-fellow. Through the Lord Jesus and his holy apostles are taught the duties of the Christian. To the latter the former are antipodes; and they are as incompatible as oil and water. You can no more reconcile the secret workings of Odd-fellowship for the extra benefit of a favored few with the universal love and atonement of Christ, than you can the pagan benefit of the Roman god of war. One is boundless and gracious as the wants of a fallen race; the other narrow, contracted and selfish as the extra advantages which by these emblems and signs Odd-fellows confer upon each other.

When you say "Odd-fellowship is not, properly speaking, a secret society," your usual candor seems to have faded. To prove your position you refer to the family, the senate, the cabinet and jury, saying, as they have some secret duties and are not secret societies, therefore you are not: But your reasoning condemns your position when it is fully understood. If the family, senate, cabinet, court and jury work for the general good of all, having no secrecies only those morally, legally, and divinely required, they then are not like you, neither are they secret societies; but if the family, senate, cabinet, court and jury work secretly for their own interests and advantage, or for the interest of a certain favored few—a ring; if they work by secret signs for self-interest and not for public good, they, too, would be secret societies, and be like you. And when they and you work for self-interest by secret signs, ceremonies and emblems, outside of the laws of the country and the laws of God, then you are both secret societies in the proper sense of that phrase.

You say, "There is not a single obligation administered among us inconsistent with any duty we owe to self, family, country, mankind, or to our Creator." We believe you are wrong in every item of this sweeping declaration. God is the author of every duty we justly owe to him and every man, woman, and child on earth; and if your lodge creates one duty not in the laws of God, that duty is inconsistent with God's government. When you bind yourselves by secret modes to confer special favors on each other, these favors are inconsistent with the duties you owe to the rest of mankind; and when you bind yourself in these secret pledges, your conscience, your tongue, your judgment no longer have the freedom given by the Creator, but are enslaved to the secret rites of a secret, worldly order. This enslavement you never can throw off, no difference if you become convinced that the whole thing is unscriptural and wrong. For these and other reasons we believe your sweeping declaration is a mistake in your judgment or pen. Every obligation or duty made by your secret rites and ceremonies is inconsistent with the duties you owe to yourself, family, country, mankind, and to God, as it is inconsistent with the freedom of conscience, of tongue, and of judgment, given by the Creator.

You say, "All the aid we are to render each other is and must be within the limits of strict humanity of patriotism, of morality and religion." This is not strictly true, because your aid is given on the principles of secret pledges and covenants made with a special few; not on the principles and teaching of the Gospel. Your secret pledges and signs give a man a right to your aid that the teaching of the Christian religion does not, humanity does not, morality does not, patriotism does not; for a man may have all the noblest qualities that can adorn human natures, and they give him no right to the aid conferred by your secret rites. The Scriptures, humanity, patriotism and morality, all teach us to give our aid upon the broad principles of love to all, not pent up in the lodge to aid a favored few on conditions of their having made a secret pledge; but God-like, Christ-like, giving aid to all, even down to poor Lazarus, too poor to get into your lodge, having no money to pay his fees. Your lodge was not made for him. The rich man clothed in purple and fine linen could get in; he might have been a merchant or a banker. If the aid of your order were given according to the Christian religion it would take in poor Lazarus and reject the rich man; but you do not work that way. By the laws of your order, the poor beggar is rejected, because he is not able to pay his fees, while you take the rich and prosperous.

You compare your order to Christ and his apostles. My dear friend, it would not even be just to compare your order, working for the favored few, to the kindness of these poor dogs, who haunted Lazarus and licked his sores, working for the good of the dying beggar. If you had made your order after the model of Lazarus Hunters instead of the secret-working merchant and banker, there would have been far more in it for the general good of mankind, and you would have a better right for comparing it to the Christian religion or humanity.

You say, "When the Shiloh (according to the Christian faith) appeared on earth, he pursued the same system of selecting a few from the mass for the purpose of private instruction and associated efforts." We believe this comparison of your order to the Shilo does injustice to him and his truth. He taught lessnos of truth to his disciples, and commanded them to be preached among all nations, to every creature under heaven; because they were for the good of all. He said to his disciples, "That which you hear in secret, proclaim upon the housetop:" Your secret order is precisely opposite the Savior; you say, "That which you hear in secret keep for your benefit." While your order works for the interest of the favored few, the Shiloh suffered, bled and died for a fallen race; and every pain he suffered, every drop and stain of his blood stands as a witness against the correctness of your comparison with him. His boundless mercy to a fallen race; his universal love and goodness to all; his apostles spending their lives in suffering and want, carrying the richest blessings of heaven and earth to all men, the rich and poor alike, and sealing their faith with their own blood, is divine evidence that you are wrong in comparing your self-interest, secret-working, merchant, banker, institution to any of these heaven-born, self-sacrificing, universal-loving men of God.

You again refer to the family and say, "Each family has its peculiar mode of teaching and training which it shrinks from exposing to the cold and unsympathizing stranger." If a family has no mode of training or teaching, no secrets to teach or keep, only those taught in the laws of God and nature, that is a family not like your secret order. It is a God-given, a God-governed institution, we fully endorse, but if you will picture a family with a routine of secret rites, and signs, and modes of training outside of the divine law, all for their self-interest, necromantic, sooth-saying, fortune-telling gypsies, your secret order is like such a family. Both have secret works which you have made for your own interest; both have modes of training that are outside the laws of God.

In conclusion you say that "the secret teaching and training in the lodge is to prepare you for the discharge of your duties to yourselves, to your families, to the order, and to mankind, and to God." You are right in only one of these declarations. Your secret training only prepares you for the self-made duties of the lodge. To say these secrets rites and ceremonies prepare you to discharge your duties to God, when he is not the author of one of them, surely is presumption. Your secret signs and emblems no more teach your duty to God than do the secret signs of the merchant or banker, or the necromantic gypsy. God's word teaches your duty to him, to mankind, to your family, and to yourself; but God's word does not teach your duties to your secret order. Your secret signs and emblems do that. To prove the truth of this position you may be my witness; for you cannot tell of one duty you owe to God which you learned by or from the secrecy of your order; neither can you tell one duty you owe to mankind generally which you learned from the secrecy of your order. So it is with the family, you never learned one duty you owe the family from the secret rites and ceremonies of the order. The duties taught by the secrecy of the order, if we dare call them duties, are like the duties or obligations taught by the secret signs and works of the merchant and banker; they belong to and work for the interest of the ring for which they were made, and they teach it how to work for its own interest. This is the sum of their teaching, and what is learned from their secrecy.

Dr. Mackey on Masonic Intelligence.

West Unity, O.

Editor Cynosure:

In your issue of April 13th, 1876, is an editorial from the Voice of Masonry in reference to the valedictory of the editor of the New England Freemason on the death of that paper. In speaking of the Masons' love of show and parade he says: "They will expend liberal sums for lodge and personal decorations, for pilgrimages and processions, but nothing for the support of Masonic literature."

We have before us an old edition of Webb's Monitor, the title page is gone, but the committee appointed by the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the State of Rhode Island to examine the work made their report July 7th, A. L. 5802 (whenever that was).

On page 70 we find the following: "The internal and not the external qualifications of a man are what Masonry regards, as you increase in knowledge you will improve in social intercourse." Which shows the difference between Masonry in the days of Thomas Smith Webb and Masonry in the days of Albert G. Mackey. The editor of the Voice thinks it would not be difficult in a commandery of 300 members to find 100 who would be ready to spend $50 each to go in a pilgrimage or visit a sister commandery, but he adds: "Go into the same commandery and say to the members that there is a valuable magazine full of Masonic instruction and information which is languishing for want of patronage, call for the names of subscribers to sustain the work, and to improve themselves at an expense of three dollars, and the solicitor will be fortunate if he obtain ten subscriptions. Five thousand dollars for show and thirty dollars for improving the mind." We supposed the difference was greater, but Dr. Mackey ought to know.

Again. "At the Centennial there will be magnificent displays of lodges, chapters and commanderies. Money will be expended for these displays without stint, but we should be ashamed to see a census taken and published of the number of readers of Masonic books in these crowds." Why so intelligent a man as Dr. Mackey should still cling to an institution that he is ashamed of is a mystery to us, but we are glad that he has the honesty to publish his opinion of the order to the world.

Again: "Years may elapse before Masonic scholars will begin to find it irksome to write for a brotherhood who will not read. The literary history of Masonry will continue to record the rise and fall of Masonic magazines. Editors will write and lose their time and labor. But there must at last come an end to all this, and the end will be thus: Either the intellectual character of the craft will be elevated, and Masons will all recognize the fact that they should know something of the history and the philosophy of the institution, or Masonic books and magazines will cease to be published. Then will come the dark age of Masonry, to be speedily followed by its extinction." Why Masonry should die any sooner if these books and magazines are not published, than now when they are not read, we fail to see. By turning to Webb's Monitor, page 14, we find Masonry is a science; on page 20 that it is an art; on page 49 that it is a progressive science; on page 50, "To exhaust the various subjects of which it treats would transcend the powers of the brightest genius;" and on same page: "The first degree is calculated to imprint on the memory the noblest principles which can adorn the human mind;" and yet in the latter part of the 19th century it is dying of ignorance!

We find here some very important admissions that the history and philosophy of the order are published to the world by themselves in their books and magazines, and without a knowledge of these books and magazines by Masons Masonry must die; and that there is not sufficient information given inside the lodge to keep the thing alive; and that all this information is accessible to us poor "cowans."

We think we are now a little better prepared to meet the question, what do you know about Masonry? Were you ever in a lodge? We think it will be something like this: My dear sir, according to your best Masonic authority there is not enough taught in your lodge to keep you from dying of ignorance, and whatever the doctor may think of a man's morality at the end of the third degree, he has certainly failed to find him perfect in intelligence. (See Sickel's Monitor.) And even Webb in his preface to his Monitor says: "It is also calculated to explain the nature and design of the Masonic institution to those who may be desirous of becoming acquainted with its principles, whether for the purpose of initiation into the society, or merely for the gratification of their curiosity." So we find a man can learn a great deal of the order without being stript, hoodwinked, cable-towed, or swearing his liberty away.

Yours, &c., J. G. Mattoon.

THE NINTH NATIONAL CONVENTION.

REPORT OF THE CONVENTION IN FARWELL HALL, CHICAGO, JUNE 20 TO 22.—ADDRESSES, RESOLUTIONS, REPORTS AND DISCUSSIONS.

Address to the Christian Churches.—CONCLUDED.

The body of men which now address you, is the eighth anniversary convention of an organization which was formed in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in 1868, consisting of members of almost every phase of Christian belief, for the purpose of securing a reform in the Christian church, against these fearful aggressions of paganism. After seven years of united counsel and action upon the subject, we are more confirmed than ever in the necessity, both to the church and the state, of the especial attention of the people of the country being turned to this matter. One of the evils of our free form of government is, that it offers great facilities to the adversary to sow tares among our good works while we sleep, and which can be prevented only by exceeding vigilance and watchfulness on the part of every person in the community.

Remember, that the evil against which we feel it our duty to warn you, is of a foreign, not American origin; of aristocratic, not republican growth; of politic not Christian character. Freemasonry is an English institution, and may be said to have been inherited by our mother country from her connection with the corruptions of the old world, in which we need not share, but which we have made it our glory to throw off, being baptized into the spirit of a new life by the influences of a new world. The proper head of this worst of English institutions is in London, from which it may control our trade, pervert our politics, and corrupt our religion. While among the nations of the old world the Japanese are making worthy efforts to abandon their pagan superstitions, and are said to be converting the temples of Buddha into private dwellings, we, a Christian people, ought not to be giving welcome to pagan arts amoung ourselves, or to be building magnificent temples for the enshrinement of a pagan worship.

We would besech you, therefore, as Christian brethern, to separate yourself from all pagan worshipers, and be exclusively devoted to the truth, the sincerity, the frankness, and generous plain-dealing taugbt by our Savior; we would charge you not to mistake interested alms-giving and an ostentatious burial of the dead as evidences of that charity which is taught by Christ, and, as fellow citizens, engaged in the same common political interests with yourselves, we would recommend to you never to cast your votes, under any circumstances, for any candidate for office who teaches or favors the practice of secret mystic arts, or who enters into combinations or associations that are not open to the fair and candid inspection of a Christian public. Such is the end and aim of our labors, and in them we ask your friendly co-operation.

Thursday.

MORNING.

The morning prayer meeting assembled in Farwell Hall half an hour before business was opened. Rev. W. S. May of Iowa conducted the meeting.

The convention was called to order at 9 o'clock by Rev. J. L. Barlow, Vice President from Michigan, who took the chair, President George having gone to Philadelphia to attend the Centennial convention of the National Reform Association for the Religious Amendment to the Constitution.

The first business presented was the report of the Corresponding Secretary which was read in connection with the report of the Directors to the corporate body on the Tuesday before. The report was received, adopted and ordered printed in Cynosure. It appears in another column. The thanks of the convention were voted Prof. Blanchard for the able report.

The report of the Treasurer was then read and adopted. The report has been printed in connection with the Tuesday's meeting.

The Committee on Finance reported through C. B. Remington, chairman, that but $26 had been yet raised to defray the expenses of the convention. The committee suggested no way to make up the amount necessary, and the convention was about to pass the matter by, apparently dreading to meddle with the difficulties of finnancial questions. Prof. C. A. Blanchard objected to thus passing this important question and proposed, with the permission of the chair, that the delegates present contribute on the spot what they were able, to meet the expenses. Through his efforts over $100 were immediately paid in, chiefly in sums of $5, and a number of subscriptions were taken.

Rev. J. L. Barlow read from the Committee on Correspondence letters received from Rev. I. A. Hart of Geneva Junction, Wis., and G. W. Needdles, Esq., editor of the American Freeman, Albany, Mo. The letters were referred to the editor of the Cynosure with request to print.

The Committee on Nominations completed their report which was adopted unanimously, electing the Vice-presidents, assistant Secretary, and General Agent, which has been already printed.

The Committee on Enrollment reported all the names they had obtained. It was voted that the committee be continued and instructed to add to the list the names of the States and of the religious denominations to which delegates belonged in order that the roll might be as complete as possible. John Dorcas of Iowa and E. W. Bruce of Michigan were added to assist in the work.

The order of the day having arrived, namely, the initiation of a candidate in the second degree of Freemasonry by Past Master Ronayne, that gentleman came forward and proposed, if it pleased the convention, that the business be finished and the second degree initiation be dropped, as it was at any rate of far less importance than the first or third, and the latter would be worked in the evening. After some discussion it was decided to proceed, and also to hold a business meeting at one o'clock in the afternoon for one hour.

The stage was then arranged for the initiation, the officers of the last evening taking their places as before, with the exception that Mr. O'Neal acted as senior deacon. Mr. Ronayne prefaced the initiation with a few remarks. He compared the lodge to the mock auctions of the city. The pretenses of Freemasonry are a gigantic humbug and he pictured them vividly to the imagination of the audience. While walking about the impromptu lodge with the candidate attention was called to the changes in the preparation from the first degree; he alluded to his humiliating position and referred to Rev. Robert Collyer, A. C. Hesing, Dr. Tiffany and other prominent Chicago men who had suffered themselves to be thus degraded. When the obligation was given, reference was made to the regard with which these are held by the Freemasons. These are more binding to the befooled Mason than are those of the government itself. The first duty taught by Masons is obedience to the dictates of the Grand Lodge, right or wrong, and failure in this is expulsion. If the order and its pernicious practices is not suppressed we have great reason to fear that Freemasonry will over-ride the government, if it has not reached that point already. The degree was worked in regular manner and was witnessed by a large audience, which had dropped in during the busiest portion of the day.

AFTERNOON.

At one o'clock Vice-president Barlow called to order.

Mr. J. G. Mattoon from the Committee on Roll made another presentation of their report, which was finally referred back to be completed and left with the Recording Secretary.

The Finance Committee revised their subscription list to know who had paid, and obtained other names.

Rev. L. N. Stratton, who had been appointed Committee on Resolutions expressing the sympathy of the convention with Bro. Stoddard and Pres. Blanchard's family in their sore and sudden bereavement presented the following which was adopted and a copy ordered sent the Wesleyan, Telescope and other like friendly journals:

About four weeks since the pleasant home of our General Agent, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, was turned by fire from a welcome retreat into a blackened ruin. His wife and children left homeless and unsheltered, were offered asylum at the home of her father, Pres. Blanchard, in Wheaton. The neighbors and acquaintances of Mrs. Stoddard testify to her Christian courage and cool deliberation in supplimenting by her motherly devices the loss of her earthly goods and the home of her children. It is said that her faith and fortitude in the hour of their severest test bordered on the sublime.

Little did she know on yesterday, while hastening to take the train which might bring her to this city, and to the greeting here of many friends, that already the horses and chariot of fire were on their way to snatch her up from the midst of life's toils to the greetings of friends in the city of God. But such are the "far better" surprises which the Infinite Father has in reservation for those who love him. So casting earth's precious burdens aside, and without a moment's warning, she mounted the chariot and sped away though the valley and shadow of death, and before there was time to wave back a parting farewell, she stood before the throne in the full forenoon of heaven. Not for her do we mourn. She is at home and at rest. Green be the turf above her, and long may the fragrance of her precious Christian life endure.

But for her bereaved husband and her motherless children do we shed our tears, express our sympathies and offer our prayers. To her afflicted parents, and her brothers and sisters, do we tender our sincere consolations in this hour of their deep sorrow.

And anew would we together pledge ourselves to stand for the truth as it is in Jesus, knowing that we shall be gathered one by one to our final rest, and that "So he giveth his beloved sleep."

The Chairman on the adoption of the resolution spoke of his acquaintance with Mrs. Stoddard; of meeting her at the convention in Syracuse two years ago; of her Christian earnestness and personal labors for the reform; and to the stricken husband, and the dear children yet in their tender years when a mother's guiding hand was so much needed, to the bereaved parents and brothers and sisters of the departed he could tender the deepest, heartiest sympathy of all the friends of the reform present or absent, and could point them for surest consolation to that Father's hand which chastens, but heals the wound and blesses in the cure.

Rev. H. H. Hinman also made brief remarks on the same subject. He had visited Byron and stopped while giving a course of lectures at the house of Bro. Stoddard. The earnestness of Mrs. Stoddard in securing a place of meeting and doing all she consistently could in the midst of family cares was marked. She was not an opponent of the un-Christian lodges for the mere name of reform, but from deep, settled convictions and feeling it to be a Christian work, a work of love in honor of her Saviour, who was rejected by these unholy institutions.

It was announced that Mrs. Stoddard's funeral would take place at Wheaton on the forenoon of the next day, Friday, the exercises at the house of Pres. Blanchard to be at 9:30 o'clock and at the College Chapel at 10:30 o'clock, and as a number of the members had expressed a desire to attend arrangements would be made to secure a reduction of railroad fare.

Rev. L. M. Stratton moved the following resolution in regard to the publications of the reform and supported it with one of his enthusiastic speeches. After him Father Isaac Preston urged the necessity of individual effort in the circulation of tracts and told of his own experience in getting into an extensive circulation and in new places tract No. 24, "Should Freemasons be admitted to Christian Fellowship?" Mrs. H. C. Hayden of Harmon, Ill., related an interesting experience in this reform work. She had never refrained from speaking her convictions against them whenever the Lord gave her an opportunity. Temperance lodges had been recommended as aiding a great and much needed reform against strong drink, but she had found that the temperance lodges are all connected with the Freemasons and partake of the same evil spirit. Speaking against secret societies does not hurt revivals, it never breaks them up or detracts from their spirit. It rather helps them on by giving a bold testimony for the truth, and such efforts if undertaken with the Spirit of Jesus are just in the line of revival work. It is the same spirit which helps us to cast off all sin, of whatever kind. The resolution was passed unanimously and reads thus:

WHEREAS, The circulation of Anti-masonic literature is a work of primary importance; and,

WHEREAS, This costs hard work, influence and money; and,

WHEREAS, No man is fully in the work who does not lay all on the altar for God and humanity; therefore,

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to do all that we can to circulate Anti-masonic literature, and that we will d what we can to raise money to circulate literature, to secure lectures and to form organizations in every town, county, and State in the Union.

The convention then adjourned to meet at Dayton, Ohio, to hold the tenth National meeting, the time subject to the decision of the Board of Directors.

EVENING.

The exposition of the third degree was the programme for the evening, and Past Master Ronayne fulfilled the expectation of the large audience that filled the main floor and well occupied the large gallery of Farwell Hall. During the day the crowd at the door, and frequent wordy battles with Freemasons, showed how keenly the fraternity felt their impending downfall. For the first and second degrees they had less anxiety. These are merely stepping stones to Freemasonry, and what little confusion any zealous lodge man might have undertaken to get up while they were being displayed was summarily stamped out. But if Masons were to keep their secret from the public they must stop the third degree. But any turbulence was kept in check by the appearance of two tall policemen looming up in the rear of the audience, and by the calmness and determination of Mr. Ronayne.

At 8 o'clock he arranged his lodge on the platform, Rev. J. K. Alwood in the "East," and J. G. Mattoon, Capt. Henry Bundy, Samuel French, E. W. Bruce, C. T. Webb, H. H. Hinman and H. W. Day filled other positions.

Mr. Ronayne introduced his work by reading a letter received by him during the afternoon, purporting to be from a person who claimed to have made application for admission to a lodge in Peoria, Ill., and was accepted, but having attended some part of the Convention expressed a qualified willingness to become a "convert" to Antimasonry. The letter propounded several questions to Mr. Ronayne, some of which were of so ridiculous a nature that the whole might fairly be set down as a Masonic trick. In answering publicly the points of the letter however, Mr. Ronayne made so many good hits against the lodge that the audience turned largely in sympathy with him. He passed from this to an impeachment of Freemasonry, and carried the vast audience with him so powerfully that, aside from a little hissing at the first, Masonic bravado subsided entirely. He pictured the work of the fraternity after the fire made under the name of charity, and exposed from their own figures the nefarious plundering managed by the lodge leaders whereby the greater proportion of the funds sent in by the lodges was turned away from its benevolent purpose to fitting up gorgeous lodge rooms and publishing "Blessed Charity."

His remarks were continued to some length and with unflagging interest on the part of the audience. At the close a collection was taken up for expenses, and then the initiation of the third degree proceeded in the regular form with which our readers are tolerably familiar. Though the exercises were continued till a late hour, with a few exceptions the crowd kept their seats interested to the end; and it was demonstrated that in this Masonic head quarters for the North-west, every principle and practice of Freemasonry could be discussed in spite of the secret ban or the terrorism of the lodge.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Another large audience gathered in Farwell Hall on Friday evening to see and hear the third degree exposition repeated. The crowd was greater than at any preceding meeting, and probably over two thousand heard Mr. Ronayne. As the exercises were about to begin the janitor of the Hall came forward to the rostrum and told Mr. Cook privately that the Masons had plotted to raise the cry of "Fire" in the entrance hall and stampede the audience, and precautions must be taken to prevent any such disaster. The speaker and persons in the forward part of the audience were put on their guard, and a special police force was sent for and stationed in the broad entrance and stairs to Madison St. These precautionary measures were sufficient to calm the valorous lodgemen and no disturbance took place. The plot was well known to the officers of the Young Men's Christian Association in charge of the Hall.

Mr. Ronayne having arranged his lodge spoke at some length and with his usual force and eloquence before introducing the candidate. The ceremonies of the third degree were produced again, to the exceeding discomfiture of the Freemasons, and proved the conquering power of truth in this reform, that, publicly, in the finest Hall in this great central city, the pretended secret rites of Freemasonry could be enacted in living characters. It was a signal victory, and to God be all the glory.

Report of the Corresponding Secretary.

We meet again. Another year is gone into the past. Its record is made and sealed. Its work is done and its warfare accomplished. We gather now for a look at the path we have trod and a glance at the mountain we have yet to climb.

Nor could any time be more appropriate for our gathering. This is a day of holy memories. Our thoughts do not dwell now on our vast resources and splendid achievements. We look at the tender shoot, not at the mighty tree. We see our fathers few and scattered, entering a contest which promised nothing but an infamous death and a dishonored grave. We see them begin their strife not because their purses were burdened by taxes or their limbs with chains. They discerned in the legislation of the mother country an evil seed and they said an evil seed produces an evil tree. Rather than allow that seed a place in the virgin soil of this new world they were willing to burn it with fire and sow it with salt. They poured out their blood as the skies pour down rain. They loved not their lives unto the death. This it is that hallows their names and renders sacred the graves where they sleep. They had wisdom to discern the seminal principle of evil while yet it was undeveloped and courage to resist, when resistance seemed madness. It requires no special intelligence to feel a beam when it falls on one's head, or to be hostile to despotism when it rivets the manacle on the wrist and the shackle on the heel, but to see a full grown tyrant in a three penny tax and to match the farmer's flint lock against the armies of Clinton, Cornwallis, Burgoyne and Howe,—to do this required the faith and foresight of a reformer.

Not second in importance to this great lesson is that other lesson of fidelity in dark hours. When we maintain our convictions in uniform with the boom of cannon, the blare of trumpets and the waving of banners it is easy to be a patriot. It was different at Morristown and Valley Forge. The weary march, the shivering limbs, and the hunger unsatisfied. These, not for a day but for days; not for a month or a year, but for months and years were our forefathers, portion. And these were suffered gladly and uncomplainingly. Contending thus for a principle; maintaining this principle against disheartening circumstances of every sort which it is possible to mention; enduring poverty, distress and treason within; resisting wealth, comfort and power without, they achieved a success that made tyrants turn pale in their towers, and sent a thrill of joy through the heart of every peasant in Europe.

If you seek the monument of their labors look around you. Free churches, free schools, free presses, free speech, free men. These are new but the world is old. Our fathers builded greater than they understood. When they said a man is a man and must be treated as a man, they stated a truth that had been banished from polite society for thousands of years. A truth that sapped the foundations of every throne and broke the arm of every despot on earth, a truth that is still in the world conquering and to conquer until it has restored the long disowned brotherhood of the race.

Now, my friends, I have thus glanced at the past, because if we use it aright it is a comfort and a strength to us. We are pitted against an evil that is as old as Cain's altar; that has a home in every idolatrous temple, and in every idolatrous heart; that is backed by Satan and all his hosts spiritual and incarnate; that puts on the garments of angels, that has the tongue of a lamb and the power of a dragon; that has the wool of the sheep and the jaw teeth of the wolf. An evil that says, peace, and means war; that says benevolence and means fraud; that uses good men and is operated by bad ones. And this virus of secretism has not yet fully done its work. We see now in the disregard for law, the defiant progress of infidelity and the awful prevalence of vice and crime a few of the natural results of this system of idolatry, but all that we have seen is as a zephyr to the whirlwind as compared with what will come unless God interpose. The fear of the true God is the only dike that can stand against the ocean of man's depravity. But the especial work of these lodges is to break down this fear of God and substitute in its place the flimsy barrier of a secret obligation imposed by men. Let once this work be done and men fall from the comparative heaven of a Christian civilization to the bottomless pit of heathenism.

Let us then learn wisdom from the past and resist the three penny tax. When we are told that a little secrecy does no harm; that the Masonic order is a fearful thing but the order of Odd-fellows, the grange or the temperance societies are not very bad, let us remember that it is not the name, nor the regalia, nor the pass-word that makes any one of these evil but the Christ-rejecting-spirit animates them all. Not that all members of these associations are atheists, but that all these orders are atheistic and that all members of them support atheism, though some of them obtain mercy because they do it ignorantly in unbelief.

Of course in doing this work we must sometimes winter at Valley Forge. We must have Germantown as well as Trenton; Wyoming Valley as well as Saratoga; and Bunker Hill as well as Yorktown. There will be days in the future as well as in the past, when the sun will not shine, but at evening time it will be light. When we have patience we inherit the promises.

THE YEAR'S WORK.

For the year past we have great reason to be thankful. Eleven State conventions have been held. Mr. Stoddard, our General Agent, has labored constantly. Bro. Hinman in Illinois, Barlow in Michigan, Raynor in Pennsylvania, Rathbun in New York, Conant in Connecticut, Kimball in New Hampshire, Mr. Ronayne throughout the country and a great host of workers whose names are above, have been pressing the battle to the gates. The tracts have been doing their work. The Cynosure has been doing its noble service. Denominational papers, as the Banner, Wesleyan, Telescope, etc., have continued to declare the truth. Masonic publications have been dying and the people who sat in darkness are beginning to see a great light. More and better than all else the Publishing House so much needed seems within our reach. When thirty thousand dollars are raised the deed comes to the Association. Looking at the past we can only exclaim, "What hath God wrought." Looking at the future we must as Christians rejoice that God does his pleasure among the armies of heaven and the children of men. Let us then look back with wonder, forward with hope and go out to strike all together for the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Report of the General Agent and Lecturer.

In submitting to the National Christian Association a report of my labors for the year ending June 1st, 1876, it is eminently fitting that I should acknowledge first of all the Divine presence and blessing which has been signally manifested toward our work during the entire period. As we meet here to-day at the eighth Anniversary of our Association, and review the past we may well say, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us," and we may enter upon the work of our present gathering and plan for the future in full assurance that He that hath begun this good work will not leave it unfinished. Every refuge of lies shall be swept away and the kingdoms of this world shall be given to Christ for his inheritence, and the dark places of the earth filled with his glory.

It is also due to the many friends who have heartily co-operated and generously assisted in the labors of the year that honorable mention should be made. A simple list of their names would occupy pages and be impracticable in a report where brevity is required. To begin such a list would be easy and to continue it into the scores and hundreds or even thousands would be a pleasant task, but to know just when or where to stop would require more wisdom than I possess. Without mentioning names I will simply say, that while all are entitled to commendation who have aided in this great work, there are instances of fearless, self-sacrificing devotion to the truth in the face of threats of personal violence, derangement of business, loss of friends and influence, which for moral heroism and Christian fidelity may safely challenge the records to produce anything more truly sublime.

In presenting my report I can give little more than a synopsis of what has been done and leave the Convention to judge of its importance from the results secured.

The work of the past year has in some respects been a new and untried one, and to say that no mistakes have been made would not be true, while it would be equally incorrect to say that most if not all have endeavored to learn wisdom by experience, and avoid a repetition of like errors. To err is human, and he who has no errors to answer for is indeed a happy man.

THE LECTURE WORK.

It is necessary to refer back to an effort which was made to systematize the field work in order to understand the condition of things at the commencement of the past year. As the work enlarged and new allies were raised up in different States it became apparent that there was a lack of concerted action on the part of friends in different localities which greatly retarded the progress of our reform. In the hope of removing this difficulty and securing greater unanimity an attempt was made to reduce the lecture work to a system and bring the whole field movement within one general, and, so far as practicable, one uniform plan. It was contemplated in this plan that the National Christian Association should co-operate with the different States concurring, in effecting auxiliary societies, securing workers, raising funds, distributing publications, and, in brief, doing whatever was necessary to bring the dangerous character of secretism before the people, and arouse them to intelligent action for its suppression.

Provision was also made for securing reports from these various workers, which reports were to be published in the Cynosure, and thus laid before the friends and patrons of our reform throughout the country. By this means it was believed that all who were enlisted would be strengthened and others less bold or less conversant with the facts be led to rally around our standard. A further design of this plan was to provide for an adequate support for competent men, who were willing to leave other fields of Christian labor and devote their time and energies to the pulling down the strong holds of this subtle and dangerous enemy. Much difficulty was experienced in securing the services of persons having the ability, courage and tact to encounter such a vigilant, relentless and unscrupulous foe, unless they could have the assurance at least of bread for themselves and their families. To censure them for this would be cruel. To provide for them was not easy, but after looking the matter carefully over and seeking for wisdom in prayer, it was finally determined to make the effort, relying on God and his stewards for the money necessary to carry out the plan. Arrangements were made with the State agents of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio in conjunction with the auxiliary associations of those States, by which, on the fulfillment of certain stipulations the National Christian Association became responsible for the payment quarterly of a portion of their salaries. The means at command were known to be inadequate, but it was hoped that sufficient funds would be either paid to the agent on the field where he labored or sent into the State or National treasury to meet the demand. This hope was only realized in part, and after employing the best wisdom and the best ability at command without accomplishing the desired object, we were forced to postpone—not to abandon—the attempt until a better financial basis could be secured.

The plan seems to meet the conditions of the work, and to be every way practicable if only sustained by a reliable, sound money foundation. Believing this to be a necessity to the success of this or any other plan the question was forced upon us of "How shall this sound money basis be obtained?" Something tangible, reliable, something that is not wholly subject to the impulses of good men or altogether controlled by the fluctuations of the markets, must be secured.

In the providence of God we were compelled to meet this question not only as Christians, but as a business transaction. A clean, square cut question of dollars and cents stared us full in the face, and there was no alternative but to master this business problem or be mastered by it.

At this juncture of affairs strong men and wise men, men who had enlisted for life, and who had known what it was to grapple successfully with difficulties before which faint hearts would cower, looked serious and betook themselves to prayer, for the security of an imperiled cause. It was at this crisis that the man to whose cool judgment, varied experience, extensive influence, and great financial wisdom our cause is so largely indebted, submitted a proposition to give (not to sell as some infer) a building and lot suited to the purpose of a Publishing House, and worth $20,000 at a cash estimate.

This came like a broad gleam of sunlight, and was hailed by the friends as a beacon of promise to lead them out of a labyrinth of difficulties. Like the Pillar of fire that rested upon the Tabernacle in the wilderness and guided God's people in their escape from the bondage and false worships of Egypt, so this munificent offer directed all eyes towards 221 West Madison strect, Chicago, as the Ebenezer of our reform, and while it inspired many with courage and hope it also gave concentration and direction to their efforts.

INCORPORATION.

At the Monmouth Convention in 1873, on the urgent request of friends, especially in New Jersey and Ohio, the Executive Committee were instructed to secure the incorporation of the Association.

Business must be done in accordance with law, and no such body as the National Christian Association was known to the law as capable of receiving donations in realty by bequests, or entering into covenants of any kind. It was much in the condition of a minor, and while it continued in this minority all instruments of conveyance to it would be practically inoperative in a legal sense. The first thing to be done was to remove this legal disability and lift the society out of the cradle of its infancy, and place it in the strong arms of the law, where it would be protected and defended in the possession of its rights. This required time and patient effort and was beset with many difficulties. There were on the one hand certain forms of law which must be complied with. They were inexorable, and to deviate from them would be to vitiate the whole proceeding and leave us in a condition worse than before we made the attempt, and on the other hand there must be a sufficient concentration of organic life to render the society tangible, and at the same time leave it subject to those upon whose co-operative efforts its existence depended. With these three points in view the committee intrusted with carrying out the details of incorporation prosecuted their work. The forms required by law must be complied with. The organization must be sufficiently compact to render it efficient so as to secure the confidence of business men, and it must not be so far removed from the people as to endanger their rights or be independent of their wishes.

The committee proceeded to carry out the provisions required in organizing a corporate body "not for pecuniary purposes," and on the seventeenth day of April, 1874, the National Christian Association became a body corporate under the laws of the State of Illinois, capable of exercising all the functions in such cases made and provided. The business, objects, rights, privileges and powers of this body are clearly defined in its corporative instrument and by-laws which have been published in the official organ of the Association, and in a pamphlet entitled "A brief history of the National Christian Association."

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

Nearly a year later, and after all questions respecting the incorporation had been settled after full consultation with some of the ablest Christian lawyers in Chicago, Mr. Carpenter submitted his proposition to the Association in legal form. By this, Mr. Carpenter bound himself, and his heirs in case of his decease, to give to the National Christian Association a good and sufficient warrantee deed of a building and lot at 221 West Madison street, Chicago, when the sum of $30,000 shall have been secured to the uses of the said Association from other sources, in money or good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes, provided the entire sum shall be obtained before the first day of April, 1878. This instrument further provided that in the event of securing $10,000 before the first day of April, 1876, the National Christian Association should occupy and control the said premises for a term of two years, or until the first day of April, 1878, and if the conditions are not then complied with the property reverts to Mr. Carpenter or his heirs, and all funds contributed towards securing it become subject to the direction of the individual donors. By this arrangement each donor is secured against loss, and guaranteed against any perversion of his funds from the use which he designed, while at the same time the Association is enabled to prosecute the work of collection under circumstances favorable to its early completion. All monies paid in are deposited or loaned by order of the board of Directors, and no part of this fund can be used for any other purpose. It is to remain as a perpetual endowment for the reform work of the Association, and an abiding testimony of the liberality, patriotism and Christian fidelity of those who have consecrated of their means to this great work.

Previous to our last meeting at Pittsburgh little had been done with special reference to raising funds for this object. The details of the plan were not generally well understood by the friends who were willing to contribute, and in some instances it was understood that the funds secured were to be passed over to Mr. Carpenter in payment for his building and lot. It seems very strange that any one after reading Mr. Carpenter's proposition should entertain such an idea, but such was the fact. For these and other reasons, and especially in view of the importance of securing a financial basis upon which to anchor our reform, the General Agent was instructed by the board of Directors to make the endowment fund a specialty during the year, or at least until the first $10,000 was secured. In accordance with this instruction I have devoted much of my time and directed my efforts mainly to the accomplishment of this object during the year. The result of this effort you will have in the Treasurer's report. It is not necessary for me to consume time with specifications which will appear in that report, and I will only add in this connection that the occupancy of the building and premises at 221 West Madison street has, by the blessing of God, and the co-operation and contribution of friends been secured, and it now remains for the friends to complete the endowment fund of $30,000 and thereby secure the fee simple of this home and head-quarters of reform. It is to be hoped that this matter will receive that attention which its importance demands, and a deed of the property

Proceedings of the Windham County Anti-Masonic Society,

AT ITS SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING AT FAYETTVILLE, VT., ON THE 27TH DAY OF JUNE, 1876.

REPORT.

The growth of Anti-masonic sentiment in the country at large is sure, although here in Vermont it is slow. Six years ago there were not many newspapers in the United States that would venture to publish anything against the Masonic lodge, but at the present time some of our leading papers are opposed to it, while many of lesser note discuss it freely, as the press of a free country should do. People whose attention has not been particularly turned to the subject can form but a vague idea of the extent to which the American press has become corrupted and subordinated by the lodge. Still less could they conceive (a fact equally patent) how far the political interests of the country, from Lincoln's administration down to the present day, have been under the control of this secret power. It is gratifying to be able to state that we are making some progress against it.

There are now two State Anti-masonic Associations in New-England, those of Connecticut and New Hampshire. The appeal which we made last year to the people of Vermont to take into consideration the subject of forming a State Anti-masonic Society has met with no responses, so that a State which was once foremost of all in its opposition to Masonry is now one of the most passive under its rule. It now witnesses with apathy and unconcern a secret power in its midst that by means of deceit and imposition defrauds citizens of hundreds of thousands of dollars by which it may easily corrupt the press, while it violates our laws with arrogance and impunity although the constitution of the State prohibits federal officers from holding seats in its legislature, yet the so-called Republican party, as managed by the lodge, disregards this provision with perfect contempt. There is also a law on our statute book which prescribes a penalty of two hundred dollars against the administration of secret extra-judicial oaths or obligations, but this law is constantly and perpetually violated, and when the legislature is petitioned to adopt measures for insuring its execution, it shows itself utterly powerless to act, being paralyzed by the lodge. A State that thus allows its own laws to fall into disuse and contempt must soon cease to have the power of securing either justice or liberty to the people.

No money has been paid into the treasury of the society during the past year, but individual members have been active in spreading information by means of tracts, papers, etc.

In conclusion we may briefly refer to that new species of Masonry called THE GRANGE. The secret grange may be said, in one point of view, to be opposed to the secret lodge. The lodge resides in the village, and is to the village what the engine is to the steamer, its motive power. It enables a ring in the village to control the farmers in politics and social interests as well as in trade, and the grange is an opposing power got up among the farmers for their defence against the lodge and the numerous other rings to which it gives rise. But we Anti-masons believe that the best way to oppose secret, illegitimate power, and serve the cause of republican government, is to practice the virtues of our fathers, which taught open, fair, manly conduct in the face of all parties and all men.

After the reading of the report a long and free discussion took place, which was heightened in interest by remarks from the Hon. Austin Birchard, a former Vice President of the association. Mr. Birchard is eighty-two years of age, and was an active member of the Anti-masonic party in 1832, of which he exhibited several campaign documents. We learned from him that his nephew, the nominee of the Republican party for President, Mr. Rutherford Birchard Hayes, who defeated the Masonic favorite, Mr. Blaine, is not a Mason. We also observed several young men in the meeting who took an interest in its proceedings, something new, we believe, in Windham county.

The following officers of the Association were chosen for the ensuing year:

GEN. J. W. PHELPS of Brattleboro, President.

JUDGE LABAN JONES of West Brattleboro, 1st Vice President.

ABIJAH MUZZY of Jamaica, 2nd Vice President.

EDSON BLANCHARD of Guilford, Secretary.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That events of the last year have served to render more evident than ever the necessity of organized opposition to the Masonic party, under whose "silent-tongue" policy our men in office have remained silent while our national and state politics have become corrupted to an extent beyond anything heretofore known in the history of the country, the treasury being plundered, and the community being demoralized by back-pay grabs, credit-mobilier swindles, sale of office, land-grant speculations, trading-post jobs, whisky rings, Masonic rings, and all other ingenious devices that craft can devise, or sworn secrecy cover up and shelter from detection.

Resolved, That the most practical way, if not the only way, of dealing with these evils, is to wrest the power from that standing secret caucus, the Masonic lodge, and restore it to the free, open action of the people, by voting persistently, on all occasions for Anti-masonic candidates for office.

Resolved, That we present our Anti-masonic ticket with confidence and satisfaction for the support of the voters of Windham county, fearlessly declaring that we are opposed to all sworn secrecy, and to all sly, secret practices in the management of the affairs of society or the State; that we are in favor of just and equal taxation on all real estate of every description, and our aim is to restore the politics of the State, as far as possible, to what they were when distinguished for openness, manliness, personal independence and honesty in the years before the war.

Resolved, That we are opposed to the making a National or State holiday out of pretended respect for the dead, or keeping alive the memories of civil war, or hiding from public scrutiny by floral demonstrations and other Masonic devices the faults of the war-administration, by which, not only was an immense debt and neglected duties imposed upon future generations that ought to have been met in this, but a false currency has become established, which is a standing violation of the constitution, currupting our morals, our manners, our politics, and our business.

Resolved, That we again appeal to the people of Windham county and of the State, to arouse for the defense of one of the chief laws for the protection of their liberties, viz: that of prohibiting extra-judicial oaths, which law has been, and still is, trampled upon with arrogance and contempt by the Masonic party.

Resolved, That the tendency of our Republican politics, as administered of late years by the lodge, is to run the State into democracy, that party which occasioned the war, which obstructed the war when brought on, and which will make the war of no effect if it again comes into power; and we urge upon the people the necessity of arresting this tendency by securing the proper kind of men for candidates for office at the approaching fall election.

Bro. Hinman in Will County, Ill.

LOCKPORT, July 4th, 1876.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We had a pleasant little surprise Saturday evening by the dropping in of brother Hinman upon us very unexpectedly. He spent the Sabbath with us; preached at Homer on Sunday afternoon, and returned here Sunday evening and gave us a most excellent lecture on the subject, "Freemasonry the enemy of Christianity." We had a clever audience of some fifty or more. All the other evangelical churches in the village were holding service on the same evening.

Brother Hinman is "a scribe well instructed," and does "bring out of his treasure things new and old."

A very few members of our Congregational church helped to make up our little meeting; but light is increasing, even here, and we hope and trust the time is coming when "all will be brought to a knowledge and love of the truth."

Fraternally yours,
ISAAC PRESTON.

Our Centennial Letter.

Qualification for Centennial Work—News of Mrs. Stoddard's Death—The National Reform Convention—A Student Reformer.—The Lord yet Sustains Bro. Freeman.

JUNE 29TH, 1876.

MY VERY DEAR BRO. COOK:—I am anxious to hear of the results of your efforts to secure some one to succeed me here. And excuse me for the seeming self-flattery, that by inference might appear from the statement, that it might be just as well not to have any one here in this place, or nearly so, if it is not a man well posted, of ready mind and words, that will not cower before enemies, or blanch before ridicule and sarcasm, or be swayed by flattery, one that cannot see falshood in a seeming candid statement, and in short one not acquainted with Masonic cunning and craft, which are the outcroppings of "Satan's devices."

I venture this statement, (not out of self-complacence,) but because of the interest I feel for this work.

[We really do not know of any one so manifestly called of God to this work as Bro. Freeman, and we ask every friend of this cause to continue in prayer to God for him, and the Centennial tract work. Remember him at your family altar, and in your prayer meetings, and we are sure that this great work will go on, to the glory of God.—E. A. C.]

How sad I felt yesterday, and again last night, when President George informed me of the sorrowful affliction, fallen upon our good brother Stoddard, and the President's whole family circle.

How inscrutable are the ways of our good Heavenly Father. Though for the moment we may not be able to see how, yet these sad visitations should always be regarded, not as Divine disapproval of the faithful ones, but as the better fitting us for greater usefulness. Please assure brother Stoddard and the whole family circle of all the friends, of my heart-felt sympathy with them. Though this cloud cast a gloom over the future pathway, yet the cloud will pass away, and the shadow be gone; when we shall better understand the meaning of this Providence. The Lord bless and comfort you all.

I was in the meeting last evening of the National Reform Association organized to maintain existing features of the government, and secure a religious amendment to the Constitution of the U. S. Two able addresses were delivered by Drs. Todd, and Sloane, on "the need of a more distinct expression of the nation's attitude in regard to Christiaity," and "the moral character and acconntability of nations." These topics were ably discussed, and the speakers, topics, and discussians, abundantly applauded by a large and appreciative audience.

JULY 1.—I should have reported yesterday an order for the Cynosure, but I did not think of it; an order received the day previous, as follows: Levi B. Salmans, Larned, Kansas, for three months. He said he might then continue it. He seems an earnest young worker in college against secrecy, from which he is now just on his way home. If he lives he will make his mark in the world. He took a copy of "College Secret Societies."

In a private letter of July 2nd stating his decision to come home on account of his health, Elder Freeman says: "I do not wish you to mention anything more of what I say about my health, in the Cynosure, for I do not wish to bore the people with my frailties." If Bro. Freeman could but realize how the friends of this cause love him and sympathize with him, and how many of them have been pleading in prayer to God for him and his great work, he would have no fear of boring our readers with the mention of his physical weakness. The nobility of soul possessed by this precious brother is well shown by the closing paragraph of the letter of July 2nd, and the telegram of the 5th which follow. Let us praise God that again he adds "strength to strength" to his servant.

"Well, now my brother, I have no idea of leaving this work, but in some form and somewhere to use up my life in this battle against oath-bound secrecy—but I must recuperate. The Lord bless the work and give us courage and strength as we may need. I suppose you will get this by Wednesday A. M. Please write immediately on receipt if you have anything to communicate before I leave and I may possibly get it.

THE TELEGRAM.

Centennial Grounds, Phila., July 5.

Feel better. Can stay a little longer. Found entertainment two weeks." A. D. FREEMAN.

The Exposition in Farwell Hall.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your number of June 22nd is a prize to any one who cares to know any thing of that oath-bound, tongue-tied system called Freemasonry, for in it are given the signs and forms, which one is not at all surprised are to be kept secret from the public, because of the ridicule which they would inevitably invite. In proof of this the great sport and amusement enjoyed by the vast audience in Farwell Hall when Ronayne put the Rev. Doctor of Divinity through its ridiculous ceremonies is ample proof. I was there, and assuredly it will require the zeal furnished by bigoted and benighted "fools" to avow oneself a Freemason after such an exposure. For from two to three hours each evening did Mr. Ronayne keep up the liveliest interest of the crowded hall. Mr. Ronayne has admirable qualities for such labor as thus devolves upon him. His sound logic, his ready rebuke, his scathing sarcasm, his droll irony, and percussion wit sent demoralization at once into the ranks of the enemy. Several attempts to interrupt him recoiled fearfully on the rash assailants, and it was soon found that discretion was the better part of valor. One fellow who showed pluck, went up the aisle from the crowd and amid the jeers and cheers and laughter of the audience, was seen threateningly shaking his fist in front of the platform; but Mr. Ronayne put an extinguisher upon this fiery luminary of the lodge by telling him the police would take him in charge if he did not behave. He returned to his crew, and as he passed my seat I heard him uttering vile oaths against the whole proceedings in general, and Mr. Ronayne in particular, a very commendable example of the fruits of organized secretism!

The Tract Work.

Few anti-secretists realize the great importance of our tract work. All our papers are doing good, but only a few see them. Our speakers are doing good, but thousands do not hear them. Our books and pamphlets are effective, but their circulation is limited. But of all the means in our power to arouse the nation the tract work is the best, and is most dreaded by the sly and cunning deceivers of the people. Tracts find their way open everywhere. They are handed around inclosed in letters, pushed under doors, and scattered everywhere in every manner. They cannot be insulted, intimidated or evaded. They have more effect on secretists than red rags have on enraged bulls, and they penetrate the minds of all sensible people so gently that they do not regret the reading of them. Our tracts have done great execution. Let us administer them in the heaviest doses every two minutes until everybody is purged of all secret society foolishness and knavery. Free tracts will cure Freemasonry. All we ask is a fair trial.

And now we desire to know if there is not a wealthy anti-secretist, or several such persons in the United States, who is patriotic and benevolent enough to pay the expenses of an able young man who will aid Mr. Freeman at Philadelphia?

The Odd-Fellow Exposition Correct.

YATES CITY, Ills., June 24th, 1876.

MR. EDITOR:—I think I informed you some time since that my friend Andrew Alpaugh had got himself into trouble with the Odd-fellows lodge on account of his subscribing for and circulating the Cynosure. It appears that the Masons of this place not being willing to recognize Alpaugh as a brother have made a complete catspaw of the Odd-fellows lodge, which was under the control of F. T. Westfall, N. G., who is under the control of J. W. Hensley, W. M., of the Masonic lodge, as he (Westfall) is a member of the Masonic lodge. Alpaugh was charged with having in his possession an exposition of Odd-fellowship, and of admitting in the presence of outsiders that said exposition was a true one. Now the exposition referred to in the charges is the one published by you, and it was intimated to Alpaugh that if he would give up the book to the N. G. it would settle the whole difficulty. But Alpaugh was stubborn and the charges were crowded through, and he was expelled; two of the brethren testifying that they had seen the book, and knew it to be a correct exposition of the secrets of the order.

Yours, W. H. ROBINSON.

OUR MAIL.

J. Springer, Springerton, White Co., Ill., writes June 20th, the first day of the Convention:

"The people must be warmed up. Before they will support a man in the work they must first be enlisted. I have lectured and sown the good seed all I could, and am still determined to withhold not my hand. May heaven's blessing attend your present deliberations."

Elizabeth Coleman, Seneca, Nemaha Co., Kan., writes:

"We had hoped e'er this to have had a State Agent in Kansas, but will have to bide our time, or God's time. We like your paper better than ever. We read and distribute. We are trying to cast our bread upon the waters and expect to find it after many days. We had intended to send for more tracts but my husband has been sick almost a year and our income was cut off two years by the grasshoppers."

Hannah D. Chapman, Sarpy Centre, Sarpy Co, Neb., writes:

"Is there nothing that can be done for Nebraska? There is no place that needs anti-secret lectures more, yet neither my husband nor myself have ever heard of one here."

There are thirteen subscribers to the Cynosure in Nebraska. Can they not in some way combine their efforts, and in so doing be more efficient in helping on this cause?

Joseph Steele, Paris, Ont., writes:

"Up to this date I am the only subscriber to the Cynosure that I know of in these parts. I hope when my books, tracts and papers are distributed to be able to send other subscriptions. For the ten dollars I sent you I received a very large package of books, tracts and pamphlets, which I am lending out, believing as I do that money could not be used in a better cause. The Cynosure is doing a good work. May God put it in the hearts of all real Christians to sustain this earnest Christian enterprise, which is doing more to reform America than any other paper I know of. Thank God I can buy second-class aprons cheap here in Paris since what little I have done through your Anti-masonic literature. This all resulted from a visit I made my excellent old friend Ansel Lake of Gray Willow, Ill., who is a warm advocate of your noble cause. He gave me some tracts and two books. May God greatly bless him, and may I and others go and do likewise. It is surprising what a little effort will do. 'Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth.'"

N. Miner, Pike Station, Wayne Co., O., writes:

"When I first found that there was a move being made to check the progress of secretism, my soul leaped for joy; and when I find there are so many good and talented men casting in their testimony on the side of truth, and read the encouraging letters that are sent in from different places, I sometimes feel so good over it I want to tell the whole world. The Masons here are very quiet. The most of them I think are getting ashamed of their Dolly Varden religion. There appears to be three different grades or classes of Masons. The first are stern and rigid and intend to run the apron factory at all hazards. Another class appear cast down, dejected, not inclined to say much, they appear as if they had fallen into some grievous error. The other class is very talkative and good-natured. They say, Masonry is all right, all of our great and good men belong—moreover it is fashionable. This last reason makes me think of the story of the fox, who having his tail cut off, to escape the ridicule of his companions, proclaimed that it was the latest fashion for foxes to have no tails!"

B. W. Bowman, Polo, Caldwell Co., Mo., writes:

"I like your paper very much. I receive information through its columns that I cannot obtain otherwise. God speed you in this noble cause."

Sanford Ward, Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., writes:

"I shall vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick. Will you please publish A. D. Freeman's address? I would be glad to do something in this good cause."

Elder Freeman's address is published on the 16th page of this week's Cynosure.

John Shuh, Larwill, Whitely Co., Ind., writes:

"I find that generally the people see no danger in secrecy. The most of them who have never been duped are very ignorant on this subject, and just as apt to believe Masonic papers as Anti-masonic. They spend their money for novels and nonsense. The best way I think for me to do is to work hard to obtain some money for the expense of having some lectures. Some of the people are cold and unconverted, and a great many Christians lukewarm. They all want the breath of life breathed upon them and a baptism of the Holy Spirit of God. I know that spending money to war against lodge secrecy is lending it to the Lord."

Farm and Garden.

TIMOTHY GRASS.

John Henderson, of Long Island, submitted the following paper to the Farmers' Club of the American Institute, which was read by the Chairman:

There are sixty-six genera or families of grasses. A genus or family may have quite a number of species, as, for instance the genus panicum, or panic grass, in which there are twenty-one species, each differing from the other. The genus or kind is like the family name or surname of a person, as Smith or Brown, while that of the species answers to the baptismal name, as James or Joseph. Among all the families of the order none ranks so high in public estimation as the genus phleum, or cat's tail, of which there are several species, the formost being phleum pratense, commonly called timothy. This well known grass, from its introduction by Timothy Hanson about the year 1720, has monopolized the largest share of attention of any grass grown in Northern States. This must be attributed to the preference always given timothy hay in the markets of large cities. The analysis of timothy is shown to be the best of any grass that has been analyzed, with the exception of Italian rye grass, which is nearly its equal. It is less injured in nutritive qualities by allowing its seeds to ripen before being cut as a hay crop (with the exception of Fowl Meadow) than any of the valuable grasses. There is little waste in handling timothy hay; and it is much relished by horses. On the other hand, it is almost worthless as a permanent pasture grass if sown alone; although timothy may enter sparingly into a mixture with the seeds of other grasses when sown for pasturage or other purposes. It requires a good loamy or peaty soil and liberal manuring to grow it to advantage as a hay crop. Timothy grass is a great impoverisher of the soil, each ton of hay, as shown by analysis, taking from the ground at least 150 pounds of silicates, phosphates, and potash. An equivalent to this should be returned in annual top dressings, else the land will become exhausted and the timothy disappear. To those making a specialty of growing timothy it would be well to bear in mind the following peculiarities respecting it: 1. That it is a perennial plant which renews itself by an annual formation of tubers, in which the vitality of the plant is concentrated during the winter. From these are developed the varius parts which compose the perfect plant. 2. In order that the tubers may arrive at a state of maturity, a proper amount of nutrition must be assimilated in the leaves and returned to the base of the plant through the stalk. 3. When this process is completed it becomes evinent by a state of dryness or desication through the stem. 4. The stock should not be cut from the tubers before the evidence of maturity has appeared. 5. The tubers, together with one or two of the lower joints of the stalk, remain fresh and green during the winter if left to take their natural course; but if by any means this green portion be severed at any season of the year, the results in many cases will be the death of the plant.

E. E. Yeomans—I would like to inquire when timothy should be cut so as not to be dusty. It is injurious to horses and other animals when dusty. I have cut timothy at all seasons, and have always found it dusty. Some people salt their hay, under the idea that it will keep dust out in some way or other. The worst thing about timothy is the dust.

Dr. Jarvis—It is generally understood that it should be cut quite early. The pollen is light and easily inhaled by the horse when eating. Cut the hay before the pollen is developed, or wait until the pollen has fallen. The hay, however, would then be rather dry—too mature, in fact.

S. E. Todd—If grass is cut before the blossoms begin to fall, and the leaves and stems are cured thoroughly before the is stored, there will be only a limited amount of dust. There is no period in the growth of grass when if it is cut and cured there will be no dust. When hay is stored in a half-cured condition, and when hay gets wet several times it will be dusty.—Inter-Ocean.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1876.

THE CONVENTION REPORT this week includes all but the addresses of President George, Dr. French, Rev. L. N. Stratton, Rev. J. M. Snyder and one or two others given on the second day. These will appear next week so far as our limits will allow with the report of the Political meeting.

PERSONAL.

I am to devote more time and thought and prayer to the Cynosure. Almost nine years have fled since I became its Senior Editor; and few indeed are the numbers of the paper for which I have not written; while the gross amount of writing I have furnished would astonish by the huge size of the volume it would fill.

"Would it were worthier,
But what is writ is writ."

I only refer to it now to remind such as may read this writing, that while I have been sufficiently cursed to save me from the woe pronounced by Christ on those whom all men praise; yet I do not recollect one sentence from my pen which any one has disproved or shown to be erroneous. Garrison slurred the Bible and the Sabbath. The Independent has been at times a dead sea full of rotten fish. The Advance said of licensing brothels in St. Louis; "Let the experiment proceed." But no such quotations can be made from the editorials of the Cynosure. It has shone steady as the star of the pole whose name it bears. Not one sentence or paragraph, has been fastened on by the minions of the lodge, or the more wretched men who have courted lodge-favor by cringing to Masons and condemning us, to point a sneer or justify their railing. Their revilings have been all conceived in general terms.

By the Bible measure of human life, there remain to me some few years of active service yet. I have taught, as I have been able, American principles in American colleges for more than thirty years. I wish, if God permit, to make some impression on the minds of Americans through the press, before I die. Prof. Charles A. Blanchard, by a recent vote of the Wheaton trustees, has been associated with me in the administration of the College. The intended effect of this vote is twofold; viz., to assure the friends and patrons of Wheaton College that its Board of Trust mean to "Keep their word of promise to the ear" and not "break it to the heart." In the few years since Prof. Blanchard entered public life, few young men have made themselves better or more distinctly understood than he, and his principles are those of the founders of the College.

And another object secured by making him colleague with the College President, is to give me more time to think and write for the readers of the Cynosure. Rev. J. P. Stoddard has become Secretary of the National Christian Association, thus relieving Prof. Blanchard of his official duties in that body, and we look for enlargement and prosperity for the College beyond all former years.

Mr. Kellogg, who has performed a vast amount of labor in the paper, and with singular good judgment and acceptance to his readers, will do no less in the Cynosure, but more, as years and experience enlarge facility by use.

But we must rely on the God-fearing, self-sacrificing men and women, who have borne the Cynosure through to its present standing, by their prayers, their subscriptions and their efforts to make the paper what the county needs and what God requires of us. When the summer rains and harvests are over, and the cool breezes of autumn begin to fan us, let us see whether we cannot make the Cynosure a true and actual TRIBUNE of the American people. And as the Publishers have shown every disposition to expend the proceeds of the paper in inproving it, it surely is not presumption for us to hope that our paper may yet justify its title, as the Pole Star of the Nation and the nations.

ANOTHER HARBINGER.

John and the Saviour held large meetings. Unto the first there went out "Jerusalem and all Judea, and the region round about Jordan." To Christ "there were gathered an innumerable multitude of people so that they trod one upon another." And yet John, like D. L. Moody, was a plain, rough peasant-prophet, whose popularity was inexplicable only that he preached and preceded Christ. Is the Moody movement another ground-swell of the sea of humanity, preceding and presaging the second coming of Christ?

We learn that Mr. Moody has answered by telegram that he will begin labor in Chicago in October next, when Bryant's

"Melancholy days are come, the saddest of the year,
Of autumn woods, and wailing winds, and meadows brown and sere."

And we rejoice to learn that ground has been procured and a building provided for to seat EIGHT THOUSAND PEOPLE. "But what are they among so many!" As, however, the Judean multitudes were but the seed-wheat of Christ's harvests since reaped in the earth, so an audience of eight thousand in the city of the interior may tinge the stream, or deluge rather, of human population which sweeps through Chicago to the West.

Doubtless the lodge Sanballats, Tobiahs, and Geshems, will be alert to join in and ride this popular religious movement which they have sneered at and ridiculed when it was small. But Mr. Moody's terse and true application of Scripture in condemnation of secret societies while speaking in Philadelphia and New York, will neither be blinked or taken back or forgotten. Let us pray for the October meetings.

THE GREAT INDIAN MASSACRE.

Earth is sick and heaven is weary of the hollow words which kings and statesmen utter when they talk of justice.—SHAKSPEARE.

When the Masonic Methodist Conference preacher and pro-slavery Col. Chivington, bore down upon and slaughtered a company of helpless friendly Indians, with a white flag over their heads, and under the very walls of our fort, the papers which denounced the outrage were comparatively few, and their censures mild, though the murderous facts were proved and spread before the country by the United States Senate; and not only the fact but the motive. It was plain that the cowardly massacre was stimulated by the mean ambition of promotion.

General Custer and his command have been cut off in the Yellowstone region where the United States troops are operating against a large remnant of hostile Sioux who have for years refused to submit to the government and retire from their hunting grounds upon an agency. This awakes a cry, in a multitude of prints for Indian extermination.

The very worst face that can justly be put on it, is that the Indians way-laid and cut off an armed invasion of their country. And the only effect it should have upon Christian people is to stimulate them to more earnest efforts to save a remnant of the poor savages before they are utterly exterminated, which their own savageism, and the depravity of the frontierseem certain to produce in the end.

SOMETHING NEW.

Mr. Rufus Blanchard, of 132 Clark St., Chicago, who has devoted a moderately long life to maps, has just issued a "Historical Map of the United States." But the title imperfectly represents the thing. It is not history only, but chronology, geography and poetry as well. It is a tablet of history from 1493 to 1876; and, unless his copyright is pirated upon, it bids fair to afford him, as Webster's Spelling-book did its author, some means of subsistence while he prosecutes further the exploration of his chosen field of American literature and historic science. For of him, as of Rosseau, it may be truly said:

"Where'er the old inspiring genii dwelt Thither he went and meditated there."

One sits and looks on his map where discoveries, dates, and bloody battles, the births and deaths and revolutions of tribes and nations, seem vieing with each other to catch and confine the beholder's attention, while each delivers its tale. It is as if the sheet had a thousand mouths, each speaking at once, like a thousand minstrels of the past; and making the American continent another Scotch Highlands where bush and brake and shingle-knoll, and common water-ponds, made charming by history and poesy, have turned a rough and rugged region without Alps or Yo Semites, into a Mecca of tourists by its weird and wizard spells. The Chicago schools have promptly set the example, not only of patronizing home talent but American genius, by putting this new map into their halls. Those who wish our schools, and the rising race they educate, Americanized should at once procure this truly American map.

The Illinois State Meeting Approaching.

The last meeting of the Illinois State Anti-Secrecy Association held at Peoria, November 9th, and 10th, 1875, voted to hold its next anniversary at Jacksonville, on the 5th and 6th of September next. The time is near at hand, and friends throughout the State should begin the work of preparation. This time was after due consideration chosen as most favorable to the agricultural population of the State, and well suited to the political statutes of the country, as giving sufficient time to carry out such measures as might be adopted preparatory to the fall election. I hope the farmers will feel the importance of being on hand, and will begin in time to arrange their business with that end in view. Bro. French, who never goes back on his word, has promised free entertainment to all who attend, and an effort will be made to render the meeting one of the grandest and most influential in the history of our reform in the State. Mr. Ronayne, Bro. Hinman, and a host of workers, have been preparing the minds of the people for thorough work, and the inspiration of a Presidential campaign will add to the enthusiasm of the occasion. The President, Bishop Dickson, will, I presume, make an official announcement soon, accompanied with stirring words and fervent appeals, that he knows so well how to make.

Let every friend begin to get ready to attend this meeting; and let every one come prepared to say and do something for the cause. Have you been a juror and seen the workings of the craft in the courts? Refresh your memory and come prepared to state the facts, briefly and clearly. Has your church felt the "grip of the lion's paw"? Tell us how and where; gather up incidents that have come under your personal knowledge, showing how we are "ruled by a horde of petty tyrants," and let the country and the "craft," too, have the benefit of them, and especially let the seceders turn out in force. It will be a good time to celebrate your emancipation, and re-affirm your separation from this odious system of corruption and espionage while the spirit of '76, revived in this centennial year, stirs the patriotic fervor and love of freedom in your hearts. And let the ladies come and exercise in the convention their God-given right to speak and vote against this thief and traitor which enters their homes to steal away their companions, and bind their strong men to perpetual silence and secrecy concerning the esoteric works of its midnight gatherings. Let all come! Come to work and pray; to plan and to execute with a heart and a will.

J. P. STODDARD.

ELDER FREEMAN.—We trust we are humbly grateful for the evident favor of Providence toward Elder Freeman and his work at the Centennial. His letter and dispatch on another page tell of a new vigor, and we hope and pray that the same power will continue to undergird him with strength for this work. Mr. J. B. Blank of our office started for Philadelphia on Monday with a large quantity of tracts to replenish the Centennial stock, and his and other's visits will have a cheering effect on our watchman whose cry reaches the ends of the earth.

ACTION OF THE TRUSTEES of Wheaton College on the death of Dea. S. S. Gates of Crystal Lake, Ill.

WHEREAS, S. S. Gates, Esq., a Trustee of this College, has lately deceased, we hereby tender our sympathies to his family, church and neighborhood in the bereavement. In the death of our brother, Wheaton College has lost a judicious and excellent trustee; the cause of reform a firm and consistent friend; our country an upright citizen; and the church of Christ a sincere Christian. We hope his loss will be made up by the manifold blessing of God to his surviving friends.

By order of the Board,
O. F. LUMRY,
Secretary Trustees.

—Past Master Ronayne will work the Masonic degrees at the following places, during July and August: at Plainfield July 18th, 19th, and 20; at Wenona, 25th, 26th, and 27; at Streator July 31st, and August 1st, and 2nd.

TME AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
Donald Krkpatrk,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

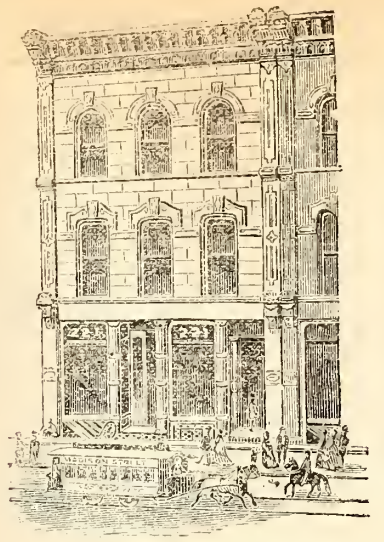
10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

The State Convention recently met at Muncie, Ind., decided to postpone action till Tuesday, August 1st next, when the Nominating Convention will meet at FAIRMOUNT, GRANT Co. Delegates will be entertained; able speakers will be present; Prof. Bell of Alexandria will add to the interest of the occasion with vocal and instrumental music.

The Indiana State Convention.

FRIENDS OF LIGHT, TRUTH AND HUMANITY OF THE STATE OF INDIANA:—The time for our State Convention is approaching, and it depends upon us to make it a success or a failure. Shall we know such a word as fail? I hope not. It will require some apparent sacrifice on our part to make it a success. But when we consider that the press is muzzled, the pulpit degraded by Masonic ministers, and our courts converted into a stupendous farce, friends, these are facts that no observing man, even a Mason, will scarcely pretend to controvert.



Now in view of these facts will we not give a few days and a few dollars to the cause of religious liberty and republican government. Look back, if you please, to the history of the nations of this earth, and tell me where is the nation to-day that has forsaken God and just government? Where is imperial Rome, probably the grandest and most powerful nation that ever existed in the history of the past? It is needless for me to stop to answer. Friends, shall we not profit by past history? Our forefathers pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor, and thereby bequeathed to us our present glorious form of government and religious liberty. Shall we prove recreant to the task of transmitting those blessings to our posterity? May God forbid it.

The "old handmaid" is sick even unto death if we only follow up the victories already achieved. Then on to the conflict when victory is just ready to perch upon our banners. If we prove recreant now, we shall be false to God, to our country, to ourselves and to our posterity. Then come up, friends, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Let us throw off the galling yoke of oppression foisted upon us by an exotic government of worse than heathen origin.

Fairmount is easy of aceess by rail, being situated on Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan R. R. which crosses the Lake Shore R. R. at Goshen; the Wabash Valley R. R. at Wabashtown; the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis R. R. at Marion; the Muncie and Lafayette R. R. at Alexandria; and taps the Bee Line at Anderson. The people of Fairmount and vicinity are hospitable and warmly enlisted in our reform. Those attending the Convention may rest assured that they will be well cared for while here.

Hoping to see many of our friends there, I remain fraternally in the bonds of Christ. Yours etc.,
GEO. W. CHAMP.

The following incident is related of Thaddeus Stevens: When in Washington city one time, there was a procession of "Odd-fellows," and a friend asked him if he knew what they were, he said, "yes, they are the maggots crawling out of the old dead carcass of Freemasonry"

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

"I Know that my Redeemer Liveth."

I will with all my might Pursue the path of right,
Nor ever turn aside,
Whatever may betide,
For I know that my Redeemer liveth,
And strength and peace unto the faithful giveth.

I will my soul prepare
To meet the Bridegroom fair,
Who waits in heaven above
To welcome me in love:
For I know that my Redeemer liveth,
And that a garment white the pure he giveth.

I never will despair,
For hope shines everywhere,
And every cloud dispels,
Where Christ my Saviour dwells;
For I know that my Redeemer liveth,
And perfect trust in him hope truly giveth.

And ever on my way
A cheering word I'll say,
To help the fainting heart,
And hope again impart,
For I know that my Redeemer liveth,
And hope in him true comfort ever giveth.

And ever will I pray
His will be done each day,
That I may ne'er repine,
Whate'er that will divine,
For I know that my Redeemer liveth,
And what is best for me my Saviour giveth.

I will unto the end,
For Jesus is my friend,
In his great love secure,
E'en to the end endure,
For I know that my Redeemer liveth,
And life eternal to the enduring giveth.

I 've Done With It.

From "Work Among the Lost."

One morning Mrs. Vicars received an anonymous letter from a district visitor, giving her the address of a woman whom the letter stated to be one of the worst characters in Brighton, and a great corrupter of others; so bad, indeed, that no respectable person had thought of entering her house for many a long year. But as the writer had been told that Mrs. Vicars did not shrink from visiting the vilest, would she go and see her? adding that could any impression be made on her it might be the means of saving scores.

The same day saw Mrs. Vicars on her way to the house named in the letter. The door was opened by the very woman, and Mrs. Vicars at once boldly stated the errand on which she had come. "I have no time to hear about such things," the woman answered roughly; "religion is all very well for you gentle folks, but poor folks can't afford it, one must live."

"And we must all die too," Mrs. Vicars said solemnly. "Well, that's true, and I know all about that," said the woman with an odd boastfulness. "I am not so ignorant as some; I wasn't always like what you see me now; why up there," she added, pointing to a top shelf, "I have got a beautiful large Bible I bought with my own money — years ago it is now."

"A beautiful large Bible!" exclaimed Mrs. Vicars; "how I should like to see it; do you think you could get it down for me?"

"Well, ma'am, I'll try, but I'm afraid it will nigh smother you with dust; for it is right on the top shelf, where I can't get at it with the duster."

So with the combined help of a table and a chair she managed to get the Bible down. Alas! the dust stood so thick on it, that in Whitefield's strong words she would have had no difficulty in writing damnation with her own finger on the whitened cover. But wiping it carefully with the corner of her apron she laid it triumphantly on the table before Mrs. Vicars.

"Well, that is a beauty!" exclaimed Mrs. Vicars, "and what beautiful print too! Can you read it?"

"Read it, I should think I can, indeed; at least I can when I have got my glasses, but unluckily I happened of an accident with one of them."

"Can you find them? for if you will give them to me I will get them mended for you."

"Well, I can't say as how I know exactly where they are, but I think I can lay my hand on them somewhere," she said, proceeding to rummage in several drawers.

Mrs. Vicars joined in the hunt and during the search for the glasses the ice seemed to melt, and they got quite friendly.

"Here they are," exclaimed Mrs. A., producing them at last from among a heap of odds and ends.

"And a capital pair of glasses too," rejoined Mrs. Vicars; "this one is cracked and we must have a new glass for that eye, but the other is all right; just try it," she added, opening the Bible.

So putting the odd glass to her right eye, the woman read a few words.

"You do read well! why, you are quite a scholar;" and so Mrs. Vicars kept on turning over the pages, and getting her to read one verse after another, till she found the passage she wanted, viz., Isa. i. 18.

"There is nothing amiss with that glass, is there? Read this."

Slowly she read the solemn words through the one old spectacle-glass; but as she read, Mrs. Vicars felt one great warm drop after another falling upon her hand, which rested on the open Bible. "Come, let us reason together; your Father loves you; he is knocking at the door of your heart now; 'Come,' he says, 'let us reason together.' Oh! why will you perish when he says through me, 'Come to me, and though your sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow?'"

She did not say much more, but left, taking the glasses with her. As soon as they were mended she returned to the house with them. The moment the woman saw her, she exclaimed, holding up both her hands, "I 've done with it! I 've done with it! Night nor day I had never been able to get the verse out of my head. Not another day of this dreadful life will I lead, if I can help it."

Mrs. A. is now living with her brother, conducting a small business, having been known for many years as a respectable woman, and a most earnest Christian.—Work among the Lost.

Is Anything too Hard for God!

Jer. 32: 17. Oh Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee.

When the work has seemed hard and the way dark, and we have felt discouraged, we have come back to this good old text, and taken courage, and gone forward, and the flinty hearts have been broken.

In Edinburgh, the chairman of the infidel Club came to meeting to scoff and ridicule, and said: "You say God answers prayer. You may try it on me." I prayed with him, but it did not seem to have any effect, and for six long months prayers went up for him, and at last he was converted, and was conducting a prayer-meeting among his old infidel companions. So you see nothing is too hard for God. When we really believe that nothing is too hard for him, we can go forward and win souls. "He did not many works there because of their unbelief." Let us ask of God the greatest things. The longing prayer of faith will not be refused—Moody.

Home Courtesies.

"Will you?" asked a pleasant voice.
And the husband answered:
"Yes, my dear, with pleasure."

It was quietly but heartily said; the tone, the manner, the look, were perfectly natural, and very affectionate. We thought: How pleasant that courteous reply! How gratifying must it be to the wife! Many husbands with ten years' experience are ready enough with the courtesies of politeness to the young ladies of their acquaintance, while they speak with abruptness to the wife, and do many rude little things without considering them worth an apology.

Though words seem little things, and slight attention almost valueless, yet depend upon it they keep the flame bright, especially if they are natural. The children grow up in a better moral atmosphere, and learn to respect their parents as they see them respecting each other. Many a boy takes advantage of the mother he loves, because he sees often the rudeness of his father. Insensibly he gathers to his bosom the same habits, and the thoughts and feeling they engender, and in his turn becomes the petty tyrant. Only his mother! Why should he thank her? Father never does. Thus the home becomes a seat of disorder and unhappiness. Only for strangers are kind words expressed, and hypocrites go out from the hearth stone fully prepared to render justice, benevolence and politeness to any one and every one but those who have the justest claims. Ah! give us the kind glance, the happy homestead, the smiling wife and courteous children of the friend who said so pleasantly: "Yes, my dear, with pleasure."—Ex.

You Have Sinned.

There is none righteous, no, not one —Romans iii. 10.

There is no difference, for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God.—Romans iii. 23.

For whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.—James ii. 10.

If we say that we have not sinned, we make Him a liar, and His word is not in us.—John. i. 10.

Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned—Romans v. 12.

The Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.—Galatians iii. 22.

Treasures in Heaven.

We read of a philosoher who, passed through a mart filled with articles of taste and luxury, made himself quite happy with this simple sage reflection; "How many things there are here that I do not want!" Now this is just the reflection with which the earnest believer pass happily through the world. It is richly furnished with what is called good things. It has spots of honor and power to tempt the restless aspiring of ambition of every grade. It has gold and gems, houses and lands, for the covetous and ostentatious. It has innumerable bowers of taste and luxury, where self-indulgence may revel. But the Christian, whose piety is deep toned, and whose spiritual perceptions are clear, looks over the world and exclaims, "How much there is that I do not want! I have what is far better. My treasure is in heaven."—D. Tyng.

A SOUL occupied with great ideas best performs small duties.

PASSING UNDER THE ROD.—It was the custom of the Jews to select the tenth of the sheep after this manner: The lambs were seperated from the dams, and enclosed in a sheepcote, with only one narrow way out; the dams were at the entrance. On opening the gate, the lambs hastened to join the dams; and a man placed at the entrance, with a rod dipped in paint, touched every tenth lamb, and so marked it with his rod, saying, "Let this be holy." Hence saith the Lord by the prophet "I will cause you to pass under the rod." Ezek. xx. 27.

The Mother's Cradle-Song.

Sing him a cradle-song,
Tender and low;
Tell him how Jesus came
Long, long ago;
Came as a little one,
Lowly and mild,
God's own eternal Son,
Yet Mary's child.

Long years may come and pass,
And there shall be
Under the church-yard grass
Slumber for thee;
Yet shall thy song live on
Still in his life,
Sweeter when thou art gone
Out of the strife.

Sorrow will come with time,
Faith may grow cold;
Truth, like a silver chime,
Calls to the fold,
Calls to the roving sheep,
(Gone far astray,)
"Come, and thy Lord hall keep Spoilers away."

Say not the words are weak,
Scorned of the wise;
Doth not the Master speak
In lowly guise?
He shall thy weakness make
Holy and strong,
And thy poor song shall wake
A sweeter song.

Nathalie's Trial.

"Ple-e-ease, Natty," pleaded little Alice, "I can't walk so fast; my throat feels so badly."

"Oh, bah! come on? You don't walk with your throat."

At this the girls all laughed; Nathalie dearly loved to raise a laugh. Besides, Jess was waiting—Jess, with her ringing voice and great black eyes. Jess was afraid of nobody and nothing. Natty was a bit afraid of Jess, but would have died before she would have owned it. In Jess' company, therefore, she always talked faster and laughed louder than anywhere else.

Another time Nathalie would have waited for her little sister Alice, who stood leaning heavily against a post of the fence, with such sorry blue eyes; but just then she remembered that Jess had said only last night, "Pooh! who wants an infant at one's heels?" So she seized Jess' arm, caught step, and they moved off side by side, the four-buttoned boots, and the four straight, shapely ankles getting over the ground in a fine, sturdy fashion of their own.

"I'll carry your satchel for you, Alice," said Timmy.

Nathalie's long curls and the blue streamers of her hat had just gone out of sight round the corner, and Alice leaning against the fence-post still. The scholars were all gone; Timmy stayed to lock the school-house. He was poor, and earned his tuition that way. "Thank you, you're very kind;" and Alice gave Timmy a look that made him think, "Dear me, I'd carry her too, if she'd let me;" but he didn't venture to say it.

"I wish I had my sled here; the snow is so deep I didn't bring it to-day."

There had been a storm, and the drifts were shoulder-deep, measuring by Alice. It was hard walking, therefore, and the two came on slowly. But just as they reached the home-gate, and Tim was running in with the satchel, Jess and Nathalie appeared from an opposite direction munching peanuts.

"Heigho!" cried Jess, giving Tim a cool stare with those wide-open eyes of hers. "Alice has hired a new boy. Wonder how much she pays him."

It was a cruel taunt. Tim's mother was so poor, you know; she took in washing. Nathalie laughed, and Alice said, "Thank you Tim." The boy took off his cap, and Alice bowed as politely as though Tim had been a prince of the blood. Then he ran off.

"Better hurry up, you've got the washtubs to empty," said Nathalie.

"O Natty!" said Alice.

"Well, what?"

Nat faced squarely about; Jess was looking on.

"You've made Tim feel bad."

"How very sensitive you are all of a sudden," said Nathalie and Jess.

"O, Al always was too good for common folks. I say, Al, what do you shut up your eyes in prayer-time for?"

"I thought every one did," was the meek reply.

"Thought every one did! Just hear that. O, that's the last joke;" and Jess shouted, "Why, I have half my fun while Miss Mack is on her knees. Who cares for her prayers? They don't raise higher than the ceiling, I know."

Now Nathalie knew this was wrong, but she laughed. Alice did not laugh or speak. Just then a gray kitten came down the path. Jess spied her, and cried out:

"Hurra, boys, there's a cat! I hate cats! Jolly! S-s-stboy!—Come on, Nat!"

"O, don't, Jessy. It's my kitty, and she's lame. She got caught in a trap."

"Lame, is she? Appropriate for you to have a lame cat, being inclined that way yourself."

"O Jess, did you know how that hurt?" Alice had had a white swelling. She had suffered months of agony from it; but even that was easier to bear than this wicked speech.

"Here she is; I've got her, Nat;" and Jess seized the kitten, while Nat ran up and little Alice plunged through the drifts after them.

"Ple-e-ease!" pleaded she.

"Ple-e-ease," drawled Jess in derision, mimicking the plaintive tone.

"Let's put her in the water-trough. Hydropath's mazing good for cats;" and Jess shouted at her own wit. Then—she was as quick as lightning, was Jess—in a twinkling the crippled kitten was plunged into ice-cold water, taken out, and hoisted, dripping and forlorn, on the top of Natty's open umbrella.

"Now for it," spoke Nathalie; "let's give her a pack. Where's your handkerchief, Jess? O, there is the tea-bell. I must go in this minute or Aunt Meg will schold."

Jess ran off, and so did pussy. Natty went into the house, and Alice plunged her way out of the drift, and followed the cat's vanishing tail up the wood-house stairs.

"You poor, poor kitty," she sobbed, creeping out under the eaves, where her pet, in a soaked and sad estate, was trying to dry herself with her tongue. "O kitty!" and Alice set about stroking her with her handkerchief, wetting her coat with tears as fast as she dried it.

"O kitty, nobody loves you but me, and nobody loves me but you."

"They are real hateful, Miss Alice," said Norah, the cook, as the child came tugging her maltreated pet down to the kitchen stove. "I would't mind; bad luck to 'em arrah!"

"I wouldn't mind Jess, but Natty's my sister;" and Alice sobbed a great deep sob, "fit to break yer heart," as Norah said. "Natty's my sister, and she's all I've got."

Poor little Alice! Her mother was dead, her father was away nearly always, and Aunt Meg was a hard woman, and above all things detested what she called "de-e-licate people."

"May I go to bed, aunt?"

Alice was shivering over the stove. She couldn't eat her supper, and her throat felt so full. Her aunt was knitting, she did not look up as she answered:

"One—two—yes, yes. Go right along—four—five—latch the door after you."

The little girl dragged herself up stairs. The moon shone bright and cold through the frosty window-panes, so cold, so bright. Alice prayed, "Dear God, please bless my sister Nathalie, and make her love me—a little." Then, with a shuddering chill, she crept into bed and wondered if she would ever be warm again.

It was an hour later. Nathalie was ciphering, but a pair of sad eyes kept swimming between her own and the slate. She was just thinking how she would hug Alice, and kiss her and make it all up when she went to bed, and let Alice "lie on her arm," as the dear little thing so loved to do. For Nathalie was kind and affectionate when Jess was out of the way.

Aunt Meg started, saying, "What is that noise? Is any thing wrong at the stables?"

Nathalie listened at the door. "It's in the house," she said, and ran up stairs. An instant and she was down again showing a white face of terror at the hall-door. "O Aunt Meg, something ails Alice; she's strangling."

Grandmother Warner came running in with her camphor-bottle. She looked once at Alice, reaching out her poor, helpless hands, and making that dreadful rattling in her throat, and she said one word—

"Croup!"

The sun came up over the hills next morning and filled all the valley with light. He shone on a hundred fields white with snow, and he looked into the little room where Nathalie and Alice had slept so many happy nights, looked in through the sparkle of the frosty panes, and saw, on the spotless bed, something as white and cold as the snow itself. All that was left of sweet little Alice lay there with folded hands that winter morning.

Poor little Alice? No—no. Happy Alice! Poor, wretched Natty! She crouched, a shuddering form on the the floor by the bedside.

"O Ally, my darling, my own little lamb," she moaned. Then, "O wicked! wicked!" It was all she could say, remembering that last terrible night, when she had laughed at her little sister, and been so unkind.

The very last words that Alice had ever heard her speak had been words that cut the loving heart to the quick. O Natty, Natty!

Timmy brought a white rose from his mother's one bush, and laid it in the waxen fingers, and he begged the kitten for Alice's sake. Then they made a grave for the little girl by her mother's side. And the snow came and covered it. There was no longer any little Alice in time or on earth.

Nathalie is a woman now, with children of her own. But no golden head, no bright eyes of them all are dearer to her than the memory of the little sister who went home to God so long ago. This is why Nathalie is known as a woman kind to all weakness and suffering, and why her voice is never so earnest as when she pleads with her children to speak tenderly, always, to the little ones. For God knows—he only—through what days of sorrow, through what nights of bitter weeping, Nathalie mourned her sister, and her thoughtless cruelty that winter afternoon.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON never told a more touching story than the following:—A dog was bereaved of his master, and became old and blind, passing the dark evenings of his existence sadly in some corner, which he hardly ever quitted. One day came a step like that of his lost master and he suddenly left his place. The man who had just entered wore ribbed stockings; the old dog had lost his scents and referred at once to the stocking, that he remembered rubbing his face against. Believing that his master had returned after those weary years of absence, he gave away to the most extravagant delight. The man spoke; the momentary illusion was dispelled; the dog went sadly back to his place, lay down wearily and died.

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for July 23.—The Temple Dedicated.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Kings viii. 5-21. Commit 5-11; Primary Verses, 10, 11.

5 And king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel, that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

6 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubim.

7 For the cherubim spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubim covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

8 And they drew out the staves, that the ends of the staves were seen out in the holy place before the oracle, and they were not seen without: and there they are unto this day.

9 There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

10 And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord,

11 So that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud; for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord.

12 Then spake Solomon, The Lord said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

13 I have surely built thee a house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in forever.

14 And the king turned his face about, and blessed all the congregation of Israel: and all the congregation of Israel stood.

15 And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying,

16 Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build a house, that my name might be therein; but I chose David to be over my people Israel.

17 And it was in the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the Lord God of Israel.

18 And the Lord said unto David my father, Whereas it was in thine heart to build a house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart.

19 Nevertheless thou shalt not build the house; but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name.

2 And the Lord hath performed his word that he spake, and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised, and have built a house for the name of the Lord God of Israel.

21 And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt.

Solomon re-assures the people, who had been overawed by this manifestation of the glory of the Lord by saying: "The Lord said he would dwell in thick darkness." He had said unto Moses: "I will come unto thee in a thick cloud." Ex. xix. 9. It seems more than probable that this was not a white cloud, such as we daily see overhead, made luminous by the Spirit of God, which it shrouded, but darkness overpowering and intense. This appears from former similar manifestations. "Moses drew near unto the thick darkness where God was." Ex. xx. 21. "And the mountain burned with fire unto the midst of heaven, with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness." Deut. iv. 11. "The Lord spake . . . out of the midst of fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness." Deut. v. 22. See, also, Ex. xiii. 21; xxiv. 16; Lev. xvi. 2: Num. ix. 15. It was from these facts, probably, that God is so often spoken of in the Scriptures as being surrounded "by clouds and darkness."

—It was only the presence of the Lord that made Solomon's costly edifice a temple of God. The presence is given wherever the offering is sincere, and the hearts of those making it are filled with a desire to worship, whether the buildings be a rich cathedral or a log meeting-house. It is not so much the building he dwells in as in the hearts of those dedicate it. Ps. li. 16, 17; lxvi. 18; cxlv. 18; Matt. xviii. 20; John iv. 20, 21, 23; Heb. x. 22; 1 Pet. ii. 5.

—In Old Testament times God concealed himself in thick darkness, for men could not behold his dazzling glory and live. But afterward, "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." The glory which in its fullness men could not behold in the temple and live, they could safely gaze upon in the face of Christ—and when they saw it, they were sure to live. Is. xl. 5; Matt. xvii. 1, 2: John i. 14, 29; viii. 28; xii. 23; 1 Pet. ii. 24; 2 Pet. i. 16, 17.

be obtained at the earliest date practicable. Until this is done or a more reliable income to meet inevitable expenses in some way provided, the work of organization will be greatly hindered ,and it will be difficult, if not impossible, to so systematize our movements as to ensure the most speedy and desirable results. The simple fact that the National Christian Association has secured the occupancy, temporarily, of a head-quarters, by raising $10,000 for this work in these stringent times, has done more to inspire our allies with courage and dishearten our opponents than any other single event in our whole history, and on the day that our treasurer can produce vouchers for the whole $30,000, and spread upon the records a bona fide warrantee deed to the premises, that effect will be multiplied a thousand fold. To me it seems vital to our early success that this matter be speedily closed up, and I would urge upon every friend of reform to do what he can personally and to induce others to lend a helping hand.

THE AGENT'S WORK.

In connection with raising funds for the Publishing House interests. I have done something in the general work. During the year I have delivered 134 lectures and sermons in ten different States, attended eleven State meetings in ten different States, viz., New Hampshire, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, and two in Ohio. These State gatherings have usually been efficient, harmonious, and productive of much good. The attendance of delegates from abroad has not always been large, but local interest has uniformly secured good audiences. Owing to the large amount of territory canvassed by your General Agent during the year, and the distance intervening between places of holding conventions, his expenses have been somewhat increased above those of last year, while receipts from the field especially for the general work have not been correspondingly increased. This is not to be attributed however, to a want of interest or willingness on the part of the people to give, but is doubtless mainly due to the fact that contributions for the endowment fund have been first solicited. I have traveled by rail in the prosecution of my labors during the year 15,025 miles, or 5642 miles more than during the previous year.

I have collected in funds for the general work $623.86 or $7.94 less than in the preceding twelve months. My expenses for the entire year have been $680.05 or $286.59 in excess of those of last year and $56.19 in excess of the collections during the same period for the general work.

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE FUND.

During the year besides aiding in securing funds for local workers I have collected and passed over to the Treasurer of the Association in money and notes for the endowment fund, $5,144.00,for which I hold his receipts.

There are a number of items not included in the above, the principal of which is a donation of 180 acres of improved land worth at least $75 per acre or $13,500, by the Rev. Wm. Leuty of Ligonr ier, Indiana. This donation of land is located 126 miles east of this city on the air line of the Lake Shore Road and is secured to the N. C. A. by warrantee deed, signed by Bro.Leuty and wife. They reserving, however, the use and control of the property during his life, or until such time as they shall see fit to relinquish it to the Association. This valuable gift is the freewill offering of one who has been carefully observing the influence of Freemasonry and kindred orders in the church for years, and has become convinced that they are usurping the power of the church and controlling both the pulpit and the religious press to an alarming extent. He wishes his donations used with special reference to expelling this whole brood of secret robbers, which in his estimation are plundering the church of God and robbing the Bride of Christ of her precious jewels. This same brother has also given to the Association $1,200 in Northern Pacific R. R bonds, which are now on deposit with Henry Harrison, Esq., New York city, awaiting a favorable time to convert them into money.

Conditional donations of lands have also been received from Rev. George Clark of Oberlin and from Dr. J. A. Bingham of Ohio, from which it is presumable that $400 or $500 can be realized as soon as the matter can be properly looked after.

There are beside a number of bequests that have come to my knowledge in which parties have made provision for aiding in our work after their disease, amounting in all to not less then $10,000, and others are known to have the matter under favorable consideration. One gentleman writes from New York State, asking for information in making out the necessary papers and proposes to leave $500 for the Association at his death and the farther sum of $1,500 at the death of a friend.

I refer to these as instances of interest to every friend of our work, showing that God is moving upon the hearts of his servants and indicating his purpose to establish the National Christian Association and make it a chosen instrument, a mighty power for good in the world.

SECEDERS AND EXPOSITIONS.

There is every indication that the sentiments for which we contend are spreading with increased rapidity while the extreme rigor of the lodge-power is reluctantly unclasping its hold upon scores of its unwilling victims. The list of seceders grows longer and stronger, and men who two years ago seemed almost paralyzed with fear now utter their sentiments without reserve. One hundred and thirty-two who are yet living have sent in their names for enrollment and it is believed that as many more could soon be gathered by suitable effort.

Public exhibits of Masonry as it is, have proved a most effectual means of opening the eyes and awakening the interests of the people. Anti-secrecy clubs have been organized in a few instances for this purpose and where properly managed by competent persons they have helped to intensify the feeling of opposition, and created a healthy sentiment in the community.

Mr. Edmond Ronayne of this city and late Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, has at the solicitation of interested parties visited a number of towns and cities, East and West, during the year, and has been uniformly greeted by full house, and enthusiastic friends. His exhibitions of Masonry are undoubtedly correct, while the historical records and logical deductions by which they are interspersed are perfectly irresistible. He seems to be raised up and chosen of God to accomplish a work which but very few persons have either the ability or courage to undertake. Hitherto he has escaped without serious personal injury, although threats and imprecations have been unsparingly lavished upon him, some of which doubtless remain unexecuted only for want of a safe opportunity. Friends should endeavor to shield him from unnecessary exposure and pray that his "life may be hid with Christ in God."

POLITICAL.

As a body the N. C. A. is not sectarian in religion or political in its measures, nor is it neutral upon any question involving moral issues. It seeks to renovate society and purge out the leaven of hypocrisy by the unrestricted use of those agencies which God has ordained to this end, and hence as individual members of our commonwealth we are interested in whatever affects the body politic, and as individuals we meet the responsibilities of citizenship untrammeled by party ties.

Having said this much in explanation of our position, I may without being misunderstood add as a further indication of progress, that in several instances in local contest the issue has been squarely made between Masonry and Anti-masonry and in most cases with very encouraging results. In some places the secretists have been completely routed at the ballot-box and the offices of trust placed in the hands of men who were neither trained or sworn in the lodge to practice that partiality which must eventuate in the grossest injustice. It is the sacred duty of every Christian to seek the purity and peace of the civil administration, but should the church fulfill its whole mission in this regard it would not be thereby converted into a political compact; so each member of the N. C. A. may encourage and co-operate in political reforms without rendering the Association political in its character any more than were those primitive churches organized by the apostles. There is a broad field opening before us in this direction and it seems to me that we should not hesitate to give our hearty assent and active support as individuals, to those men who are seeking to relieve the civil administration from this terrible incubus of enforced secretism, and that we should heartily co-operate in all those measures which promise the speedy overthrow of this gigantic system of fraud.

PUBLICATIONS.

The department of Anti-masonic literature is deserving of more attention than the limits o this report will permit, and I would suggest that it be put in the hands of a committee, to report at as early a date to this convention as practicable. However much enthusiasm and interest may be awakened by the visits of a lecturer, it needs to be sustained and kept alive by the weekly visits of some paper bringing intelligence fresh from differene parts of the broad field already partially occupied and to diffuse the leaven and spread the light over new territory.

In closing this report, permit me to congratulate the members of this Convention and the friends of pure religion and a republican State throughout the country, for the results that you have already seen. But let us remember that the work is still in its infancy. The past is secured, but its benificent effects can only be perpetuated, and ultimate and complete victory realized, by the blessing of God upon our united efforts, contributions and prayers. It is my fervent prayer that a spirit of unanimity, forbearance and brotherly kindness may so prevade our entire body, that we shall exhibit at all times the fruits of the Holy Spirit: "Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law."

J. P. STODDARD,
General Agent N. C. A.

NATIONAL REFORM:——The Centennial Convention of the National Reform Association met in Philadelphia on the 28th and 29th of June.

There are about 200 associations represented in the National body, located principally in Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New York and the New England States, a majority of which sent delegates to the Convention.

The Convention opened on Wednesday evening, Hon. Felix R. Brunot, President of the Association, calling to order. Rev. Dr. Miner of Oshkosh, Wis., was temporary chairman. Addresses were made by Rev. John A. Todd, D. D., of Tarrytown, N. Y., by Mr. Brunot and Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., of Pittsburgh.

On the second day Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., of Pittsburgh, Dr. R. McAyeal of Iowa, Prof. Johnson, colored, of Alabama, Drs. A. A. Miner, E. R. Craven, and others took an active part in making addresses or urging plans for the promotion of reform in government.

The Committee on Resolutions presented a platform in seven sections, each of which was taken up, discussed separately and adopted.

The platform expresses concurrence with the views set forth in the resolution adopted by Congress in 1778, and reiterated by Washington and others, that "true religion and good morals are the only solid foundations of public liberty and happiness;" appeals for a "National accountability to God;" rejoices in repeated acknowledgments of the Saviour, made by Congress, Presidents, Governors of States, in proclamations and resolutions, and rejoices that the Bible in the schools and the Sabbath laws show a connection between the government and Christianity.

Ronayne Corroborated.

The following note was sent to Mr. Ronayne through the mail during the Convention week, and singularly substantiates the expositions in Farwell Hall. All who have heard the third degree will recollect the roll-call of the laborers about the temple in the farce of of Hiram Abiff:

JUNE 23rd, 1876.

DEAR SIR:—I inclose a copy of names I found in a drawer of a table used in a room in common by Masonic and other societies. The original, which I keep, is in the handwriting of a man who was then the Master of the Masonic lodge. Not knowing what it was, I slipped it into my pocket-book, and last night learned it was the roll-call. As this was made out since you were expelled, it will serve to remind you that though you are lost (Masonically-speaking,) they do business in pretty much the same way.

I copy verbatim.

A TRAVELER.

News of the Week.

—Senator Morrill has accepted the appointment of Secretary of War, and the Governor of Maine has tendered the vacant seat in the Senate to Mr. Blaine.

—By continued removals the President seems to have sold himself to the whiskey-ring politicians, and can brook no officer who has shown integrity in prosecuting that gigantic fraud.

WASHINGTON, July 6th—The Senate at twelve o'clock resumed the consideration of the articles of impeachment against W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. After the witnesses for the prosecution were called, only three of whom—E. T. Bartlett, C. P. Morse, and E. M. Lanton—answered, Mr. Manager Lynde opened the case on the part of the prosecution by reviewing the legislation and orders issued from the foundation of the Government to the present, to show that the strictest care had been continually exercised to protect the soldier in his relations and supplies. He then recited the testimony relating to the transactions between Belknap, Mr. and Mrs. Marsh, and Evans. He said that if the managers succeeded in proving the payment of the sum of money to Belknap, the court must convict him. Some six or eight witnesses, including Caleb H. Marsh, answered to their names, and were sworn.

—A terrible storm visited Dubuque, Ia., and neighborhood on the 4th, rain falling in great volume for three consecutive hours. All the bridges on wagon roads and railroads at the place are swept away, and no trains can arrive or depart for several days. Rockdale, two miles from Dubuque, was inundated at night, while the storm was raging, by the breaking away of a milldam. Every building in the place was swept away except the mill, and the occupants were carried away and drowned. After the storm abated nineteen dead bodies of men, women and children were picked up, and twenty-three persons are missing. The loss of life is said by later news to be 46. The storm extended over most of Central Iowa, and terrific in its effect. In Warren and Madison counties fifteen persons were killed and great damage was done to live stock and the corn.

—Muggins Taylor, a scout of General Gibbon, arrived at Stillwater, Montana Territory, on the night of the 1st, and reported that Gen. Custer on the 25th, of June found the Indian camp of two thousand lodges on the Little Horn, and immediately attacked it, charging the thickest part of the camp with five companies. Nothing is known of the operations of this detachment, except their course as traced by the dead. Major Reno, commanding seven other companies, attacked the lower part of the camp, The Indians poured a murderous fire from all directions.

General Custer, his two brothers, his nephew and his brother-in-law were all killed, and not one of his detachment escaped. Two hundred and seven men were buried in one place. The number of killed is three hundred and fifteen, and the wounded thirty-one. The Indians surrounded Major Reno's command and held them one day in the hills cut off from water, until General Gibbon's command came in sight, when they broke camp in the night and left. The Indian loss cannot be estimated, as they bore off most of their killed. The Indian camp was from three to four miles long, and was twenty miles up the Little River Horn from its mouth. The Indians actually pulled men from their horses in some instances. Further reports confirm the horrible news and show that the campaign on the hostile Sioux was well planned, and that the disaster was brought on by Gen. Custer in exceeding his orders and rashly attacking a large body of well armed savages with a small force.

A dispatch to the London News from Belgrade says it is reported that the Pasha in command at Widden has seized 500 of the principal inhabitants, and threatened to execute them if that district rises. It is said that the Turks are hanging teachers and professors everywhere. It is reported that a priest has been crucified near Philippolis.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its anthor, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powful in argnmt. 425 pagenes,

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicongrapher, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.
BY JEREMY L. CROSS, Grand Lecturer.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Author, Containing all the Emblems explained in the Degrees of entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason. Designed and arranged agreeably to the Lectures.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contribnted and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of qnotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry,

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing ab out the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts.

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fnnd a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribntion of these tracts has alrcady saved hnndreds of young men from the lodge, bnt there is a great lack of funds to snpply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

Dnring the year ending Jnly 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosnre Tracts were gratuitously sent ont, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who wonld be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

SELLING RIGHTEOUSNESS FOR VOTES.

"What shall we pay for the German vote?" Under this caption the New York Witness gives some sensible and well timed comments upon a recent article in the Chicago Tribune virtually bidding for the German vote in behalf of the Republican party in the coming Presidential contest. Says the Tribune in the article commented on :—

"There will be no difficulty, indeed, in holding the full German vote throughout the country if the party can give reasonable assurance of the continued reform movements that have distinguished the latter part of General Grant's administration, and if the various local party managers will simply refuse to admit temperance and Sabbatarian questions into national politics, where they do not belong."

Upon this the Witness remarks;

"In reference to the last clause of the sentence quoted, we should like to know why the temperance and Sabbath questions should be banished from national politics? The answer that it would propitiate the German population and rally them to the Republican standard is really no answer at all. If the liquor traffic is a national evil and disgrace, which tens of thousands of our people admit and deplore, why not prohibit it? If the divinely-appointed Sabbath rest is a necessity of human nature, a blessing to the community and a privilege highly esteemed by millions in this broad land, why not sustain it by all means in our power? Why fear to wage war against the greatest foe and scourge to humanity and the Republic? Why fail to defend a cherished institution because, forsooth, the German lager-beer devotees threaten to withdraw from the ranks? We do not dispute the right of the Germans to hold their opinions, but American Republicans have also a right to theirs, and will certainly be loath to submit to dictation in this matter from any quarter. If we are not greatly mistaken, the rank and file of the Republican party will think twice before sacrificing principle to party expediency."

Further on the Witness continues :—

"Our readers will mark, however, that these questions are tabooed for fear of offending Germans. We think it more likely that the Germans themselves will bring up such questions. We have labored under the impression that the Sabbath and temperance, as related thereto, were tampered with by Germans and not Americans; that the former are the aggressors and the latter on the defensive. Germans, like other foreigners, are accorded a home and a welcome here, but they no sooner set foot on the soil than they deliberately set about ignoring and wounding the feelings of the better class of their American fellow citizens by introducing customs which conflict, to some extent, with the laws of their adopted country. Many thought that a sense of delicacy would in time prevail to such an extent as to win a respect for the law. Nothing of the kind. They did not even think it worth while to set about repealing the law, but thought it more dignified and becoming to ignore it. When any of our citizens for their own self-protection ventured to support this supremacy of American law, these people cried them down as intolerant and fanatical when really the intolerance was all the other way."

—Friend Dorcas of Shiloh, Iowa, has just returned home from a trip East after our anniversary. On visiting the Centennial Exposition he called on Elder Freeman and writes thus of the satisfaction it gave him: "I had the pleasure of seeing Bro. Freeman at the Centennial. I am satisfied that he is the right man for the place, and it would be well for the cause could he continue. He is able, bold, candid, decided, efficient, faithful, never admitting for a moment that he is mistaken about the nature of Freemasonry. He should remain if possible."

Centennial Ode.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

[Sung at the Fourth of July Celebration at the Academy of Music, New York.]

Through storm and calm the years have led
Our nation on from stage to stage
A century's space, until we tread
The threshold of another age.

We see there o'er our pathway swept,
A torrent stream of blood and fire;
And thank the ruling power who kept
Our sacred league of States entire.

Oh! checkered train of years, farewell,
With all thy strifes and hopes and fears;
But with us let thy memories dwell,
To warn and lead the coming years.

And thou, the new beginning age,
Warned by the past and not in vain,
Write on a fairer, whiter page
The record of thy happier reign.

Propagation of Freemasonry.

BY D. B. TURNEY.

The plea that Washington was a Freemason, is one very popular Masonic argument. It leads men who are apt to reflect at random and approve at a venture, to jump at the conclusion that Freemasonry is therefore a good institution. Well, Washington was also a slave-holder. Is slavery to be justified upon the plea that Washington owned slaves? A fair answer is all that we ask. The proof that Washington finally seceded from the Masonic order has been produced again and again. It is well known that Andrew Jackson regarded him as a seceding Mason, and Washington himself declared that he had not attended a lodge more than "once or twice in thirty years." He called the ceremonies of the fraternity, "mere child's play," and represented himself as "thoroughly ashamed" of that order, and yet he is eulogized by Masons as "the patron, the ornament, the pride of our fraternity," and miserable pictures of the old General decked out in lodge regalia are hanging from the walls of many houses; and Freemasons sometimes sing :

"Faith views the soul, released from mortal care,
Through spheres empyreal its blest course pursue,
"Till it the lodge of perfect light attain;
There may we meet our WASHINGTON again."

But is it true that the shallow pretense that Washington was a patron of Freemasonry, has assisted in the spread of the order? Yes, it is true. As Seed says, ""Trifles light as air,' often tried in the balance and found wanting, sink as deeply in unfurnished minds, and make as much impression there, as arguments of a solid nature; like feathers descending in a void with a force and velocity equal to that of much more substantial and massy bodies."

The friends of the Masonic order by sarcastic sneers at the opposition to Freemasonry, beget a prejudice against a full and fair investigation of the subject. Prejudice is a decision rendered before making any examination, and is apt to be unreasonable and unjust, as well as a bar to all subsequent information.

"Qui statuit aliquid, parte inaudita altera,
Æquum licet statuerit, haud æquus fuerit."—SENECA.

When a mind has been warped by prepossessions, free inquiry is impossible, and the merits of the Anti-masonic movement are not appreciated. As Harris says: "Whenever there is a secret bias of mind previously formed, it will catch readily at every little incident and appearance to increase its own propension; and turn every current of observation into its own corrupt channel." To assume the propriety and benevolence of an order which they have never taken the pains to inquire into, seems to be a very easy matter with some people. They adopt and endorse practices, the grounds and foundation of which they have never examined and know nothing about. Hence, if the Freemasons can make the impression that their order is persecuted and defamed by the American party, this impression will cultivate the approval of many men who know nothing whatever about the institution, and will greatly assist in spreading the lodges. It is my experience at least, that the totally ignorant, or but partially informed, have less reluctance about hazarding a favorable opinion of Freemasonry, than those who know more on the subject. This is the real state of the case, so far as my experience extends.

The plea of benevolence is another very taking trap. This plea is urged with a warmth that verges upon enthusiasm. Yet the halt, the blind, the feeble, etc., are carefully excluded from this order. After making a strict selection of persons least likely to need any assistance of a benevolent kind, the order trumpets out wonderful accounts of how charitable it is. It is all bosh. This boasted charity is the mere payment of insurance dues, on the worst and most disgraceful system of insurance ever invented—a system that borders the selfishness of Laockta, who would not divide a biscuit with a starving child. I shall not now try to lay bare the arcana of the craft, in the matter of its provision for widows and orphans, except to say that the churches in Illinois alone have done more for these classes of the destitute than has been done by the Masonic order of the whole United States. Yet, this plea, this shallow plea, has induced many to become Freemasons.

The plea of superior light is also urged to good effect among the people. A wish to participate in the secrets and privileges of an order that professes to have so many stores of wisdom to impart, has led more than one promising young man to vow blind compliance and concealment under the guard of heavy penalties. The order wishes to deprive the lame, the blind, the afflicted, etc., of the light of its wonderful advantages; but it will impart them, for a pecuniary consideration, to the sound and able-bodied, on a compliance with certain terms of initiation and enthrallment. All who are received swear in advance to conceal certain things that are about to be communicated to them, before they have it in their power to know the nature and tendency of the forthcoming secrets, Such an obligation, concerning unknown things, is in itself immoral. Lev. v. 4. The administration, reception, or support, of such an extra-judicial oath, is clearly unlawful. It requires a man to answer a matter before he hears it. Prov. xviii. 13, xxix. 24. It is not necessary for me to enter formally into the work of proving that the requirements of Freemasonry are incompatible with the great laws of religion and of civil society. This has been done by others, to whom all who wish proof may have access. It is certain, however, that the vile and base doctrine, that "the end justifies the means," will always be a feature of Freemasonry. See Abbe Barruel's history of Jacobinism, vol. 3, New York edit. 1853, pp. 61, 93, and 183; also, Professor Robison's proofs of a conspiracy against the religions and governments of Europe, carried on in the secret meetings of Freemasons, Illuminati, &c., Philadelphia edit., pp. 42, 72, 75, 83, 342, etc. The Abbe Barruel clearly proves, "that irreligion and unqualified liberty and equality are the genuine and original secrets of Freemasonry, and the ultimatum of a regular progress through all its degrees." And Professor Robison declares, "the Mason lodges in France were the hotbeds, where the seeds were sown and tenderly reared, of all the pernicious doctrines which soon after choked every moral or religious cultivation, and have made the society worse than a waste, have made it a noisome marsh of human corruption filled with every rank and poisonous weed." And again: "Germany has experienced the same gradual progress from religion to atheism, from decency to dissolute ness, and from loyalty to rebellion, which had its course in France. And I must now add, that this progress has been effected in the same manner, and by the same means, and that one of the chief means of seduction has been the lodges of Freemasons." Both Barruel and Robison clearly prove that Freemasonry was the fatal source to which these bitter and destructive streams are to be traced. Barruel; vol. 3, pp. 12 (note), 91, 136, etc. Robison, pp. 15, 165, 343. M. Le France. "La Voile Retiree," pp. 11, 38, 41, 52, 87, 152, &c, So, it seems, this pretended venerable and ancient fraternity is banded with infidels and atheists in a long preconcerted plan to destroy and subvert the religion of Christ, which ultimatum is hidden from lower degree Masons who do not favor this. I doubt not that it will strike some Freemasons with horror, not unmingled with surprise, to hear such an accusation brought against their fraternity!; yet "it is sufficiently in proof that the founders of different conspiracies, aware of the secrecy permitted to the proceedings of the fraternity of Masons, have assumed that character, and availed themselves of the credit given that institution. in order to render the tendency and the progress of their own abominable machinations undetected." See the "Universal Masonic library, vol. iv." New York edit. 1855, p. 78 of part 2. Any well informed Freemason will confess the fact. "All of those corrupt conspiracies made open professions of obedience to the civil powers, against which they were plotting, claiming the welfare of the country as their most happy object; yet treason and assassination were hatched in their lodges." —M. Le Franc. It would be easy to quote voluminous testimony on this point.

The propagation of Freemasonry is to be viewed with dread. It entraps the unwary with false claims of antiquity, virtue and benevolence; yet the design and genius of the order are opposed to Christianty, its charities are selfish, and many good men have renounced and denounced it—some of them doing so on their death-beds. Here is a very conclusive argument:

1. That which is essentially evil in tendency should be prohibited by law.

2. The oaths and obligations required in Freemasonry are essentially evil in tendency.

3. Therefore, the oaths and obligations required in Freemasonry should be prohibited by law.

This is a syllogism that Freemasons are not very willing to discuss. Whenever they undertake to deny the minor premise, they will be confronted with the oaths and obligations given in Ronayne's hand-book; but if they assert that the oaths there represented are wrong, then they will be bound to show wherein they are not rightly and correctly given. This is fatal to them, as they dare not deny Ronayne's expose.

A Tribute to Washington.

[From the Centennial "Fourth of July" Address of Hon. Chas. Francis Adams, at Taunton, Mass.]

One of the strongest muniments to save us from all harm, it gives me pride to remind you of, especially on this day—I mean the memory of the example of Washington.

Whatever misfortune may betide us, of one thing we may be sure, that the study of that model by the rising youth of our land can never fail to create a sanative force, potent enough to counteract every poisonous element in the political atmosphere.

Permit me for a few minutes to dwell upon this topic, for I regard it as closely intertwined with much of the success we have hitherto enjoyed as an independent people. Far be it from me to raise a visionary idol. I have lived too long to trust in mere panegyric. Fulsome eulogy of any man raises with me only a smile. Indiscriminate laudation is equivalent to falsehood. Washington, as I understand him, was gifted with nothing ordinarily defined as genius, and he had not had great advantages of education. His intellectual powers were clear, but not much above the average men of his time. What knowledge he possessed had been gained from association with others in his long public career, rather than by secluded study. As an actor he scarcely distinguished himself by more than one brilliant stroke; as a writer, the greater part of his correspondence discloses nothing more than average, natural good sense; and on the field of battle his powers pale before the splendid strategy of Napoleon Bonaparte.

Yet, notwithstanding all these deductions, the thread of his life from youth to age displays a maturity of judgment, a consistency of principle, a steadiness of action, a discriminating wisdom, and a purity of purpose hardly found united to the same extent in any other instance I can recall in history. Of his entire disinterestedness in all his pecuniary relations with the public, it is needless for me to speak. More than all and above all, he was always master of himself. If there be one quality more than another in his character which may exercise a useful control over the men of the present hour, it is the total disregard of self, when in the most elevated positions for influence and example. In order to more fully illustrate my position, let me for one moment contrast his course with that of the great military chief whom I have already named. The star of Napoleon was just rising to its zenith as that of Washington passed away. In point of military genius Napoleon probably equaled, if he did not excel, any person known in history. In regard to the direction of the interests of a nation, he may have occupied a very high place. He inspired an energy and a vigor in the veins of the French people, which they sadly needed after the demoralizing sway of centuries of Bourbon kings. With even a smaller modicum of the wisdom so prominent in Washington, he too might have left a people to honor his memory down to the latest times. But it was not to be. Do you ask the reason? It is this: his motives of action always centered in self. His example gives a warning, but not a guide.

For when selfishness animates a ruler there is no cause of surprise if he sacrifice, without scruple, an entire generation of men as a holocaust to the great principle of evil, merely to maintain or extend his sway. Had Napoleon copied the example of Washington, he would have been the idol of all later generations in France. For Washington to have copied the example of Napoleon would have been simply impossible.

Let us, then, discarding all inferior strife, hold up to our children the example of Washington as the symbol, not merely of wisdom, but of purity and truth.

Let us labor continually to keep the advance in civilization, as it becomes us to do after the struggles of the past, so that the rights to life, to liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which we have honorably secured, may be firmly entailed upon the ever enlarging generations of mankind.

And what is it, I pray you tell me, has brought us to the celebration of this most memorable day. Is it not the steady cry of excelsior up to the most elevated of those regions of political purity, secured to us by the memory of those who have passed before us and consecrated the very ground occupied by their ashes? Gloriously indeed may it be said in the words of the poet:

What's hallow'd ground? 'Tis what gives birth
To sacred thoughts in souls of worth.
Peace! Independence! Truth! go forth
Earth's compass round;
And your high priesthood shall make earth
All hallow'd ground

Extracts from an Address at the Funeral of Mrs. J. P. Stoddard.

In his sermon on that sad occasion Rev. Mr. Beekman said:

Mrs. Stoddard, with her intense nature, had also something of the separateness of the old prophets, whose writings she enjoyed with a keen appreciation, giving them a practical application to current history. These meditations on the Old Testament were a perpetual stimulus to her principles of reform, for, true to her lineage, she was born a reformer, and laid the line of that measure over every mind she could reach.

She thought for herself, and was positive in her convictions; her will being firmly set in whatever course she had determined, and so the practical result of her thought often occasioned criticism, but the question, so habitual with her, "What is God's will?" showed a conscientious endeaver after an exact obedience to that will, and that led her out in storm and cold, whenever and wherever it might seem God's pleasure she should go. And so her place in the sanctuary and prayer room was seldom vacant. She made this attendance a matter of principle, both with herself and for all her children, feeling an increased responsibility for them in the almost constant absence of her husband; and her participation in the services of prayer and song was with great intelligence and edification.

In Sunday school work she also found her place, and as a visitor from house to house, pressing the claims of the Gospel by direct address, encouraging neighbors and strangers to come to the house of God, and aiding her pastor by the ministry of song, and prayer, and reading the word, and Christian sympathy and counsel among the sick and the poor.

Her appreciation of Gospel privileges had in it a keen relish that led her to speak of this or that service that had proved a blessing to her. She brought a hunger and want to the sanctuary that looked for a blessing, and her faith was rewarded through such instrumentalities as God provided, grasping also such aids of private friendship as were helpful in establishing her Christian life. And this appreciation was not a momentary impulse, but an abiding force that led to the election of the spiritual element in every interest. When her home, to which she was so peculiarly attached, was burned, she accepted the Providence in absolute submission; and probably the last lines her fingers ever traced was in these words:

"Write more of the life words to me, please, sister, I love them the best."

Such are some marks of a life original, unique, to which no verbal outline does justice. A life whose sympathies and endeavors were, in such large measure, absorbed in obeying the word of Christ, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," and the last outgoing of whose impulses was in harmony with what she thought her duty, and in a tender remembrance of her now motherless babe.

We believe that when the divine test is applied to some popular deliverances called sermons, their chemical properties will be found largely to consist of human wisdom, and this again to have "philosophy and vain deceit" as its chief parts. Rites and ceremonies from the ages purified by modern civilization may sound fine in young ears, but, alas! we fear it is an echo from the Master of the lodge, and not from Christ, the Lord who has all power in heaven and in earth.

THE NINTH NATIONAL CONVENTION.

REPORT OF THE CONVENTION IN FARWELL HALL, CHICAGO, JUNE 20 TO 22.—ADDRESSES, RESOLUTIONS, REPORTS AND DISCUSSIONS.

Address of President H. H. George, D. D.

It is important in ever y discussion of this kind to mark clearly the distinction between individual and organic character. It is not seldom that attempts are made to ward off the force of arguments against secret fraternities, by pointing to eminent Christian characters as members, by citing ministers of the Gospel, and Doctors of Divinity, who rank high in church connections, as distinguished members of the lodge. While such illusions may be true in point of fact, it must be borne in mind they have no weight in determining the organic character of such institutions. The answer is illogical, the allusion is not germane. It is a well known fact, confirmed by all history that some very good men have been found in very bad places.

Even ministers of the Gospel have been hoodwinked into delusive connections, and Doctors of Divinity have been led blindfold into such relations as have dishonored their Christian standing. Every organization must rest upon the basis of its own constitution. By these it must be tried, by these stand or fall, whether the men who compose it be bad or good. We have therefore no quarrel with individuals connected with secret orders. For many of these we have a high personal regard.

But when men unite in a body, bind themselves into an organic capacity, frame their basis of union and project their plans that must deeply affect the welfare of society, then it is their organic character becomes a proper subject of investigation, and their aims and objects a legitimate subject of enquiry. We do not ignore the fact that the ends proposed by secret societies have some show of laudability, but were these proposals genuine they would not prevent a scrutinizing examination of their fundamental principles. As the end cannot sanctify the means, it matters not for what purpose men band together, how high and noble and philanthropic the aims they propose; if it be found their association rests upon principles dishonoring to God and hurtful to society, true, God-fearing men must all be found in due time lifting up a bold, earnest and uncompromising protest against them. It is not out of place to state here what is so distinctly recognized by all who are interested in this movement, that it is one pre-eminently Christian. We stand where we do because as we read the life of the Savior of men we understand this is where he stood. In secret he said nothing. We understand the Scriptures unequivocal in their testimonies against any and every such order of secrecy as exists in our day. And were we silent we would feel we were recreant to the trust committed to us.

There are two things of priceless worth to every genuine Christian: the first of infinite worth is Christ himself, his name, his nature, his attributes, truth and honor, "Whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee." Next to Christ himself is the church which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all. "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

These two priceless objects are ignored, disregarded and dishonored by secret fraternities. Among the many objections that may be laid against such orders, the two that are paramount to all others, that overshadow all others, are: first, that they disown and dishonor the Lord Jesus that died on calvary our guilty world to save, and second, they do incalculable damage to his body, the church.

These two propositions we propose to prove. 1st, These associations, and especially Masonry, are Christless. Let their own witnesses furnish the proof. In their boasted Bible readings that form a part of their so-called religious services, the quintessence of religion, the sina qua non, viz: the name of Jesus is designedly omitted. Daniel Sickels in his Monitor, p. 57, and Robert Morris' Monitor, p. 162, both standard authorities, quote from 2 Thess., iii. 6-17; and write verbatim the inspired text with two exceptions, viz: when the name of Christ occurs; from the 6th verse the words, "in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ," and 12th verse the words, "by our Lord Jesus Christ," are omitted.

Is it unjust to pronounce Christless that organization that purposely takes the name of Jesus, by which alone we are saved, out of his own inspired word; that is ashamed of that name, that barters it way for the favor of those whohate it? Among the last things recorded in this inspired volume are the burning words of scathing denunciation: "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophesy God shall take away his part out of the book of life and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." No less true of an organization than a man. Can such profane multilation, such heaven-daring sacrilege be characterized by less than Christless, Christ-dishonoring and Christ-crucifying? It would be impossible to exaggerate such a crime.

The heathen who has never heard of the name may be pardoned for not writing it upon their by-laws, even the Jew who actually crucified him may be overlooked for writing his name off their records, but for pretended Christians to expunge that name, to erase it from that word where he put it himself, is crime not to be characterized, and quite unpardonable.

Not only from their Bible extracts have they unvaryingly left out this blessed name but as studiously have they avoided it in all their authorized formulas of prayer. While Christ himself has said "No man cometh unto the Father but by me," and again, "Whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name I will give it you." Masonic authority has omitted that name in prayer.

I cannot do better then repeat in your hearing a formula of prayer used at Masonic funerals, see Webb's Monitor, p. 144. "Most glorious God, author of all good, and giver of all mercy, pour down thy blessing upon us, and strengthen our solemn engagements with the ties of sincere affection. May the present instance of our mortality remind us of our approaching fate, and draw our attention toward thee, the only refuge in time of need, that when the awful moment shall arrive, that we are about to quit this transitory scene, the enlivening prospect of thy mercy may dispel the gloom of death, and after our departure hence in peace, and in thy favor, we may be received into thine everlasting kingdom, to enjoy, in unison with the souls of our departed friends, the just reward of a pious and virtuous life. Amen." A prayer that a Mormon, a Jew, a Swedenborgen, a Greek, a Mohammedan and any thing but a Christian could offer. It is a prayer with the Christian part left out. And on Bible principles I know of no shadow of a promise that it ever can be either heard or answered. As well expect the pagan form of the Hindoo written upon a wheel and turned by water to get an answer from heaven as a Masonic prayer if the name of Christ be designedly omitted. God has promised to answer any prayer in the name of his own Son. The institution that thus prostitutes an ordinance of Christ is characterized justly as not only negatively Christless, but positively Christ-dishonoring and Christ-crucifying. It wrests a holy ordinance from its sacred end and appointment, and prostitutes it to selfish and unhallowed purposes. What is it but a trampling underfoot the blood of the Son of God?

But a more direct and if possible fatal dishonor done to Christ is their complete ignoring of the merit of his obedience and sacrifice upon Calvary, their entire setting aside his atonement work, and substituting in place of it Masonic purity and holiness as the preparation for heaven. The Monitor again says (p. 23) "Masonry is a system, teaching symbolically piety, morality," etc., and p. 47 speaking of the common gavel says: "We as free and accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our minds and consciences of all vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our bodies as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands eternal in the heavens." When the Son of God had to die to fit men for heaven, what shall be said of an institution which leaving that fact wholly out of view, says the use of a little mallet is to fit our bodies for the house not made with hands. Says Robert McCoy, whose authority is undoubted in his Cyclopedia: "Let us then by our practice and conduct in life show that we carry our emblems worthily, and as children of light that we have turned our backs on works of darkness, obscenity and drunkenness, hatred and malice, Satan and his dominions, preferring benevolence, justice, temperance, chastity and brotherly love as the acceptable service on which the great Master of all from his beatitude looks down with approbation." That is, oblivious of the fact that there is a Christ, or that he died to atone for sinners, and render them acceptable to God, high Masonic authority makes charity, temperance, justice, etc., the acceptable service on which God looks down with approbation. In other words, it substitutes Masonic charity, justice, etc., for the crucifixion of Calvary.

Could they aim a more deadly blow at the very vitals of Christianity? Could they do more to upturn the Rock of Ages, misdirect the confidence of men and plant immortal hopes upon the yielding quicksands?

Albert Mackey says under the word "Acacia:" "It is a term derived from Akakia, innocence, and signifying a Mason, who by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin." While God has said without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin, standard Masonic authority contravenes that divine utterance, presumes a wisdom above God and says freedom from sin lies in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity.

The blank atheist who only goes a short step further, is not more fatally deceived than the man or organization that thus ignores the precious atonement work of our Lord Jesus Christ. "For there is no other name given under heaven nor among men whereby we can be saved, but the name of Jesus."

And yet more, almost in so many words they declare themselves Christless. The religion of Masonry (says Mackey, p. 402) is pure theism; and what is theism? A belief in God without a Christ; the Jew is a theist, the Mohammedan is a theist, the infidel may be a theist; everything but an atheist is a theist. And not only is Masonry a pure theism, but a theism, continues the same author, "on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions, but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge, or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry." That is, if a man should engraft on the theism of Freemasonry a Christian opinion or a belief in Christ, he must not introduce this into the lodge; or, stating same truth again, Christ or Christianity must not be introduced into the lodge. Is that an illogical deduction, is that unfair reasoning? If so let the Master Mason minister or the Royal Arch Doctor of Divinity show us the sophistry. If such Masonic officials preach such a theism from the pulpit, heaven forbid that success should attend their labors, for I dare to say they are only going forth with axes and hammers to break down the carved work of God's sanctuary.

But this so-called fraternity having ruled Christ out from their Scripture readings, their prayers, and their fundamental principles of belief, let us look at the morality they would substitute instead. If they reject heaven's name and plan for man's uplifting, we might fain expect they would project some other, with at least a show of goodness and morality. But how is it, with spacious pretences to benevolence and charity, they cut the race in two, and exclude the women-half from all their beneficies, then dividing and sub-dividing the other half, they rule out the lame, the halt, the blind, the idiot, the atheist and eunuch and extend their marvellous sympathies, and take into their wide arms of compassion the only objects that don't need it. Says Sickels, "The person who desires to be made a Mason, must be a man of sound body and mind, not deformed or dismembered, but hale and sound in his physical conformation, having his right limbs as a man ought to have." Says Mackey: "No atheist, eunuch or woman can be atmitted." A benevolent institution indeed! with doors all locked and barred against the very objects of charity, and thrown wide open to the hale and healthy and sound man, the only man fit to do without benevolence. How directly counter to the religion of Jesus that pours forth its sympathies to the poor, the wretched, the halt and the miserable.

But if their charities be limited, are they not morally just and upright? Let us see, one of their provisions is to exact an oath from members under the most horrid penalties to defend a brother craftman in any crime whatsoever. In the Master Mason's degree murder and treason are excepted in this defense, if the candidate elect so to do. It leaves it at his own option. If a brother craftsman has wilfully and maliciously imbued his hands in the blood of a fellow man, a helpless woman or innocent children, and the candidate chooses to defend the murderer, screen him, lie or swear him out of his crime, Masonic law says Amen. But in the Royal Arch degree, the candidate swears a most cruel oath to assist a companion in any difficulty, and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, if in his power, whether he be right or wrong." Here murder and treason are not excepted. Whether or no and without any option here, the candidate must defend him right or wrong. If the institution had been as old as the crucifixion on Calvary, and the Pharisees and Roman soldiers who drove the spikes into the hands and feet of the Son of God had been Royal Arch Masons, the candidate of this degree would have been bound by oath to defend them in that act,to swear they didn't do it. I suppose those Roman soldiers who guarded his sepulchre must have been Royal Arch Masons how swore that some man came and stole his body while they slept.

The higher the candidate ascends in the sublime degrees, the nearer he approaches the celestial lodge above, the more he is allowed no option, but under horrid penalties and oaths, he must defend a brother no matter in whatever crime. This is the morality that fits bodies to be living stones in the house not made with hands. We have not so learned the preparation process for that upper house.

But if the justice of the order might be questioned, is it not of high toned purity? Masonic chastity binds the candidate to purity and virtue so far as a brother Mason's wife, sister, daughter or mother are concerned, but further than that, there is no law.

If chastity be violated beyond this limit, the punishment if inflicted must be by some other court than the lodge; to this it is no offense. Drunkenness is practically no barrier, provided the drunkard can keep the secret. Ten thousand lies to keep the secret is only preparing for the grand lodge above. If Christ is dishonored by putting his name and religion wholly out of all forms, is he not more deeply wounded and more certainly crucified by the morality put in its place. And is it true that Christian men, and Christian ministers are sworn members of such fraternities? Whence comes it? Led on by what strange infatuation? Are they ignorant? Do they not know what they do? If so, Father forgive them.

One of the mysteries hard to be explained is that intelligent and apparently Christian men and even ministers can be so deceived, so far hoodwinked and so totally blindfolded as to be persuaded to write up the name of Jesus with one hand and write it down with the other; preach salvation to sinners only through the name and merit of Christ and at the same time be bound, fettered and fastened by wicked oaths to that that knows no Christ, crucifies him and tramples underfoot his atoning blood. But so it is and God alone can show them their stupendous inconsistency.

But as I have said the next object nearest the Christian's heart is Christ's body, the church, and like as they dishonor Christ the head, so it can be demonstrated that they do damage to his church.

Time will not permit to furnish much more than a skeleton of the argument on this point.

And first they undermine the church by feigning a religion of their own. In theory and in practical effect they are a rival of the church They claim a religion for themselves. They read the Bible in a Masonic way, they pray, they baptize and they pretend a communion service. What i called the fifth libation in the Knight Templars is wine drank from a human skull in imitation of the holy communion. And in the Knights of the Holy Sepulchre the sacrament is actually administered in this manner. A short prayer begins when the seven candidates all kneel at the foot of the altar. The prelate takes the bread and says: "Brethren, eat ye all of this bread in love, that ye may learn to support each other." He then takes the cup and says: "Drink ye all of this cup to ratify the vow that ye have made and learn to sustain one another." Christ's dying institution imitated in the lodge room for Masonic support!!

What is intended by such services, if not to feign a religion? Why were they invented unless to satisfy the cravings of the immortal soul for religion and how natural the effect in the minds of thousands who assert that Masonry is as good a religion as they want. If required to renounce either the church or Masonry, how many in their immeasurable deception cling to the mock service and give up the true, release the Barabbas, and cry, "Away with the Christ, crucify him, crucify him!"

Can the church have a more deadly enemy in the world than one that steals its very livery to rob it of its members. That filches from its sacred rites, gilds over the skeleton form and ensnares those who otherwise might give their names, their strength and influence to the church. It is a notorious fact that only a small proportion of the members of these fraternities are church members, or ever come into the church. And why should they if they belong to another institution that has marked out another way to a lodge above. Sure I am that the lodge above is not the Christian's heaven, for the lodge road leads not to such a heaven, and the church's road leads not to such a lodge above. Deplorable it is beyond expression that enough of Christian men and even Christian ministers should have enlisted in this enemies camp to make it as respectable as it is, and to so cover over its ghastly deformity as to deceive a multitude of unwary souls that ought to be in the church. Can it be possible that such ministers are contributing their influence to the deluding and damning of immortal souls the church is instituted to save? On them must rest a fearful responsibility for souls abducted from the church and lost in the chimera of darkness. But they damage the church by bringing her members into bosom fellowship with the very worst of characters. Church members come to the house of God to hear the name of Jesus preached, they go to the lodge where it dare not be named. In the Lord's sanctuary they pray to Christ and sing his praises; in the lodge they league with Jews, infidels, pagans and crucifiers of Christ. They sit down around the Lord's table in the church, and partake of the bread and wine symbols of Christ's own appointment. In the lodge room they drink of the cup of devils.

They commune in the church with members of the family of God, friends and lovers of the church. In the lodge they plot and scheme and plan in secret conclave with such as would blot the church out of existence. Says the Monitor: "The distant Chinese, the wild Arab, and the American savage will embrace a brother Briton, and know that beside the common ties of humanity there is still a stronger obligation to indulge him to kind and friendly offices."

Commune one day in the holy house of God and the next with Chinese, wild Arabs, savages and Jews, and we might add drunkards, and blasphemers, and murderers, and every other ungodly character found on earth not guilty of the unpardonable sin of disobedience or contumacy against Masonic authority. Is there any fellowship between light and darkness; Christ and Belial? Can a man take fire in his bosom and not be burned? Whatever may result from such a hermaphrodite attempt to join light and darkness together one thing must unmistakably follow; the church will be crippled by lowering her standard o personal holiness to a compromise with heathen fellowship.

But the fraternities injure the church by clogging the wheels of her machinery. Oath-bound Masons clique together in the church to create strife, to defeat healthy discipline, to harbor evil, to break down law, and to subserve the most sacred institution of heaven to the unhallowed interests of the lodge. If the church do not in everything pander to the lodge, they are sworn to defend the lodge and fight the church. For example. Should a pastor holding views similar to mine, chance to have a few Masons in his charge (which by the way is not very likely) and should happen to drop a word about the evils of the institution, at once an earthquake begins to rumble; if the wound be deep enough wider and deeper will grow the agitation till the record is traced. Bro. A. B. is disjoined from his congregation because of unpleasant circumstances existing. A faithful minister did what in conscience he felt to be his duty, and the penalty is separation from his charge. God only can recount the church strifes the congregational desolations resulting from secret conspiracies. And countless more difficulties might be, if ministers had the backbone to do their duty; to come out themselves and order their people to come out from among them and to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

Nothing our movement needs to-day so much as a regenerated church; a church purged and purified from every vestige of secret corruption; a church emancipated and disenthralled from such entangling associations; freed from the worse than iron chains of secrecy; and withal a united church, presenting one bold, uncompromising front to this whole line of her most deadly and dangerous foes.

Should all the branches of the evangelical church unite to-day in a firm and unyielding covenant contract to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, to put clean away every such Christless and Christ-dishonoring thing and swear anew their loyalty to Jesus Christ, the only Law-giver and King of Zion; one grand feature of such a covenanted unity would be that God, from his holy habitation would look down in love upon his church, and pour out his Spirit like rain on mown-grass, or showers that water the earth.

Another glorious result would be that all these Christless organizations would be swept from the earth before the tremendous power of a united church as the floating spar is swept before the restless tide of a mighty ocean.

Still another sublime feature of such a united and regenerated church would be the forecasting of a brighter period in the future, the harbinger of a better day, the dawn of that era when all men everywhere, renouncing everything that dishonors or fails to honor the Lord Jesus Christ, shall write "Holiness to the Lord" upon their bodies and spirits, their names and estates, their time and talents, and all they are and hope to be.

Then, and then only shall men be blessed in the Lord Jesus Christ, and all the nations of the earth shall call him blessed.

Then shall be verified those sublime strains of the poet:

> One song employs all nations and all cry,
> Worthy is the Lamb for He was slain for us.
> The dwellers in the vales and in the rocks
> Shout to each other, and the mountain tops,
> From distant mountains catch the flying joy,
> Till nation after nation taught the strain,
> Earth rolls the rapturous hosanna round."

Addresses of Wednesday Afternoon, June 21.

REV. L. N. STRATTON,

On being introduced, said: It is well for us sometimes to go back to first principles. We need to look back and see whether we are remembering that for which we started, and especially in this glorious hundredth year of our national existence, we may appropriately look back and inquire into the principles on which is based the fair superstructure of our national polity. When we study the character of the people who established this nation, we behold them earnestly striving to secure the blessings of liberty to all the individuals thereof. For this grand purpose they declared themselves free from the enslaving power of the mother country; for this Washington drew his liberating sword, and the "ragged Continentals" struggled through poverty, and famine, the heat of Monmouth and the cold and privations of Valley Forge; for this they framed a constitution and laws under which we enjoy such a large measure of happiness.

Now, our opposition to secret societies is based on the ground that they are in nature and practice hostile to that personal liberty of the fathers.

He read an article from the Syracuse Journal describing the desperate and lawless character of the secret order of the Pennsylvania coal regions, the "Molly Maguires," and remarked on the connection of this order with Freemasonry and its certain doom if once the laws were enforced. The Syracuse Journal was represented as under Masonic management and this attack on the Mollies was regarded as an encouraging fact in connection with the reform. The investigations by the State Legislatures of Massachusetts, New York and Rhode Island forty-five years ago were sufficient proof of the connection of Masonry with secret orders of the Pennsylvania coal mines, and of the Ku-klux or White League of the South. The speaker had examined the records of the New York and Rhode Island Legislatures. In the latter are found the Masonic oaths testified to before the Legislative Committee. In the New York records like facts are found in the report of the Fort Ann trials to the State Senate. There are also to be found three proclamations by Gov. De Witt Clinton, directed against the conspirators in the Morgan case. Lieut-governor Pitcher recommended an investigation of the painful statements concerning the abduction; and an officer with special powers of attorney for the State was appointed by vote of both branches of the Legislature; and there were spent in these investigations and the trials that followed them some $25,000 to $30,000. Wendell's Supreme Court Reports give the facts as brought out in these trials with the Masonic oaths as sworn to in them. Rob Morris says that 45,000 Masons gave up their Masonry, and 1,500 lodges, three-fourths of all that were in existence at the time, went down. This shows that the trouble was with the order itself, and not with the abduction of Morgan alone. And we know that the system of Freemasonry was responsible for the murder, also, because its obligations sanctioned the taking of human life. Would all Methodist or Presbyterian churches be held guilty if a member of some one Methodist or Presbyterian church should commit murder? No; unless when we examine their creeds we find that the sanction to commit murder is in them. Suppose a man takes a Masonic oath; if now he does what he holds to be duty must he not keep that oath? we are asked. Yes, so long as his conscience is defiled with his Masonic ways he is under restraint to keep his oath. But if he repents of his folly, enters into the life and light of Christ, who is the truth, cannot the testimony of such a man be believed regarding Masonry? If not, why then do the courts take the evidence of the Molly Maguires in a similar case. Myron Smith, a tall, strong young man, a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church stood up in our State Convention held in Syracuse, and testified of the truth of the revelations of the lodge now published.

The speaker referred to the initiation in public by Mr. Ronayne in Syracuse, and an article by a Mr. Moon, in the Syracuse Journal, proclaiming his disgust at the initiation and reproaching Mr. Ronayne and the Anti-masons for their indecencies, when all the time his quarrel was with the lodge.

Masonry effects our politics far more than many suppose, perhaps than we do ourselves. In a certain village in New York, a case had come under his observation where a capable man against whom there was thought to be no opposition, was defeated. A Mason was heard to say, "I could have told you how it would be before hand." Onondaga county, New York, is a strong Republican county and had always been carried by that party by a majority of several thousand, yet when Orrin Welch, a high Mason, an "Eminent Commander" and a Democrat, was nominated he came within fourteen votes of an election, although the Republican candidate was well known to be an able man and of good character. Republican Masons enough voted for their oath-bound friend to nearly elect him. The Knight Templars parade our streets in arms in whose use they are well drilled. For what enterprise of public weal are they enlisted? In Syracuse they have the gratuitous use of the United States Arsenal. At a certain party given by them in the midst of the festivities while the laugh was going round, at a preconcerted signal the members of the order sprang in an instant into rank as if to charge a foe. Now this Masonic body has possession of our Arsenal at Syracuse; yet Freemasonry and all its branches are inimical to our Republic. The order supports principles that are destructive to our liberties. Why then are Arsenals belonging to the government put so that they can gain easy and unsuspected control of them. These orders have taken our citadel, and like the old wolf they drive the dog out of his kennel. The speaker here read from the Chicago Times the following notice, and commented forcibly upon it:

ATTENTION, SIR KNIGHTS.—Chicago Commandery, No. 19, K. T.—You are hereby notified to appear at our Asylum armed and equipped for street parade Thursday morning next, at 6:30 a. m., to participate in the ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of Winnebago county Court-House at Rockford, Ill., on that day. Special train leaves the Wells St. depot at 7:30 a. m., sharp. You will also meet for drill at the Asylum this (Wednesday) evening at 8 o'clock. Visiting Sir Knights are courteously invited to participate with us on the occasion. JOHN M'LAREN, E. C.

CHAS. J. TROWBRIDGE, Recorder.

While such armed orders, secretly sworn, were allowed to continually parade in public unchecked either by law or the ban of enlightened public conscience, there is cause for loud alarm.

But we must not always be like the boy at the fanning-mill, looking at the chaff. It is not a pleasant nor encouraging prospect. Let us turn around and see the pile of clean good wheat which has accumulated, and is increasing daily by the efforts of Christian men steadily turning at the mill of right reform. Honor is not dead. Patriotism is not dead. Truth is not dead. Moral courage is not dead. No, these great principles of an upright life are yet bearing abundant fruit in obscurity and in the high places of our nation. These are grand days after all, though we may look back to times when the churches and politics were more pure than now. We always have some drawbacks. Daniel stood alone; Gideon's band was small; the Hebrew children were but three weak young men; yet God's truth stood, and they passed through their heavy trials triumphantly victorious through the grace of God sustaining them. Some fail us in the strife. Some fall where it is thickest,—and some are falling now. Yet as they pass away they give us hope. We seem to see the train of bright angels wafting to glory that redeemed spirit now made perfect in glory who would have been here with us, joining our counsels and prayers to-day.

The speaker had been instrumental in getting many out of the lodge. He did not accomplish this good work, however, by forcing them, or talking fiercely, but by calmer and more Christlike methods. He was willing to appeal to the reason of Freemasons generally. There is a great deal in having a good address in this work, and in knowing how to get hold of a man.

Our cause is gaining ground steadily, almost rapidly. The press treats us fairly now in New York State. When the Association met here seven years ago the papers gave the impression that an insane asylum was meeting in Farwell Hall. Now the gentlemanly and straight-forward reports leave nothing to be desired. At that former Convention Mr. Philo Carpenter's name was suppressed by the papers, and a United States Senator who dared to stand up against the lodge was called "Brother Pomeroy" in derision. But a brighter day is hastening and let all combine to hasten its bright dawning.

The Political Meeting.

The American party, while it is pre-eminent in the character of its platform and candidates has not the organization usual in political parties to push it before the people. The bribing, wire-pulling and party strife inseparable at the present day from party politics are not tolerated by either the principles or the men who support Walker and Kirkpatrick. Thus the meeting of the American party in Farwell Hall on Thursday afternoon was not a political meeting in the technical sense of that word, but a simple conference of Christian men and reformers who believe in voting as they pray. For this reason, too, the meeting was just as legitimate for being held a day before the appointed time.

On the adjournment of the National Convention, the political meeting was called to order by Mr. E. A. Cook, in the absence of J. P. Stoddard, chairman of the National Political Committee. Mr. Cook read the call for the meeting from the Cynosure, and nominated Pres. S. B. Allen of Westfield, Ill., as chairman. The nomination was concurred in and C. B. Remington of Michigan was duly elected secretary. At the invitation of the President, Rev. Henry Cogswell came forward and led the meeting in prayer.

Pres. Allen then spoke briefly of the nature of the gathering over which he had been called to preside. It was, as an organization, distinct entirely from the National Convention just adjourned, yet politics need not be separated entirely from reforms and should not be. The great object of a reform can sometimes be reached more directly through the ballot than by any other way. Not only members of the National Convention, but all other citizens who endorse our reform and political action against the lodge are welcome to a seat and a share in this meeting. As for the business to come before the meeting the chairman was not thoroughly informed, but supposed one part of the work to be done was arranging for electoral tickets for the different States.

J. L. Barlow of Michigan spoke of the impromptu gathering of a number of gentlemen of Chicago and vicinity last winter and their action in appointing a National Committee with J. P. Stoddard as chairman. The planning of the work of the present meeting had been left with him; but the sudden and awful blow that had fallen upon him had necessarily disturbed these arrangements.

He moved that the meeting proceed to such action as is necessary to sustain our platform and provide electoral tickets.

In sustaining his motion Mr. Barlow said he was determined to vote for no Freemasons for office hereafter, knowingly. He referred to Albert Pike's statement that Freemasonry could control the government of the United States. He read the platform and eulogized it as the clearest, purest and best before the voters of the country, and one on which all Christian reformers could unite.

Halleck Floyd of Indiana expressed his belief that we should stand by our principles in politics. He did not clearly understand the position of the American party and was present partly to gain information. He had heard some doubts expressed as to the expediency of entering upon a political campaign at this time, and whether there were other issues not yet settled in our country which in the circumstances should not first be sustained.

Rev. D. O. Ball, a Methodist Episcopal clergyman from Michigan, asked of the chair if he was entitled to speak on the resolution, but on explanation of the scope of the meeting being given he refrained from proceeding to any remarks.

After further remarks from several present, Mr.

Reform News and Notices.

To the Friends of Reform in Michigan.

DEAR FRIENDS;—Our true and tried State Lecturer has been in the field lecturing for the last few months, and has done faithful and good work, and his efforts have been well received and we believe productive of much good. A pastor where he lectured and for whom he preached said to me, "Barlow did a grand work here both in preaching and lecturing, such as never was done here before." During the present busy season but little can be done in lecturing, and meanwhile he is in pressing need of what is due him on his salary. Enough has been subscribed to pay him, but it is not paid in.

If this meets the eye of any subscribers to the lecture fund in this State, will they not at once send a part of their subscriptions at least, to him, at Fentonville, Michigan, and thus relieve him in his present urgent need? Donations from others, of even small amounts will be thankfully received, and due ackowledgement made. Do not delay but send something to aid in the support of our faithful and efficent lecturer in his noble work. Address, Rev. J. L. Barlow, Fentonville, Michigan. Your Servant,

C. QUIRK,
President of State Association.

Kansas State Nominating Convention.

Feeling a deep interest in the Government that was instituted under the kind providence of Almighty God by our forefathers, and well knowing that it is endangered in various ways, but more especially by organised secret associations; as Christians and fellow citizens we feel constrained to call a State Convention, to meet at Winchester, Jefferson county, Kansas, on the 16th and 17th of August, 1876, at 8 o'clock P. M., of each day for the purpose of nominating an electorial ticket for the State, and we hereby extend an invitation to all our fellow citizens who believe in the anti-secret movement, and we especially request all anti-secret churches to elect delegates, male and female, to represent them in said convention. Distinguished speakers from abroad will be present. Free entertainment will be furnished and it is expected that the railroads will give reduction of fare.

H. A. BELL.
President of Christian Association.

To the Friends in Indiana.

LIGONIER, Ind., July 15th, 1876.

DEAR FRIENDS OF REFORM:—We are now without a lecturer in the field and without systematized work in our State, and yet thousands are feeling a personal and general interest in the reform directed against the encroachments of lodge power. We lack concentration of effort, a unity of purpose and action; the very thing that gives the enemy such power in every community. We must move with all the moral and material strength we have. We must have an agent in the field who is true to the cause and who will make himself heard by voice, pen and industry; we need to be pulling up the tares which have grown, while men slept, both in church and state. While there are many men who would do good service as lecturers, we propose to the friends one of our citizens, Dr. S. L. Cook of Albion, whose services can be had if secured soon and offered a fair compensation. Dr. Cook is eloquent, a ready debater and knows how to drive Masonry to the wall. Let us see to this at once so that the work may go on. Let us begin now to prepare for the finest State meeting this fall we have ever bad. Let every friend of anti-secretism attend the meeting at Fairmount, August 1st. "ANTI."

From Bro. Hinman.

WASHINGTON, Ill., July 7th, 1876.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—I left your city July 1st, and in a short time was enjoying the hospitalities of our aged but efficient co-worker, Father Preston of Lockport.

By invitation of the excellent pastor of the Congregational church of Lockport and Homer (Rev. Stow) I consented to preach on Sabbath afternoon to the people of my former charge at Homer, and in the evening to lecture on secretism in the church in Lockport.

The meeting at Homer was well attended and the occasion was one of great interest, as there has been but little change in the congregation during the nearly ten years which have passed since I acted as their pastor.

The congregation in the evening was not large, but was very attentive, and a good impression was manifestly made. The Congregational church in Lockport has no Masons, and probably all its members are opposed to Masonry, but alas! some of them are a good deal more opposed to Anti-masonry, lest it should cause strife and weaken the church. When will the church learn that it is sin and not the reproof of sin that endangers the church?

On the 3d I came to Dwight, calling on the pastor of the Congregational church, who assured me of his sympathy and directed me to some warm friends of the cause, and from thence I came to Wenona, where I spent the night and made arrangements for future work. Our earnest and liberal friend, Peter Howe, is in feeble health, but his interest in our cause is in no wise abated.

On the 4th I came to this thriving village, of about 2,000 inhabitants, where I attended a Centennial celebration. The addresses &c., were in a grove near the village. The attendance was very large and the best of order prevailed. A young lady personating "Liberty," assisted by some thirty-eight little girls, all appropriately dressed, sang several patriotic songs, and a very able address was given by Rev. Mr. Cornelius of the Congregational church. The address was carefully prepared, ably delivered, and rich in beautiful quotations but for any appeal to noble Christian sentiments, or any recognition of the power of the Gospel as an influence in the nation, it might have been as appropriately written by Robert Ingersoll, the atheist.

On the evenings of the 5th and 6th, I spake to fair audiences at the Mount Zion U. B. church, eight miles from here. Their faithful young pastor Rev. F. R. Lord is laboring earnestly and with encouraging results. From here I go to Low Point, Wenona, Streator, Newtown and thence to White county.

Crops are better here than I have seen them elsewhere in the State.

Yours for the Lord,
H. H. HINMAN.

Good Resolutions from the Northern Illinois Christian Conference.

Whereas, from various reasons, among which are found those hereunto appended, we, as a body of Christians, in our hearts and better judgments regard secret societies as detrimental to, and destructive of the interests of our beloved Christianity; and,

Whereas, we who live in this land of civil and religious liberty are vouchsafed the privilege of presenting claims in behalf of enterprises, institutions and associations tending, in their leading characteristic and features, to moral reform; and

Whereas, ministers of the Gospel are, usually, looked to for a proper example, and are ever exerting an influence either for good or evil, according to the tendency of their example and practice;

Therefore, we, with an eye single to the glory of God, and a view to the amelioration of the desolate and languishing condition of our common Zion, in consideration of the following objections to secret societies, adopt the resolutions hereunto attached.

OBJECTIONS, 1st—There is necessarily attendant on, and inseparably connected with the doings of the lodge, a great expense.

2d. Some secret societies require their devotees to take oaths, that are not only extra-judicial and unscriptural, (Matt. v. 33,34), but horrible to think upon.

3d. Some require a respect of persons.

4th. Some practice forms and ceremonies which are demoralizing, degrading and indecent.

5th. Some do not recognize the Christian religion, neither its Author.

6th. The tendency of all secret societies is to lead the patrons thereof into idolatry.

7th. The milder forms of secretism are but outgrowths of the severer ones.

Therefore, in view of these glaring objections, which are only a few of the many that might be produced, be it

Resolved, 1st—That we, as a body of Christians, heartily recommend and urgently request that every ministerial of this Conference, and all who love the cause of Christ and moral reform, who may belong to any secret society, withdraw themselves therefrom, and have no longer any fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

2d. That inasmuch as our work is reformatory, we ALL aid, as best we can, according to our honest convictions, the reform movement of the National Christian Association, believing it to be the well-appointed channel through which, evidently, is flowing the elements which are, in the providence of God, destined to overthrow this dire evil of secretism.

Under conviction of duty, the undersigned presented the above before the Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin Christian Conference, convened in annual session, at Capron, Boone Co., Ill., June 1st, 2d and 3d, 1876, which was unanimously adopted, a Freemason presiding over the body.

This may not be much; but it is a drop that will do its office on the rock of sin. Brethren, let us do what we can and the Lord will bless our efforts. The cloud is increasing in size. Let us support zealously Walker and Kirkpatrick. Falter not. G. A. BROWN.

Ready for the Lecture Field—A Knight of Pythias Expounds the Principles of his Order—Sick Masons and Seceders—Secretism makes Cowards—A Bold Hypocrite.

PHILA., PA., July 9, 1876.

MY VERY DEAR BRO. COOK:—I regard this work, as I have said to you, as much a Christian work as any; for it is a John the Baptist to the future success of the Gospel. It is more than pulling the ox or the ass out of the ditch—hence it may be done in all good Christian conscience on the Sabbath. It is a work my heart is wedded to, because I believe it to be pleasing in God's sight, and feel that God is with me in it. Never felt more so in all my ministry. I do not regard it so much the securing of social, civil and physicial benefits as those of religion. When secretism shall be overthrown, as it surely will be, then one of the great barriers in the way of the Gospel will be removed, and Oh! what a day for joy will then have come! You may set me down in your list of lecturers. I am willing to try and see what my Father in Heaven will enable me to do in that field. Will go, God willing, as soon as rested, if called by my countrymen.

In conversation with a Knight of Pythias, he said that a member is bound to and will defend a brother when in difficulty, whether right or wrong; and that a brother would be protected who should put one out of the way for revealing or speaking against the order; and if one should speak evil of the order, or reveal its secrets, he would be prepared for a tombstone. And yet, before this, he had told me, in answer to a question on that point, that there were no penalties involving death. Oh! how secretism prepares men to become liars! He further said men had been missing under such circumstances, and that the perpetrators of such wrong would receive the protection of the order; and that one of the order may stand by and see a brother injure one out of the order without cause, and afford the injured one no aid. He said there were but three degrees in the order.

Within the last few days I have had conversation with Masons, who are manifestly sorry they have had their feet caught in the net of the so-called benevolent societies, who want light to light up the way of egress from the darkness of the lodge. They have found that instead of benevolent societies, they are no less than terrible forms of despotism. One man, however, more bold than others, knew how without instruction to leave Masonry. He came there to our stand, and by a friend was introduced as a seceding Mason, where he declared boldly that he had left the order because of its wickedness, and was not "afraid with any amazement." And that is the whole secret of leaving or opposing the order with success and safety. If a man is cowardly, he invites menaces and injury. If he is bold, courageous and defiant, they are afraid of him. For a more cowardly set of men cannot be found on earth than secretists. That is the reason why they hide themselves in secret conclaves. They are afraid to perform their deeds in the light of day. Vice makes men cowards. If a man is in the right, he cannot afford to be cowardly, but can afford to be courageous. But secretists are night prowlers, seeking opportunity to do deeds they dare not let the sun shine on. They are evidently cowards, else they would not fear to take their chances with the common lot of mankind in battling for this world's benefits. I say chances, because in their esteem there is no Providence—for if there were, they would feel no need for sworn secrecy to work out their hoped-for benefits and destiny in secret conclaves out of the sight of man. They do not trust Providence because they cannot swear the Almighty; nor can they trust one another without the most horrid swearing that human ingenuity, aided by his infernal majesty, could invent. Oh! how deplorable is such prostitution of the human soul to vice. What a comment on human depravity! and how much more so on this terrible product of human depravity, oath-bound secrecy. And then that men can be so base, so corrupted as to cloak all that is base and vile with religion, even the Christian religion! Cover corruption with holiness! Attempt to make evil appear good! And then proudly strut and tell us we know nothing about it. Oh, impudence, canst thou not blush? Hypocrisy, canst thou not be ashamed?

There is no one that I pity more sincerely than a man whose face is clothed in sadness because he has been deluded into the lodge, and is anxious to get out, except it be one so hardened, so deceived by his own lying affirmations that secretism is not revealed, as to think that stoutly denying it will make the public reject all the testimony that it is revealed. Only a day or two since one of the delectable (?), saintly (?) order was with great earnestness endeavoring to impress the minds of several who were listening to him that Masonry was not revealed. Passing from nearly absolute denial, (for he was a little more modest and careful than some), to the position that we did not and could not know their secrets, after being presented with the facts of thousands of witnesses of their own order; and his resort to their so common dodge, "Can you believe a man after breaking his solemn oath and covenant, who has perjured himself?" After showing him that such are not perjured, but have simply done their duty, I said to him, "Here you are right in God's sight, who is himself here looking into your heart and mine, and knows our thoughts, pretending that is not so which you know to be true; you and I are old men and shall meet this denial in the Judgment." He looked as if a a new and fearful thought had occurred to him, and did not reaffirm, and left apparently in a solemn mood. Yours for the truth,

A. D. FREEMAN.

SPARTA, MICH., July 8, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure.

Our village numbers about five hundred inhabitants. It is fifteen miles north of Grand Rapids, Mich., on the G. R., N. W. & Lake S. R. R. We have two fine church edifices, and one new brick school house, and some other public buildings. It is a very nice farming country around, and very healthy. There is only one drawback. I am sorry to say there are four secret societies, all in full running order, which is a great damage to the place; and I am the only man in the place who takes the Christian Cynosure. But my heart is moved by the Holy Spirit to help overthrow the power of the dark kingdom. I worked hard one day and obtained nine new subscribers for the Christian Cynosure, and I thank God, and will try again. Can you inform me where our State lecturer lives, and you will oblige me.

The Centennial Work.

CARTHAGE.

MR. EDITOR;—I take pleasure in reading Brother Freeman's Centennial letters, and my prayer is that God will bless and give him strength to hold on; he is doing a good work. I feel greatly encouraged; I am so glad that we have a stand inside the Centennial building. I believe God will make the stand to be observed more generally before the great Centennial enterprise is closed.

I noticed in the Cynosure June 22nd, a call for more funds for the Centennial tract cause. I feel as though I ought to help all I could in that direction or in any other for this grand enterprise of reform. Four years ago I labored hard to obtain 14 names to the petition I sent to the M. E. church from this place. This year I sent 73 names, and did not labor any harder to obtain them than I did the 14.

Inclosed please find one ($1.00) dallar for the benefit of the Centennial tract fund. I hope I may be able to send more before the exhibition closes.

Yours very respectfully,

A. HOLT.

R. R. Whittier, Greenwood, McHenry Co., Ill., writes:

"Am much pleased with the work of Elder A. D. Freeman. This is placing the light on a lamp-stand before the world."

Chas. P. Paget, Smithdale, Livingston Co., Ill., writes:

"I expect to vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick next fall."

Geo. McElhenny, Darlington, Beaver Co., Pa., writes:

"It is in contemplation to secure the services of Mr. Ronayne in this community during the coming autumn. It is certainly true that the pressing duties of the hour however intensified and vital, cannot justify suspension or abatement of work and zeal on behalf of the anti-secret movement. This is evident in view of the intrinsic merit of our cause as well as the encouraging success, through the Divine blessing, which has attended the labors of the last eight years of earnest organized effort. It is a matter of devout gratitude that the outlook is now such as to forbid the thought of abandonment or failure."

Z. Smith, Montpelier, Washington Co, Vt., writes:

"I have been an Anti-mason ever since Morgan's day and always voted the Anti-masonic ticket, until we thought Masonry dead, and it was said that the Grand lodges gave up their charter. We would not vote for a man to any office of honor or trust who held to Freemasonry; but it seems they only played 'possum.' I saw Masonry publicly exhibited in Orange Co., Vt., up to the Royal Arch degree as Ronayne is exhibiting it now in the West. I wish he or some other lecturer would come here to wake up the people to the evils of secretism. They would find a hearty welcome with us. Vermont, I think, is behind the times in this good cause, but I am glad that one man has gone from Vermont to the Centennial to scatter light and truth among the people, that is Gen. Phelps. I trust the Lord will prosper and bless his labors and yours for good. The grange has proved a curse to this place. It has caused a division in the church and neighborhood, and in some families, where the man belonged to it and the wife did not. Some of them have paid their dues and had their names taken off, while many more have not met with them for a long time, and some never intend to go again. I only wish it were so with all. We had here a small Freewill Baptist church and had preaching every other Sunday, and other meetings; a good Sabbath-school, the young people came into the Bible class, and everything was going on harmoniously, until two years ago last winter the grange was organized. Since that almost everything good has been going down, till we have no meetings or Sabbath school. The secret societies rule the whole thing, as the committee to supply the desk are grangers."

A. E. Jenks, Cheshire, Berkshire Co., Mass., writes:

"I would like to know if J. B. Hayes and W. A. Wheeler are free from all secret societies. I am credibly informed that Henry Ward Beecher is a Royal Arch Mason. I think your informer on that point was mistaken."

We do not know whether Wheeler is a secret society man or not. Mr. Hayes' uncle says he is not a Freemason.

Rev. Wm. A. Kindel, Celina, Mercer Co., O., writes:

"I look upon all secret societies as dangerous to our government; and I look at them as coming from the devil, for Jesus said, 'In secret have I said nothing.'"

J. W. Funk, Myersville, Frederick Co., Md., writes:

"I am convinced more and more every day of the evil of oath-bound organizations and pray that I may yet see the day when they will crumble to the ground as a thing of nought. Every Cynosure brings cheering news of the progress of this reform, and while I may I will hear and as the glorious intelligence falls upon my ear, my heart will swell with gratitude to God, and my voice be raised in concert with all the friends of the reform in ascribing praises to his holy name for success granted. May God bless you and all the active workers in this great work."

Eliza Bradbury, Owego, Tioga Co., N. Y., writes:

"I am still trying to make people appreciate and understand the value of your paper, and pray that God may give them the true light."

Rev. C. Bender, Geneseo, Henry Co., Ill., writes:

"I see that perhaps it would be a sin to me if I stopped the Cynosure. Please continue it."

The Cynosure needs the continued support of all its readers.

Lesson for July 30.—Solomon's Prayer

SCRIPTURE.—1 Kings viii. 22-30. Commit 27-30; Primary Verse, 30.

22 And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel and spread forth his hands toward heaven:

23 And he said Lord God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in heaven above or on earth beneath, who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants that walk before thee with all their heart:

24 Who hast kept with thy servant David my father that thou promised him: thou spakest also with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

25 Therefore, now, Lord God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father, that thou promised him saying, There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel; so that thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.

26 And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father.

27 But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?

28 Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee to-day:

29 That thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, even toward the place of which thou hast said, My name shall be there: that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make toward this place.

30 And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray toward this place: and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place: and when thou hearest, forgive.

LESSON NOTES.—(22.) Solomon stood before the altar: Before the brazen altar upon a platform erected for him. Spread forth his hands: Having first kneeled down upon the platform. See 2 Chron. vi. 13. (23:) And he said, Lord God of Israel: He approached God with becoming humility and awe. As in the Lord's Prayer, so here adoration comes before petition. (24.) Keep with thy servant David: Pleading God's promise to his father rather than to himself shows rare humility, and is like the prayer of the Christian "for Jesus' sake." (27.) Will God indeed dwell on the earth? By this question Solomon shows his appreciation of God's greatness. How much less this house: God was not to be localized by the house. God is everywhere. And yet he does condescend to dwell specially in the contrite heart. See Isa. lvii. 15. (28.) Yet have thou respect: Notwithstanding thy greatness lend a listening ear to the prayer of thy servant, unworthy though it be. (29.) My name shall be there: See Deut. xii. 5. (30.) Heaven thy dwelling place: God's true dwelling place. It is heaven because God is there. Heaven is not so far away that God cannot hear us when we cry to him. When thou hearest, forgive: Forgiveness is our first and greatest need. How blessed the assurance that in Christ we have full and free forgiveness for all sin. See Acts xiii. 38, 39.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.—In what part of the temple was the congregation of Israel gathered? Who were included in that congregation? How was God's covenant with David fulfilled "this day"? What idea of a mediator between God and man was included in Solomon's prayer?—Scholar's Quarterly.

—It is indeed true that God is a covenant-making God, and not less true that he is a covenant-keeping God. What earthly fidelities can compare to his that have endured since the world began! We need not fear so long as we rely on his covenant. Deut. vii. 9; 1Cor. i. 9; x. 13; 1 Thess. v. 24; 2 Thess. iii. 3; 2 Tim. ii. 13; 1 John v. 18.

—The conditions of salvation for all sinners are: "If they shall turn again to God and confess his name, and make supplication unto him," he will hear and answer and forgive. Could the conditions be easier? Neh. i. 9; Job xxxiii. 27, 28; Prov. xxviii. 13; Jer. xxix. 12, 13; Hos. v. 15; Luke xv. 18; Rom. iii. 23-26; 1 John i. 9.

—Those only who "know the plague of their own hearts" ever pray to God for relief from it. Hence it is that the first office of the Comforter is to convict the world of sin, and afterwards only of righteousness and of judgment. The plague of one's own heart has driven many a man to the Great Physician who would never have been persuaded by arguments. And what a deadly plague is in it! Gen. vi. 5; viii. 21; 1 K. viii. 46; Ps. xiv. 2, 3; li. 9; Prov. xx. 9; Eccl. ix. 3; Matt. xv. 19; Rom. iii. 10; Jas. i. 14, 15.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1876.

ELDER BERNARD DEAD!

The following letter explains itself:

Messrs. E. A. Cook & Co., Chicago, Ill.:

GENTS:—I learn that the Rev. David Bernard, who in 1829 published a book of over 500 pages exposing the secrets of Masonry, died at the residence of his son-in-law, Dr. E. S. Coburn, in Troy, N. Y., on the 11th inst. You, of course, know all about his history.

Respectfully yours,

GEO. W. PATTERSON.

And so this great and good man, this Christian hero, has gone home. He fought the good fight, finished his course, and now receives his crown.

WE ARE FOOLS FOR CHRIST'S SAKE.

PAUL, 1 Cor iv. 10.

That is, as I judge, fools in the estimation of others, who have long since found they were mistaken. The world also has reversed their verdict.

I do not know whether the Chicago Tribune reads the Cynosure. The impersonality of a large daily paper, like fog, hides the individual who conducts it, but we think Mr. Joseph Medill did not write the late weak and stupid abuse of our National Christian Association's Anniversary under the head "Anti-masonic Simpletons." Scarce a year since when some Wisconsin Democrats wished to draw voters from the Republican fold, Mr. Medill wrote an editorial against secret political societies which cut up by the roots every veiled lodge in the land. Now we have an article in the same paper under the above caption from which the following are excerps:—

"Perhaps it would be as well now to address a few sober, serious words to those people, who seem to have as much horror of Masons, Odd-fellows, Good Templars, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Hermann, and other secret orders, as a mad dog does of water.'

Well, now for the "sober, serious words." The writer first hints that Masons are "younger members of the community," while every Masonic procession is sprinkled with gray beards, and that they "meet together privately for a charitable purpose, and choose to recognize each other by certain winks, nods, grips, and grimaces not known to the outside world?"

After thus describing the lodge as a lot of calves in a pen, sucking each other's ears, this youthful oracle turns at once and makes Masonry a religion based on Christianity. He assumes:

"That Masonry is based upon the truths of Christianity; that a good Mason, who conscientiously fulfills his duties and obligations, is a good Bible Christian; and that a bad Mason is bad because he fails to carry them out."

Is this Mr. Joseph Medill's nephew? and is he suffered to disgrace the columns of a once influential paper by such stuff as this? If, as he pretends, he knows that, under cut-throat penalties, equally vile whether jest or earnest, a Mason is sworn to conceal a brother's crimes if committed to him as secrets, the writer, who can say of sworn complicity with crime, that it is Bible Christianity, must either be a "simpleton" or what is worse, "scoundrel."

Then comes the stale and false claim of benevolence:

"Millions of money have been expended on benefactions by this organization of which the world knows nothing, and but for the Masons these millions would have been a burden upon the general public."

For instance the Masonic Relief Committee after the fire, received ninety thousand dollars for the sufferers. They gave in Masonic charity, thirty thousand, and sixty thousand they divided among themselves and favorites, and the Masonic sufferers drew double; from the general relief funds and their own. Edmond Ronayne was then master of Key Stone lodge, and a member of that Relief Committee. He gave substantially the above statement in the presence of a multitude of Masons in Farwell Hall; told them he could furnish facts and vouchers, and prove his allegations. Now, if the books and records could convict Mr. Ronayne of false statements, it would be their cheapest way to demolish him. But while they have trumped up other petty and sham charges, they are silent as the grave on this charge, that they consumed sixty thousand dollars of relief money on themselves, out of ninety thousand given for relief.

Now we respectfully ask the editors of the Tribune, whether they are not ashamed of their writer, who can re-hash and vend the oft refuted twaddle of Masonic charity and benevolence, in the face of Chicago facts like these? And, then, true to the character of the lodge which has not only the harlot's falsehood but her impudence, he winds up his peroration and appeal thus:

"Is it well to chill the charitable feelings of the young, to stop the inculcations of the doctrines of brotherly love and charity, based upon the foundation principles laid down by Christ himself."

Thus claiming "that a lodge," which boasts Jews and pagans among its members; and which cuts out Christ's name from the Scriptures which it profanes by using them in its degrees; that this Christ-hating combination of darkness is founded on Christ!!

There is but one key to a mind which can vent such writing, viz., "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the mind of them that believe not." And what are we to think of a paper which calls itself Republican, yet supports a secret order which forswears jurymen to conceal crimes; and which flaunts the regalia and badges of privileged orders, and by its grand kings and high priests is subverting the very idea of a Republic?

WHEATON COLLEGE.

The good brethern who love and support other Colleges will surely rejoice in the building up of Wheaton College. The Cynosure, also, will, as heretofore, rejoice to aid every literary Institution which is free from the American leprosy of secret orders which subvert all American ideas.

I came to Wheaton in 1860; sixteen years ago. We were poor, except the wealth of our principles and our young men. L. N. Stratton and J. P. Stoddard were in the first class graduated. They are, and have been, exponents of the principles of the College.

We have graduated within three of a hundred young men and young women; of whom it is no disparagement to others to say that they have not superiors in any equal number of American alumni, in general culture, ease and grace of manners, and in the studies of the American College course.

We have never had a secret society, nor a case of hazing in the College.

Like most other American Colleges, Wheaton is unsectarian in its charter and practice. Though a decided majority of the Board are Congregationalists, the religious papers of that denomination have always shunned the support of its principles; and, like all who are devoted to reforms, we have had bitter secret and open opposition.

Before commencing our new buildings, such had been our economy and frugality, that the income of the College, for two years, exceeded its expenditures. We have, against most vindictive and wide spread opposition, raised and expended about eighty thousand dollars on buildings that every body is pleased with.

We are near Chicago, and as Cowper said of London we can "——————hear the roar

Of the great Babel and not feel the crowd."

There are no Freemasons in our Board of Trustees. Two have been requested to resign and have resigned their office because of their complicity with the lodge.

God has been very gracious to us, and some hundreds of the students have been hopefully converted to Christ.

When we were struggling to erect our building, I appealed through the Cynosure, for help in our straits, and the Lord sent us by his servants, who hate the work of darkness, several thousand dollars. Our building debt has fluctuated above and below twenty thousand dollars, as our interest or collections have predominated.

God has greatly increased our friends, and the pastors of the leading churches of Chicago, and Union Park Seminary Faculty, now earnestly commend us to the churches. But two thousand dollars interest, added to current expenses greatly cripples us.

At its late annual meeting the Board associated PROF. CHAS. A. BLANCHARD, in the administration of the College; and he is now seeking means to liquidate our debt. This is a pledge to the future, for the principles of the College.

Besides the payment of the debt, we greatly need means to erect dormitory buildings, where young men just pushing out can find cheap rooms at a nominal rent. If we had such rooms for one hundred additional young men, it is believed they would speedily be occupied.

The Board also voted to attempt to raise an endowment for the Professorhip of Languages held by PROF. O. F. LUMRY, the son of the REV. RUFUS LUMRY, known to thousands as a pioneer abolitionist and Wesleyan preacher; and they authorized Prof. Lumry to act as financial agent for the endowment of his chair. Prof. Lumry has been here from the first, a popular and devoted instructor, and most thorough linguist.

Now I appeal for aid in these our endeavors, by every consideration which moves the heart of good men and Americans.

The HON. JOSEPH TILLSON of Henry county, Illinois, came to see us, he said "to see if we were true to our principles." He was satisfied that we were, and gave us land which has been sold and paid us in cash six thousand six hundred dollars. And he now has the satisfaction without the loss of any possible earthly comfort, of seeing his beloved county awaking to the importance of principles dear to every true American heart.

I am anxious to devote the time and vigor which our debt consumes, to the good of our students and the cause of reform. Who will make me their proxy in the holy cause which they love, by relieving, or helping relieve us from the pressure of this debt?

PROF. C. A. BLANCHARD, whom many of you have heard and would like to hear again, writes that he is greeted when he comes with warm welcome. Who will give or raise one hundred dollars for the College, if he will come and speak to you? Please write me at once who will.

Times are precarious and money stringent and will be till the financial policy of the Federal government is fixed. But the heavens have given rain, and the earth groans with its burden of crops. Will those who can spare but little give that?

My dear friends, it is not for myself but for Christ I am pleading. I have toiled here for years in the College, and also in the reform without compensation. We rejoice to deny ourselves for Christ and we shall have to do so when the debt is paid. Meantime send us your children and follow them with your prayers. I do not wish to draw one from the beloved Colleges which give light and not darkness. But as Christ raised money from the mouth of a fish to avoid the reproach of non-payment of debts, so must we follow his example to avoid giving offense.

In another article I may suggest some ways to help us. And God will surely bless those who aid this cause, which, if there be one on earth, is the cause of truth and right.

—Prof. Swing's paper in this city, the Alliance, has an advertisement for summer weather, we lately noticed, wherein the equivocal character of that journal is set down as "orthodox but not bigoted." This cool conceit in its reflection on the other religious journals of the city is certainly refreshing these hot days.

—The next annual meeting of the Ohio State Association was arranged at its last anniversary to be held August 23d, at Cambridge, Guernsey county, in the eastern part of the State. We have not learned what preparations are in progress.

—We learn from the United Presbyterian that the students and friends of Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa., were served with a unique address at their late Commencement. Mr Thomas M. Marshall delivered the annual address on the subject, 'Self-reliance." He was led to speak, says the Presbyterian, "of the wrong done to young men who seek to shirk personal responsibility by undertaking to work through some form of association. His condemnation of secret associations. such as Masonry and Odd-fellowship, was scathing and terrible. To stand up in such a place and at such a time, and deliver a speech which he knew would be in the face of popular prepossessions and prejudices, and which would subject him to malignant criticism, requires an amount of independence and bravery with which the average public man cannot be credited. Masons who heard the address thought it very 'undignified,' while conservatives agreed that it was good in its way, but 'ill-timed and injudicious."

—Last week President Grant summoned the Post-master General into his presence and without more ado told him his resignation was wanted. Mr. Jewell submitted with as good grace as possible, and another efficient officer who dared to be faithful is turned away from the circle of Grant's advisers. The reasons given are Mr. Jewell's sympathy with Mr. Bristow and his assistants in the whiskey war, and the political necessity of carrying the State election in Indiana in October. Mr. Pratt, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, was too good an officer to keep, and so he followed Bristow. But he was an Indiana man, and so a sop is given to the politicians of that State by putting out Jewell and putting in his second assistant, Mr. Tyner of Indiana. The turning over of the Cabinet to the political jobbers and whiskey-ring is nearly completed, and proves that all the glory bestowed on the President for his courageous front alongside his Treasury Secretary was but a face screwed up for the occasion. Yaryan, an ejected official whom Bristow and Solicitor Wilson held in high esteem for his faithfulness, has been testifying before a Congressional Committee. His position as chief of the Special Revenue agents gave him thorough insight into all the points of the whiskey ring war. He was asked, "What facts do you know that lead you to believe that the President was not in full sympathy with the prosecution of the whiskey rings? His answer was as follows: "His delay in removing District-Attorney Ward, of Chicago; District-Attorney Van Dyke, of San Francisco; Supervisor Munn, of Illinois, and Collector McGuire, of St. Louis. His failure to remove Collector Sedgwick and Supervisor Foulke, of San Fransisco; his removal of Henderson, and the retention in office of Babcock. His dismissal or forced resignation of nearly every officer who has taken an active part in the prosecution of whiskey-ring conspirators; the importunity it required to obtain the celebrated indorsement, 'Let no guilty man escape,' and his anger at its publication; the length of time the resignation of McDonald was held before being accepted, and the fact that he was not dismissed after confessing his guilt."

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

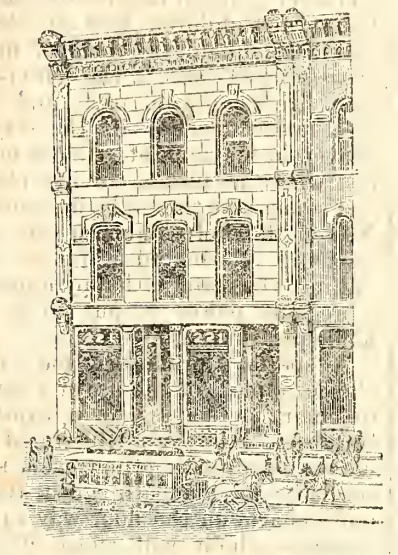
5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.



10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

The State Convention recently met at Muncie, Ind., decided to postpone action till Tuesday, August 1st next, when the Nominating Convention will meet at FAIRMOUNT, GRANT Co. Delegates will be entertained; able speakers will be present; Prof. Bell of Alexandria will add to the interest of the occasion with vocal and instrumental music.

D. B. Turney, with whose name and logical analysis and forcible arguments against the lodge our readers are becoming familiar, is candidate for Congress in the 16th Illinois District, comprising the counties of Montgomery, Fayette, Clinton, Bond, Marion, Clay, Washington. The ease and force with which he writes are proof of his ability to fill the position with far more honor than many or most of men Illinois has sent to the halls of the House of Representatives. We hope to publish the fact of his election in due time.

—The notice of the Kansas State meeting on the 6th page is mainly for political action. Let there be a rousing meeting at Winchester next month.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

We Would See Jesus.

"We would see Jesus"—for the shadows lengthen
Across this little landscape of our life;
We would see Jesus, our weak faith to strengthen
For the last weariness—the final strife.

We would see Jesus—other lights are palling,
Which for long years we have rejoiced to see,
The blessings of our pilgrimage are falling,
We would not mourn them, for we go to thee!

We would see Jesus—yet the spirit lingers
'Round the dear objects we have loved so long,
And earth from earth can scarce unclose its fingers—
Our love to thee makes not this love less strong.

We would see Jesus—sense is all too blinding,
And heaven appears too dim, too far away;
We would see thee to gain a sweet reminding
That thou hast promised our great debt to pay.

We would see Jesus—this is all we're needing,
Strength, joy and willingness come with the sight,
We would see Jesus—dying, risen, pleading;
Then welcome day, and farewell mortal night.

—Sel.

Unselfish.

Mr. C—— found it to his advantage to change his location, that he might be among his friends and have a better run of business. But he had not the means to defray necessary expenses to carry him through. He had a small cottage which he was under the necessity of selling to obtain the means. The lowest estimate he could put upon the property was one hundred dollars; but he could not cash it for even that. But still he must go to his contemplated and new locality; and, to be more sure of selling for cash, he offered the property for eighty dollars. Mr. D. wanted to buy, and availed himself of the opportunity. "But," said he to Mr. C., "that place is very cheap at one hundred dollars; and for me to take it of you for only eighty, I consider would be taking twenty dollars from you without giving you any value in return. It is true, you offer it for eighty, but to that you are impelled by stern necessity, and it is not fair or honorable for me to take that advantage of your distress. I don't want the property for less than its real value. Here, I will take the property and give you one hundred dollars for it." So he did; and Mr. C. accomplished the contemplated removal.

Now, in this case Mr. C. saved twenty dollars which Mr. D. would have had according to the ordinary method of trade. The question to be decided is, whether it is right in Mr. D.? He felt that, should he take the property at eighty dollars, he would be getting twenty dollars which really and in equity belonged to Mr. C., without an equivalent, and through Mr. C.'s necessity; and morally he felt that it would not be right to do it.

Now, reader, what do you think about that? Did D. do any more than was right in the premises? Would you do the same thing under the same circumstances? This savors somewhat of fulfilling that moral law which requires that we love our neighbor as ourselves. We presume you don't believe that possible. Well, you would act, then, according to your faith, and take the twenty dollars out of the poor man because his necessities compelled him to make the sacrifice. We have many just such Christians as you are in the world; and it is our special province to expose the sophistry that commends such acts to teach moral honesty, and enforce the commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Cross-Bearer.

The Lord's Day and the Children.

Dr. Lyman Whiting some time since sent these suggestions to the Advance for making the Sabbath more attractive to the little ones, which may aid in many homes to make the first day the best of the week in more senses than one:

Allow me to show two hopeful methods: First: Weave an embroidery of special preparation upon the coming day. Set some rose-tinted expectations into Sunday and a joyous welcome will greet it, and send a charm far into the sacred hours; for children feed on ideals, and ideals inhabit the realm of hope. Something to come is the child-vision. He has got no past, and the ideal future reaches all the way to heaven in his thought. He can make just what he pleases of his ideals, and some rare things he does make. Now if the holy Sabbath can get a setting of this ideal future,—be put into the realm of happy hopes,—a precious power is put to it for home pleasure in it.

A special promisory pie: or a choice apple; or the use of a favorite chair; or access to a captivating book (Harper's Illustrated Bible we once used);—these each, kept specially for Sabbath good times, put a charm on the door-way to the Sabbath, which will effect all the day. The child-heart is so full of ideal forecasts that a very few family preparations of specific doings for the coming day,—with loving words, of course, as to them,—will put a roseate hue upon the entire day.

Second—in the same line: Do certain good things on Sunday not done in the family on other days. Things—right ones—saved for Sunday will go far toward saving Sunday to its blessed intent. Get out the "big ha' Bible," with pictures in it, not opened on other days. Let Jessie and Jamie have range and question-room along the the big leaves and ever new pictures. "Jacob and Rebekah," "Moses, and his sheep," "Eli and little Samuel," with a father or mother to explain, grow in interest, as the little eyes looking on them grow in capacity. New questions will totter on the little tongues for a year or two, if parental or other teaching puts new ideas along with the pictures. Then, some special hymn or song, kept on purpose for Sunday, consecrated in a sense to that day; or the organ or piano put to special use, by mamma, papa, or some member of the family, who never plays that piece on other days; or a Psalm recited in concert, as the 133d, "Behold how good," etc.; or the Lord's prayer, the Creed, or any concert work, not done on other days. The element of sacred specialty will touch the child-heart. I knew a family in which death had hung a weed over the cradle, who sang Stockwell,—"Oh! the lost, the unforgotten," etc., jeweling the notes with tender tears, for a long line of Sabbaths. In a home full of little children, each little voice, in its turn heard in prayer on Sabbath evening; or all joining hands in a circle to sing; or any similar special service, so wins the young heart to the day. Is any family so internally happy as the one in which holy Sabbath is most loved and truly kept?

Mr. Moody on Masonry.

Mr. Moody in a sermon on "excuses," which brought tears and amens copiously throughout the Hippodrome, tried to show how Masonry and Odd-fellowship would not help the needy soul, and told the following anecdote:—

"I heard a sailor who was out at sea few a years ago, and he had a good mother whose prayers went up to heaven continually for him, and in course of time God began to trouble that son's conscience off at sea, and he didn't know what the trouble was,—as there many who are awakened by the Spirit of God and don't know what is stirring them,—and he thought when he got to New York he would join the Odd-fellows and try to make something of himself. He had been a poor drunken sailor long enough, and he thought he would lead a better life. He went to the Odd-fellows and applied for membership, and the Odd-fellows inquired about him, and when they found out that he was nothing but a poor drunken sailor, they blackballed him, and would not have him. It was the same when he tried to join the Masons. But by and by some one gave him a little handbill, which invited him to the Fulton street prayer-meeting, and so he went there, and they let him in freely. He found that Jesus Christ saved just such as he and he came to Christ; and Christ received him, took away his sin, and gave him a new heart He got up in the meeting, and said: 'I went to the Odd-fellows, and they would not take me in; I went to the Masons, and they blackballed me; but I came to Christ, and he did not blackball me at all, but took me right into his arms.' That is what Christ does, and if there is a poor sinner here to-day, Christ will take you if you will only go to him. I don't care how bad you are. Your sins may rise up like a mountain, but his blood cleanseth from all sin."

Our National Air.

Our national air should be established, and it is to be hoped that "Yankee Doodle," which was adopted by the continental troops a hundred years ago, will not be crowded out by "Hail Columbia," the "President's March," the "Star Spangled Banner," "America," or "John Brown's Body,"—each a glorious tune, but without right of precedence over "Yankee Doodle." There is also high authority for asserting that "Yankee Doodle" is our national air, which John Quincy Adams used to relate when he was serving here as representative, somewhat in these words: After the ministers plenipotentiary of Great Britain and the United States had nearly concluded their pacific labors at Ghent, the burghers of that quaint old Dutch city determined to give an entertainment in their honor, and desired to have the national airs of the two treaty-making powers performed as a part of the programme. So the musical director was directed to call upon the American ministers and obtain the music of the national air of the United States. No one knew exactly what to give and a consultation ensued, at which Bayard and Gallatin favored "Hail Columbia," while Clay, Russell, and Adams were decidedly in favor of "Yankee Doodle." The musical director was called in and informed of the decision. He then asked if any of the gentlemen had the music, and, receiving a negative reply, suggested that perhaps one of them could sing or whistle the air. "I can't," said Mr. Clay; "I never whistled or sung a tune in my life. Perhaps Mr. Bayard can." "Neither can I," replied Mr. Bayard; "perhaps Mr. Russell can." Mr. Russell, Mr. Gallatin, and Mr. Adams in turn confessed their lack of musical ability. "I have it," exclaimed Mr. Clay; and ringing the bell he summoned his colored body-servant. "John," said Mr. Clay, "whistle Yankee Doodle for this gentleman." John did so; the chief musician noted down the air; and at the entertainment the Ghent Burgher's Band played the national air of the United States, with variations, in grand style.—Boston Journal.

Athens.

Unlike Rome, Athens leaves upon the memory one simple and ineffaceable impression. There is here no conflict between paganism and Christianity, no statue of Hellas baptized by popes into the company of saints, no blending of the classical and medæval and Renaissance influence in a bewilderment of vast antiquity. Rome, true to her historical vocation, embraces in her ruins all ages, all creeds, all nations. Her life has never stood still, but has submitted to many transformations, of which the traces are still visible. Athens, like the Greek of history, is isolated in a sort of self-completion; she is a thing of the past, which still exists, because the spirit never dies, because "beauty is joy for ever." What is truly remarkable about the city is just this, that while the modern town is an insignificant mushroom of the present century, the monuments of Greek art in the best period—the masterpieces of Ictinus and Mnesicles, and the theatre on which the plays of the tragedians were produced—survive in comparative perfection, and are so far unencumbered with subsequent edifices that the actual Athens of Pericles absorbes our attention. There is nothing of any consequence intermediate between us and the fourth century B. C. Seen from a distance, the Acropolis presents nearly the same appearance as it offered to Spartan guardsmen when they passed the ramparts of Deceleia. Nature around is all unaltered. Except that more villages, enclosed with olive-groves and vineyards, were sprinkled over those bare hills in classic days, no essential change in the landscape has taken place, no transformation, for example, of equal magnitude with that which converted the Campagna of Rome from a plain of cities to a poisonous solitude. All through the centuries which divide us from the age of Hadrian—centuries unfilled, as far as Athens is concerned, with memorable deeds or national activity—the Acropolis has stood uncovered to the sun. The tones of the marble of Pentelicus have daily grown more golden, decay has here and there invaded freize and capital; war too has done its work, shattered the Parthenon in 1687 by the explosion of a powder-magazine, and the Propylœa in 1656 by a similar accident, and seaming the colonnades that still remain with cannon balls in 1827. Yet in spite of time and violence the Acropolis survives, a miracle of beauty like an everlasting flower. Through all that lapse of years it has spread its coronal of marbles in the air unheeded. And now, more than ever, its temples seem to be incorporate with the rock they crown. The slabs of column and basement have grown together by long pressure of molecular adhesion into a coherent whole. Nor have weeds or creeping ivy invaded the glittering fragments that strewed the sacred hill. The sun's kiss alone has caused a change from white to amber hue or russet. Meanwhile, the exquisite adaptation of Greek building to Greek landscape has been enhanced rather than impaired by that "unimaginable touch of time," which has broken the regularity of outline, softened the chisel-work of the sculptor, and confounded the painter's fret-work in one tint of glowing gold. The Parthenon, the Erechtheum, and the Propylœa have become one with the hill on which they cluster, as needful to the scenery around them as the everlasting mountains, as sympathetic as the rest of nature to the succession of morning and evening, which waken them to passionate life by the magic touch of colour.—*A. The Seed.

The farmer planted a seed—
A little, dry, black seed;
And off he went to other work—
For the farmer was never known to shirk,
And cared for what he had need.

The night came with its dew—
The cool and silent dew;
The dawn came, and the day;
And the farmer worked away
At labors not a few.

Home from his work one day—
One glowing summer day—
His children showed him a perfect flower:
It had burst in bloom that very hour;
How I cannot say.

But I know if the smallest seed
In the soil of love be cast,
Both day and night will do their part:
And the sower who works with a trusting heart
Will find the flower at last.

Definition of Bible Terms.

A day's journey was about twenty-three and one-fifth miles.

A Sabbath day's journey was about an English mile.

Ezekiel's reed was nearly eleven feet.

A cubit was nearly twenty-two inches.

A hand's breadth is equal to three and five-eighths inches.

A finger's breadth is equal to one inch.

A shekel of silver was about fifty cents.

A shekel of gold was eight dollars.

A talent of silver was five hundred and thirty-eight dollars and thirty cents.

A talent of gold was thirteen thousand eight hundred and nine dollars.

A piece of silver, or a penny was thirteen cents.

A farthing was three cents.

A mite was less than a quarter of a cent.

A gerah was one cent.

An epha, or bath, contains seven gallons and five pints.

A hin was one gallon and two pints.

A firkin was seven pints.

An omer was six pints.

A cab was three pints.

Respect the Aged.

Many an old person has the pain—not bodily, but sharper still—of feeling himself in the way. Some one wants his place. His very chair in the chimney corner is grudged him. He is a burthen to son or daughter. The very arm which props him is taken away from some productive labor. As he sits at the table, his own guests are too idle or too unkind to make him a sharer in their mirth. They grudge the trouble of that raised voice which alone could make him one of them; and when he speaks it is only to be put aside as ignorant, or despised; as old-fashioned and obsolete. O, little do younger persons know their power of giving pain or pleasure! It is a pain for any man in this world to be made to feel that he is no longer of it—to be driven in upon his own little world of conscious isolation and buried enjoyment. But this is his condition! And if any fretfulness or querulousness of temper has aggravated it—if others love him not because he is not amiable—shall we pity that condition the less? Shall we upbraid it with that fault which is itself the worst part of it? —Selected.

How a Cricket Saved a Ship.

In Southey's "History of Brazil" he tells how Cabeza de Vaca was in a great ship going to South America with four hundred men and thirty horses; and after they had crossed the equator, the commander discovered that there were only three casks of water left. He gave orders to make the nearest land, and for three days they sailed for the coast. A poor, sick soldier, who had left Cadiz with them, brought a grillo or ground cricket with him, thinking its cheerful voice would amuse him on the long, dreary voyage. But, to his great disappointment, the little insect was silent the whole way.

The fourth morning after the ship had changed her course, the cricket, who knew what she was about, set up her shrillest note. The soldier at once gave warning to the officers in charge of the vessel, and they soon saw high, jagged rocks just ahead of them. The watch had been careless, and the great ship in a few moments would have been dashed to pieces on the ledges, if this puny creature had not scented the land and told them of their danger. Then they cruised along for some days, and the cricket sang for them every night, just as cheerily as if she had been in far-off Spain, till they got to their destined port, the island of Catalina.—Selected.

The Education of the Presidents.

The following table of Presidents and their places of education is of interest:

Washington—Good English education, but never studied the ancient languages.
Adams—Harvard.
Jefferson—William and Mary.
Madison—Princeton.
Monroe—William and Mary.
Adams, J. Q.—Harvard.
Jackson—Limited education.
Van Buren—Academic education.
Harrison—Hampden Sidney College.
Tyler—William and Mary.
Polk—University of North Carolina.
Taylor—Slightest rudiments.
Fillmore—Not liberally educated.
Pierce—Bowdoin.
Buchanan—Dickinson.
Lincoln—Education very limited.
Johnson—Self-educated.
Grant—West Point.

Monroe and Harrison did not graduate. Monroe left college to join the Revolutionary army. Financial reverses deprived Harrison of a full course. Polk was the oldest when graduating, being 23; Tyler the youngest, 17. The majority graduated at 20, this being also the average age. Jefferson probably had the most liberal education and broadest culture. It is said that his range of knowledge would compare favorably with that of Burke. The drill at West Point may be considered equal to a college course, and in many respects superior. In discipline and mathematical training, it is not equaled by any American college. Counting General Grant, two-thirds of our Presidents have been college men. To be sure, the two whose names have become household words—Washington the Father, and Lincoln the Martyr—were not liberally educated; but theirs were special missions. They live in the affections of the nation, rather than in the intellect, as embodied in the Constitution and laws. Theirs was to execute, not to mold.

Home and Health Hints.

Dark Rooms.

Shut the windows tight. Batten them with "weather strips" to exclude the air. Curtain them and shut the blinds to keep out the light,—bright sunshine fades the carpets and is painful to weak eyes. We will sit in the back room on the shady side of the house. The children and the servants will sleep in the middle of dark rooms where it will be more quiet. They will not know the difference, while sleeping, between a light, airy room, and one without light or ventilation. And if they don't object why not keep them there?

What short-sighted mortals. They think to cheat nature! The writer was once summoned as a witness, to take the testimony of a sailor who had been stabbed by a drunken comrade, and had been conveyed to one of the New York hospitals, where his life was slowly but surely coming to an end. One of the physicians present, the late Dr. Griscom, who had been connected with the hospital some twenty years, invited us to inspect the different wards of the hospital, to see how sweet and clean the rooms were kept. It had recently been whitewashed, and we found it free from fault in respect to cleanliness. It was well provided with all the necessary furniture, clothing, etc., for the comfort of the large number of patients then and always under treatment for broken bones, burns, and bruises, caused by the ten thousand accidents constantly occurring in and around our great city.

We inquired of Dr. Griscom what proportion of these crippled patients recovered? we beg the reader to note the significance of his answer. He said, "Nearly all on the sunny side of the hospital recover, while many on the shady side linger along till gangrene sets in, when death comes to their relief." We expressed surprise that a man should be placed in a room where the chances were against his recovery, and inquired, "Why not have sunny rooms for all?" He answered: "The hospital is not large enough for this, and when the good rooms are all full, those who come in later must accept such accommodations as we can furnish whether they live or die. We do the best we can with the rooms at our disposal. As soon as south side rooms become vacant, we remove north side patients into them, and so keep them always full."

What a picture is this! We fall on the ice and break a leg; or from a ladder and break an arm; or we are smashed or burned in a railway train; or run over by a Broadway omnibus, and carried on a stretcher to the New York Hospital. The rooms on the sunny side,—in which patients are expected to recover, are all full, while the rooms on the north, or shady side, in which patients are expected to linger till gangrene sets in, when they are expected to die, awaits us. We enter alive and come out a corpse! There was no vivifying sunlight there with healing on its wings, and we perish.

Reader, do you see? can you reason, or are you a blind bat and don't care for life or for death?

Never mind the fading carpets,—what are they when compared with life and health? Sleep in well aired and ventilated rooms, and thus throw off and throw out all impurities emanating from human bodies. If all should live on healthy food; breathe pure air; live much in the life-giving sunshine; abstain from stimulants, narcotics, and condiments; be suitably clothed; sleep plentifully in well-ventilated rooms in which the sun shines during the day; take proper bodily exercise to keep up a vigorous circulation; keep the skin clean by frequent ablutions, and the conscience clear and void of offence toward God and man by doing right, and in other matters obey the laws of Nature and of God, we would be proof against coughs, cold, consumption, small-pox cholera, yellow fever, or other diseases. Indeed, one who so lives may be exposed to any disease and not take it.—Science of Health.

Keeping Ants from Hives.—I notice an inquiry in your paper asking what will keep ants from a bee-hive, and as I have tried the same I give it for the benefit of your numerous readers: Place tansy in and around the houses; or camphor gum; either will do. Ex.

How a Hog Sweats.—A hog does not sweat like a horse or a man, but through his fore legs. There is a spot on each leg, just below the knee, in the form of a sieve. Through this the sweat passes off. And it is quite necessary that this should be kept open. If it gets closed, as is sometimes the case, the hog will get sick. He will appear stiff and cramped, and unless he gets relief it will go hard with him. To cure him, simply open the pores. This is done by rubbing the spot with a corn cob, and washing with warm water.

The removal of the earth about an early tree eight weeks before the normal period for ripening, for a space of thirteen to fifteen feet in diameter, leaving only about two inches of earth on the roots, and thus allowing them to be thoroughly warmed by the sun, resulted not only in the ripening of the fruit in the middle of July, but also in its superior juiciness and flavor. The removal of earth from the north side of a tree, caused the fruit on that side to ripen several days earlier than that on the south side.

Barlow finally withdrew his motion and L. N. Stratton of New York presented the following:

"Resolved, that we recommend that the National Central Committee endeavor so far as possible, to procure the selection of electoral tickets in the difierent States and the circulation of electoral tickets."

Richard Green of Indiana said, The resolution of Bro. Stratton fills the bill. I have been in the reform struggle more than forty years and voted the first abolition ticket, and the first Anti-masonic ticket. I voted for Adams and Barlow and wrote the names and made out my own electoral ticket, and that vote went to Indianapolis and was recorded. We must vote our principles, vote as we pray. No one should call him a hypocrite, but Indiana should have at least one vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick, if he was alive.

The resolution was carried and it was then moved to elect a National Central Committee.

L. N. Stratton said he had never taken much stock in the political movement of the reform because he was in doubt whether we were yet able to make a respectable laughing stock. He had no idea that the ticket of Walker and Kirkpatrick would be elected. Our strength would not go a great way, but it was sometimes a great victory to lose for the right. He would be satisfied to lose if the American party can make even a respectable laughing stock for the country, for there is such a thing as being respectable even in that. Neither of the great parties will help us in carryiug out the principles of our reform; nor can we look to these parties to reform the abuses and corruption now widespread in the land. In New York the Republican party has done the worst and meanest things that could be possible in politics. A Republican legislature not long ago chartered the "Incorporated Wine and Spirit Company" with privileges that usurped the power of the State government itself, the meanest and wickedest political organization in existence. Both parties, Democratic or Republican, are corrupt; I cannot support all their measures, nor will I advocate them. I would burn at the stake first. One question before us is whether we can cast votes enough so that candid, honest people will be influenced favorably by such action. The only question I ask myself is, What shall we do? Horace Greeley once wrote in the Independent that all the gambling hells, all the saloons and doggeries and haunts of vice always know how to vote, but an honest man is often in doubt. He goes to the polls with his ballot in his hand, but returns without casting it. He had voted with the prohibition party in New York hitherto, and had the supreme satisfaction of having done his duty at the polls. That party in New York State is clear from complicity with the secret rings and orders and he could support it.

It was then voted to appoint a National Committee and C. A. Blanchard moved a com mittee to nominate. On the vote of the body the chair appointed L. N. Stratton, W. R. Smith and C. A. Blanchard as such committee.

While the committee was out it was suggested that it would be proper for a further effort to be made for defraying the expenses of the meeting and of the convention, and a further appeal was successful in raising the total subscription to over $170.

The special committee on nominating a National Central Committee then reported as follows:

Prof. C. A. Blanchard, of Illinois; Cornelius Quick, of Michigan; N. P. Wolf, of Iowa; Halleck Floyd, of Indiana; William Dillon, of Ohio; W. B. Bertels, of Pennsylvania; William McCoy, of Oregon; S. Hillman, of Minnesota; J. W. Wood, of Wisconsin; Geo. W. Needles, of Missouri: P. D. Miller, of New York; Philip Bacon, of Connecticut; S. C. Kimball, of New Hampshire; S. D. Green, of Massachusetts; J. H. Kennedy, of California; P. S. Feemster, of Mississippi; N. F. Cune, of Tennessee; Gen. J. W. Phelps, of Vermont; G. W. Stratton, of Virginia; J. H. Wolford, of West Virginia; J. T. Walsh, of North Carolina; O. F. Wilbur, of New Jersey; S. Austin, of Nebraska; S. Sexton, of Kansas; J. H. Watson, of Washington territory.

The report was received and adopted.

C. A. Blanchard and E. A. Cook were appointed a committee to select and fill out the committee, where any State which should be represented was not.

Rev. W. H. French, D. D. of Cincinnati was then invited to discuss the first article of the platform, that "Ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government." He said our nation has been always Christian in its character. Those who first came to its shores in search of religious liberty were Christians and planted the institutions of Christianity and observed first of all the Christian Sabbath. The nation has grown up a Christian nation, with Christian institutions; churches, asylums, hospitals, all have the Christian stamp. Our days of public thanksgiving and of public fasting are Christian institutions pre-eminently. After the generation of our fathers had passed away, men have arisen who claim that ours is not a Christian nation, nor should we as a nation respect the ordinances of the great Jehovah, but should be a law unto ourselves. Thus it has become necessary to advocate an amendment to the Constitution declaring the real position of this country. Government should always recognize its dependence upon God, for by his power alone has it an existence. In their organized capacity God gives a people laws, and holds them responsible for any violation of those laws. He held the Jewish nation accountable to himself and punished them severely for their transgression. It has always been true that the nation and people that served not God perished. That God visits nations in judgment is proof of their accountability to him. There is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Nations therefore are subject to his will and he will hold this nation accountable for its transgressions.

Halleck Floyd of Indiana was also called upon to speak on the fourth plank which reads:

"The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law."

It has been clearly proved, he said, that ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation by the speaker preceding. Our constitution as given to us from the fathers is a transcript of their purity and integrity. Organized secretism is at war with the principles of our constitution. It has been proved that this system supports caste and favoritism. What are they licensed to do? To abrogate the law of God in regard to the civil equality of mankind.

W. S. May of Iowa spoke on the same article. He said it is high time we were doing something politically. He had met considerable opposition from Freemasonry in his evangelistic labors in Iowa. They endeavored to destroy his influence as a preacher of the whole Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is high time we were at work on this line against the lodges. In the time of anti-slavery reform we were told it was no use to oppose so extended and powerful an evil; that we were too weak to put it down; had no influence with the government against it. But the Lord had power to put away the iniquity in answer to our prayers. It is high time this nation withdrew the charters of these societies. Freemasons fear political action against their order, well knowing it cannot bear the investigation that would result. They fear, that in spite of our weakness we may arouse the popular voice against them. Let us enter upon this work with heart and soul and to our faith God will give the victory.

On article fifth J. L. Barlow excused himself from making any lengthy remarks. He believed the article expressed a self-evident truth. Equality before the law lies at the basis of all our liberties. Secret societies are training the people to look favorably upon caste in society and favoritism in religious and civil affairs. The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to our constitution establish equality of citizenship and are thus rigorously opposed to the principles and manners of the secret orders.

H. H. Hinman spoke briefly on the sixth article, "That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace."

Geo. W. Champ of Indiana, moved that article 9th of the platform, on specie payment, be amended so as to add at its close the words "without detriment to the commercial interests of the country." The amendment was adopted, though not without some objection that it made more indefinite an article not very positive at first. Article 9th now reads: "That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable, without detriment to the commercial interests of the country."

H. H. Hinman moved that a committee of three be appointed to correspond with the candidates for the presidency of all parties, and obtain from them their views about secret societies. This provoked considerable discussion and was finally defeated, it being the general opinion that under the circumstances equivocal and unsatisfactory replies would be all that could be obtained.

Richard Green thought it would be a serious reflection, almost an insult to our own candidates. Elder Barlow thought it would at least be going back on our record as the American Party, and others agreed with him.

Father Isaac Preston of Illinois favored the resolution, and spoke of the present deplorable corruption of political parties, and of the administration at Washington. Yet he doubted the expediency of urging nominations by the Anti-masonic reform at present. The chief objection to such action was the yet unsettled condition of the freed men. We could not afford, he thought, to make any plans that might place them at the mercy of their former drivers by dividing the vote of the Republican party. He thought the convention should support Hayes and Wheeler.

E. A. Cook remarked that Hayes was candidate of the grangers, and was therefore identified with secret societies, if he did not belong to the Masons.

When this had been settled, three cheers were proposed and given with a will for Walker and Kirkpatrick.

While some previous discussion was pending, in view of the adjournment of the convention and dispersion of the members it was proposed to omit the repetition of the third degree initiation on Friday evening. But it was voted finally to give the full measure of the announcement.

The thanks of the convention were then voted to the chairman, to the friends in the city who had interested themselves in entertaining the delegates, and to the city press for fairly reporting the proceedings; and after prayer the convention adjourned.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Free Methodist church of this city, Rev. M. L. Vorheis, pastor, after negotiations extending through several months, have purchased and taken possession of the large frame church on the north-east corner of North May and Fulton streets, formerly owned by a society of Reformed Presbyterians. The property, including the land, was bought at a very low cost, and will be creditably fitted up for the use of the new owners, who expect to worship in it for the first time, Saturday evening, July 22nd, on the occasion of the fourth quarterly conference of this year. The consecration services will continue through the following day, and it is expected that several distinguished preachers of the Free Methodist faith and members from other charges will participate. The location is eligible, and the pecuniary status of the society quite encouraging. On Sunday morning, July 23rd J. G. Terrill will preach upon the origin and polity of the Free Methodist church of America.

—On Monday last a public religious service was held on the lake shore near the Exposition buildings in this city, on the occasion of the departure of Captain Bundy's boat, "Glad Tidings." This vessel has been fitted up for gospel service, under the direction of the Seaman's Friend Society, The exercises were participated in by a number of representative Christian men, among whom were Rev. Dr. Goodwin and Major Whittle.

—Through the liberalty of citizens the balance of the debt on Mr. Moody's church has been paid and on Sunday last the dedicatory services were held, though Mr. Moody is absent in the East. The opening exercises were conducted by the pastor, the Rev. W. J. Erdman, and Maj. D. W. Whittle, after which the Rev. J. H. Brooks, of the Walnut street Presbyterian church, St. Louis, preached the dedicatory sermon, choosing for his text Hebrews, ii., 23—"In whom all the building, fitly joined together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord."

After the singing of a hymn, Maj. Whittle read a short history of the Chicago Avenue church, tracing its rise from a small Sunday-school in 1859 to its present independent successful condition. The Sabbath-school now numbered 900, and the church membership 350. The cost of the building was $67,000, and of the lot $22,000. The church proper was paid for. A collection was then taken up to defray the expenses of paving the streets and sidewalks in front of the church, and for necessary conveniences in the Sunday-school.

News of the Week.

—The special election for Mayor in Chicago passed off quietly last week Tuesday. Mr. Heath, Republican, was elected by 10,000 or 12,000 over the Democratic and Colvin ring candidates.

—After a season of comparative peace and quiet, says the Boston Post, the Molly Maguires in Luzerne Co., Pa., have shown their hands again in the brutal murder of one Patrick O'Brien, who revealed the plot to kill constable Burns. These outlaws have also posted ku-klux notices on a number of obnoxious miner's tenements, and are evincing the spirit that has led to so much diabolism and unpunished and unavenged murder in the past. But the trials of members of this organization that have taken place, the convictions that have been reached, and the shocking disclosures that have been made respecting the acts and purposes of these closely banded murderers, have caused considerable healthy fear among a class that is susceptible to no other influence. On the 12th a "Mollie" was sentenced to be hung at Pottsville, Pa.

—Lieutenant Young, who has led out the missionary colonizing expedition into Central Africa, to found and carry on the good work of Christian civilization at Livingstonia, reports that the Sultan of Zanzibar has sent out two proclamations to all his Governors, enjoining in some of the sternest terms that all slave dealers shall be seized and imprisoned, that their slaves shall be confiscated, and that slave caravans shall not be fitted out or permitted to enter his dominions, extending as they do, more than eight hundred miles along the coast. This is a most important movement, and may effectually stop the Arabic and Persian portion of the infamous slave trade.

—A terrible tragedy occurred in Jersey City last week. Two policemen were arresting three Germans when the latter fired upon them killing one and mortally wounding the other. They then rushed to the street, fired and killed a man living near and then running to a tannery where they had been employed they sought the foreman to kill him, but failing shot two others employed in the establishment. The rest of the workmen then attacked the desperadoes, drove them into the river and stoned them as they drowned.

—Another of the monster war-vessels of the British navy has come to an untimely end. The Thunderer, while making a trial of speed yesterday, burst her boilers, instantly killing twenty-one persons, and wounding sixty, of whom twenty-six are believed to be fatally injured.

—The Servian war seems to have gone against the Moslems though dispatches from Turkish sources give the advantages to themselves. Several small battles have been fought with a uniform result. The Turks have an army of 200,000 with 100,000 reserves while the Servians and their allies can barely muster 130,000 all told. They hope for assistance and already a correspondent at Vienna reports that 25,000 Russian volunteers are ready to march to the assistance of Servia, and have asked the Roumanian Government for permission to pass through its territory. This application is a source of the greatest embarassment to the Roumanian Government.

—London, July 14.—Lord Derby this afternoon received a deputation of the Christian League and severely criticized their memorial, though in the main he expressed sympathy with the objects in regard to atrocities. He said that doubtless both sides committed them, and continued: "All we desire is to see fair play. If Turkey is decayed, we cannot help it. We have guaranteed Turkey against murder, but not against suicide or sudden death. If an opportunity of mediation offers, which opportunity may even now be at hand, we shall avail ourselves of it."

IS HE A FREEMASON?

If he lives in Illinois no one need wait long for an answer to the above question. For 25cents we send Post Paid, the Illinois Masonic Register, giving the name of every Mason, and all the lodges in the State. We have but a few copies left.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argumt. 425 pagenes,
Price, $1.35.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicongrapher, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

TRUE MASONIC CHART; OR, HIEROGLYPHIC MONITOR.

By Jeremy L. Cross, Grand Lecturer.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Author, Containing all the Emblems explained in the Degrees of entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason. Designed and arranged agreeably to the Lectures.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry.

A PRACTICAL Guide to the Ceremonies in the Degrees conferred in Masonic Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated edition. In cloth, $1.25: paper, 75 Cts.

Although this Monitor is extensively used in the Lodge, especially in Conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an "exposition," and not allowed as authority.

Allyn's Ritual of Masonry,

ILLUSTRATED by a large number of Engravings, and containing a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa, Orange and Odd-fellows' Societies.
Price, $5.00.

DUNCAN'S MASONIC RITUAL AND MONITOR,

PROFUSELY Illustrated with Explanitory Engravings, and containing the entire Ritual and work of the Order for the Seven Degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a Standard Text-Book in the Lodge, and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though almost every officer of the Lodge makes use of it. Price in cloth, $2.50.

FEMALE MASONRY.

Mannual of The Order of The Eastern Star.

Containing the Ritual, Symbols Lectures etc., of the five Degrees of "Adoptive Masonry;" Jeptha's Daughter; Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustraited and handsomely bound.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circnlation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hnndreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosnre Tracts were gratnitonsly sent ont. mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. bnt innds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be gladto circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

ONE DAY'S WORK.

Two of our readers have each put in a day's work for the Cynosure. One of them, W. J. OLMSTED, Sparta, Mich., sends nine new subscriptions, one for a year, three for six months and four for three months, he writes: "These are all good citizens and will renew for the paper." JACOB MARKLE, Maquoketa, Iowa, sends his renewal and five new subscriptions and writes: "I labored hard on the fourth of July to get these subscriptions." Fourth of July celebrations of this kind do honor to the memories of those who signed the Declaration of Independence with a determination to back up their signature by self-denying efforts for the maintenance of civilized freedom.

ONE DAY'S WORK! Who can give a day to canvassing for Cynosure this week?

Moses Pettengill, Peoria, Ill., sends in a club of six for a year. We thank these friends and also those who have sent in one, two or three new names. Can any one help next week's report?

The following card explains itself:

'KIND SIRS:'

Those photo engravings and Declaration of Independence have arrived here in good order. It affords me great pleasure to inform you that I am well satisfied with them. I must acknowledge that I was quite surprised to obtain such good and beautiful engravings for so small an amount of money. I consider them more a present than a purchase! Everybody I show them to admires them. Thanking you for your kindness, I subscribe myself

Yours truly,
REV. CHARLES F. OBERMEYER.
FARMINGTON, St. FRANCOIS Co., Mo.

Any one forwarding $2.20 with the name of a new subscriber is entitled to one of these sets of engravings by saying in the letter that it is desired as subscription. Or any one by sending fifty cents cash can purchase them. They are sent post paid.

25 COPIES OR MORE SENT AT THE 100 RATES.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

CALIFORNIA

Have you any thought of going to California? Are you going West, North, or North-West? You want to know the best routes to take?

The shortest, safest, quickest and most comfortable routes are those owned by the Chicago and North-Western Railway Company. It owns over two thousand miles of the best roads there is in the country. Ask any ticket agent to show you its maps and time cards. All ticket agents can sell you through tickets by this route.

Buy your tickets via the Chicago & North-Western Railway for the West and North-West, and for

SAN FRANCISCO,

Sacramento, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Cheyenne, Denver, Omaha, Lincoln, Council Bluffs, Yankton, Sioux City, Dubuque, Winona, St Paul, Duluth, Marquette, Green Bay, Oshkosh, Madison, Milwaukee, and all other points West or North-West of Chicago.

If you wish the best traveling accommodations, you will buy your tickets by this route, and will take no other.

This popular route is unsurpassed for speed, comfort and safety. The smooth, well-ballasted and perfect track of Steel Rails, Westinghouse Air Brakes, Miller's Safety Platform and Couplers, the celebrated Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars, the perfect Telegraph System of Moving Trains, the regularity with which they run, the admirable arrangement for running Through Cars from Chicago to all points West, North and North-West, secures to passengers all the COMFORTS IN MODERN RAILWAY TRAVELING.

PULLMAN PALACE CARS

are run on all through trains of this road.

This is the ONLY LINE running these cars between Chicago and St. Paul, Chicago and Milwaukee, or Chicago and Winona.

At Omaha our Sleepers connect with the Overland Sleepers on the Union Pacific Railroad for all points West of the Missouri River.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and North-Western Railway LEAVE CHICAGO as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California, Two Through Trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two Through Trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two Trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, four Through Trains daily. Pullman Cars on night trains, Parlor Chair Cars on day trains.

For Sparta and Winona and points in Minnesota, One Through Train daily, with Pullman Sleepers to Winona.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker, of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

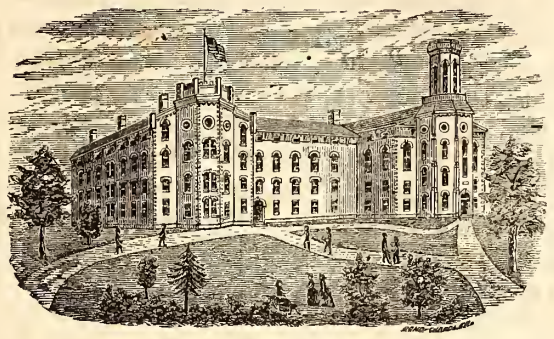
5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.



10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

The State Convention recently met at Muncie, Indiana, decided to postpone action till Tuesday, Aug. 1st, next, when a general mass Convention will meet at FAIRMOUNT, GRANT Co. Delegates will be entertained; able speakers will be present; Prof. Bell of Alexandria will add to the interest of the occasion with vocal and instrumental music.

A State Convention is called to meet August 16th and 17th in Winchester, Jefferson Co., Kansas, to nominate a State electoral ticket and consider other important measures in connection with the State Association.

Fall Term, begins Sept. 6th, 1876, Winter Term, Jan 4th, 1877;
Spring Term April 5th, 1877.

For Catalogues address J. BLANCHARD, Pres't.

LOCATION.

Wheaton College, of which a cut is seen above, is located on the Iowa Division of the Chicago and Northwestern rail-road in the village of Wheaton. This town is one of the most healthful and pleasantly located in northern Illinois. It contains about two thousand inhabitants; and Congregational, Wesleyan, Baptist, Methodist, Free Methodist and German Lutheran Churches.

INSTRUCTION.

It is the intention of the Board of Trust and the Faculty to make the instruction of this Institution thorough in every respect, without caring to develop the merely showy and ornamental, they intend to furnish facilities which will enable young men and women to obtain a solid education in the Classics, Mathematics, Natural, Mental and Moral Science, Music, Painting and Drawing, with Book-keeping and Penmanship.

EXPENSES.

Young Ladies can board, in the Building represented above, for one hundred and fifty dollars per year; payable, seventy-five dollars at the opening and seventy-five dollars at the middle of the year, and assisting one hour per day in the domestic department. Daughters of ministers and missionaries can have the same privileges for one hundred dollars per year and one hour labor per day in the domestic department. For this sum of money the student has board, tuition and room during the year. Each room contains bedstead, mattress, pillows, stove, washing utensils, etc. Fuel and lights are furnished at cost. There are also a few families where young ladies dependent on their own exertions can defray a part or the whole of these expenses by assisting in the family work.

Young men board themselves in rented rooms, or rent rooms and board at the College, or have their board in families. They can get along with one hundred dollars a year by boarding themselves; one hundred and seventy-five boarding at the College, and from that sum to two hundred and fifty boarding in private families. In other words the expenses are from one-third to one one-sixth part as great as at Eastern Colleges, while the facilities are in many respects as good. The tuition is thirty dollars per year in the College classes, twenty-four in the Scientific, Preparatory and English Course. This tuition includes everything but Drawing and Painting, Music and Penmanship, which are extra. For further and definite information see Catalogue.

RELIGIOUS INFLUENCE.

It is and will be the constant endeavor of the Faculty to promote the spiritual as well as the intellectual welfare of their students. While their are no religious tests for admission students are expected to attend some church on the Sabbath and devotional exercises daily in the Chapel. It is also understood that students attending this Institution entirely abstain from Tobacco, Billiards, Cards, Secret Societies and other hindrances to good morals and good scholarship. The efforts of the Faculty in the past to this end have been, by the blessing of God, successful to a great degree and it is hoped may be still more so in the future.

REFERENCES.

There are now nearly one hundred Alumni who are doing credit to themselves and the Institution in the Ministry, at the Bar, in the Schools and Colleges of the country and in other places of responsibility. The Illinois State Association has repeatedly commended it to the confidence of the intelligent public as have Dr. J. E. Roy, Rev. James Powell, Dr. Geo. N. Boardman, Prof. F. W. Fisk, Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, Hon. Wm. H. Bradley, Philo Carpenter, Prof. James T. Hyde, Rev. N. A. Prentiss, Prof. T. W. Hopkins, Jas. W. Scoville, Rev. S. J. Humphrey, Dr. W. A. Bartlett, Hon. S. B. Gookins, Dr. E. P. Goodwin, Dr. C. D. Helmer, Hon. W. W. Farwell, and others.

The Fall Term opens September 6th, let all those who contemplate sending sons or daughters away to school write for a catalogue to

In the propagation of Freemasonry many volumes of elegantly written trash are circulated over the country, as Masonic text-books, manuals, charts, guides, monitors and discourses. These eulogistic books are mere gull-traps, designed to lead the unwary into the lodge, but utterly failing to unfold the real principles and tendency of the abominable fraternity. The "Universal Masonic Library," so-called, is a serious series of thirty volumes of "the standard literature" of the order; yet this vast quantity of eulogistic bombast "sedulously" conceals all the oaths, obligations, forms of initiation, etc. These books "admit that there are many things in Masonry which require to be sedulously concealed, and even derive a superior value from such concealment." See "Univ. Mas. Lib., vol. IV,—Antiq. and Masonic Discourses,—p. viii." In the preface to Dr. George Oliver's "Antiquities of Freemasonry," he opens out on "the square and compasses," in the following rose-tinted style:

"The whole system of man's moral and social duties lies on a level, so far as relates to his commerce with this world; but his duties to God rise into a perpendicular, which united emblems form a perfect SQUARE." "The COMPASSES not only describe the widely-extended circle of Masonic benevolence, but also represent the boundless power and eternal duration of the Creator and Governor of the Universe."—pp. ix, x.

And this he gravely presents, to illustrate, in a few words, that Masonic employment "consists in critical investigations of human science, history, and religious truth." What a convincing illustration! The symbols in pagan religions are fully as expressive and sublime; yea, more so. A dove which had no gall according to the ancients, (Pliny, Nat. Hist., lib. 10, c. 34. Ovid, Metamorp., lib. 7, v. 369. Caesarius, Dial. 4, ap. 191.) is represented as flying over the wall of the garden of the Hesperides, in perfect unconsciousness of the snakes or serpents who kept the gates of that garden. (Diob., lib. 4. Ovid Metamorp, lib. 4, v. 637; lib. 9, v. 90. Hygin., tab. 30. Apollod., lib. 3, c. 5. Hesiod. Theogn., lib. 5, v. 215.) This old pagan symbol contains as much valnable illustration of truth, and recommends as many of the amiable precepts of virtue, as can be found in the whole system of Freemasonry. It showed the ultimate triumph of innocent virtue over cunning craftiness. The perspicacity, circumspection, secrecy, and plans of the serpents to guard the garden of the Hesperides, prove all in vain. Artfulness and hiddenness and malignity cannot compass the final defeat of harmless open innocence, of which the dove has always been the chosen emblem. (Clemens Alex., Padag., lib. i, 5, Tertul. de Baptismo, cap. 8, Isiodor. Orig., lib. xxii.)

It was the boast of old pagan "mysteries," that all their symbols illustrated and recommended valuable truth, of which the uninitiated must be ignorant; and yet in their secret conclaves, shameful acts and disgraceful scenes were indulged. So to day, the fraternity of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, would captivate us by large boastful pretensions of superior wisdom and goodness; and yet there is a humiliating, disgraceful ceremony of initiation, in which the poor dupe who is beguiled into the order plays the part of wickedness assigned to him. Nearly naked, hoodwinked, with a cable-tow about him, he kneels before the "Worshipful Master," to repeat a profane and abominable oath which I need not quote.

The axample of ministers of the Gospel is another argument used in propagation of Freemasonry. Why have good men united with this fraternity, and continued to countenance it so long? The fact that so many ministers of Christ belong, is urged by Freemasons as a conclusive argument in favor of their craft. But this question can be met without any trouble. If Freemasonry be a good institution, pure in its principles and congenial to the nature of Christianity, why have so many men of undoubted piety and sound judgment been willing to renounce and denounce it? Why do so many religious and intelligent men repudiate its pretended oaths and reveal its boasted mysteries? It is easy to see why good men have sometimes united with that order. They have been beguiled into it by its superior claims of sanctity and goodness, and attracted by its wonderful professions. After finding out the deception, these men have often continued in the order from mere force of circumstances. The frivolity, obsceneness, blasphemy and expensiveness of the order, undoubtedly shock the honest and intelligent novitiate; but having imbibed an erroneous view of the nature of an oath and a false notion of the nature of perjury, he keeps his mouth shut, and solaces his conscience with meditations on the boasted renown that professedly is emblazoned on the escutcheons of the august fraternity. This very honest and intelligent patron of the lodge, is held up by the lodges as a sort of stool-pigeon for leading others into the trap. He is, therefore made to act a very prominent part on days of festivals, funerals etc.

1st. A feeling of shame hinders the man from publishing openly to the world his delusion and folly.

2nd. A mistaken belief that his Masonic obligations are morally binding upon him, holds him back.

3rd. A dread of incurring the wrath of the adhering portion of the fraternity, weighs upon his spirit like a terrible nightmare upon the nerves of a dreamer.

4th. A vague hope that he may yet find some redeeming feature in the illusive rites of the order, leads him to keep nibbling, like a duped fish, at the bait set before him.

5th. An ignorance of the real design and scope of the order, and want of power to inform himself of the variety and extent of the evils embodied in the deepest laid degrees of the fraternity, together with some or all of the other considerations which I have named, may conspire to silence his tongue and seal his lips. Yet, the friends of Freemasonry will boldly point to him, as a good man who has united with and who continues to countenance that order. "If the Masonic institution be so great an evil, why did this Mr. Bonus Homo, join it, and why has he continued to countenance it so long?

This question aids in the propagation of Freemasonry. It is a flimsy narrow foolish query; but it has an effect. Some men are carried away by sophistry, particularly when it is shrewdly concealed in the form of a question. They would be ashamed of the same sophistry if it were put into syllogistic forms.

Major premiss.—A good man will not join a corrupt institution and continue to give it countenance.

Minor.—Mr. Bonus Homo is either a good man or a wonderful hypocrite.

Conclusion: Therefore, he will not join etc.,

Notice, the major premiss is too extensive. A good man may join an evil institution, under the delusion that it is a good and beneficial thing.

The minor premiss is uncertain. Here is certainly an undistributed middle; and no conclusion can follow Now, try a syllogison of a dfferent kind.

Major premiss.—Any institution which many men of sound judgment and established piety have renounced and denounced as impure and unholy in principle, is dangerous to good morals and vicious in tendency.

Minor.—Many men of sound judgment and established piety have renounced Freemasonry and denounced it as impure and unholy in principle.

Conclusion: Therefore, Freemasonry is dangerous to good morals and vicious in tendency.

Here the syllogism is sound. It has no logical defect in either of the premises. The major is not too extensive. The minor cannot be denied. This syllogism conforms to the requirement of a distributed middle. Of course the conclusion does and must follow, and it cannot be evaded.

The propagation of Freemasonry is secured by misrepresentation and fraud, and yet some people claim men ought not to break their Masonic oaths and reveal Masonic secrets. We ought fo obey God rather men. He has revealed that oath-bound secrecy is wrong, and no human power can make it right. Whenever God says a particular oath is going to bring guilt upon the soul, the sooner and surer that oath is disregarded the better for man. All our obligations to God are binding. When he wants an oath broken, it is right to break it. The claims of home and country are sacred. Any other conclusion is treason of the deepest dye. Whatever interferes with these claims may be innocently shaken off. The very circumstances under which a man is made a Mason completely absolve him from his Masonic vows, since he swears to conform to customs and usages which are not made known to him till after the obligation is taken, and which are therefore nugatory.

Give us a ticket. The American party is outgrowing all other parties. The propagation of Freemasonry must cease.

THE ENEMY IN AMBUSH.

Freemasonry has an advantage in one respect over its opponents. It hides in ambush. It fires its bullets of denials, heavy as lead, but its gunpowder being void of the important element of consistency, has but little power to send home its charge. Freemasonry denies that it is a religion, and affirms with equal warmth that is. It denies that it competes with Christianity, yet affirms that it does. It denies that it interferes with any man's religion, yet tells him his religion is that of sectarianism, and he must, as a Mason, be cosmopolitan. The Jew and Mohammedan, the Buddhist and Christian, may all be brethren in the one lodge, and worship the Masonic god, but the god of the Jew as such, or of the Mohammedan as such, cannot be worshiped in the lodge on true Masonic principles, and the same law equally excludes the God of the Christian. The ritual is full of religious emblems, but none are emblems of Christ as their Lord and Master. That would be sectarian in the Masonic eye! 'Tis passing strange that Freemasonry can so transparently ignore Christ, and present another master of conscience, and yet pretend not to interfere with anybody's religion! But—oh yes—all right! Bill Lodge don't interfere with Tom Green when Tom is heartily doing precisely what Bill wants! T.

Poetry is not made out of the understanding. The question of common sense is always: "What is it good for?" a question which would abolish the rose and be triumphant-answeredly by the cabbage.—Lowell.

THE NINTH NATIONAL CONVENTION.

SECRET SOCIETIES AND THE PUBLIC CONSCIENCE.

ADDRESS OF REV. W. H. FRENCH, D. D., CINCINNATI.

The present year is one of retrospect and of prospect; a centre of time for narrative and prediction, to which the lines of history converge and from which the lines of prophecy diverge. Standing in this interesting and important point and surveying the past of our nation and its present magnitude and majesty and with prophetic eye seeking to scan the dim future, we are not indifferent to the causes which have produced the present greatness nor yet to the guardianship which they need. Blessed of God to this day because of the fathers, and for their sakes, reaping golden harvests from the seed sown by them we coolly deliberate whether we shall sow the same seed for the coming ages, or "thistles instead of wheat and cockle instead of barley."

We have had in the past privileges and progress and growth unexampled, and they have brought forth fruit in a present position, privileges and greatness unequaled in republican government.

The broad wilderness and prairies, reaching from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific, through which the wild man roamed at will have been cleared and tilled, and settled by another portion of the human family, and before civilization the wigwam disappeared and the stately mansion rose in its place; the Indian village gave place to the populous city. Instead of the click, click, of the flint upon flints and sand-stone in the production of the dart head, the rude axe, columns of smoke rising from a thousand chimneys are seen, and everywhere are heard the thunder of the steam hammer, the whirl and twirl of the spindle and the racket of the loom. By almost every conceivable device of human genius, that almost imparts her genius to her devices, material is being changed in form and fashioned for specific purposes. More rapid modes of travel take the place of the former slow methods. Europe is brought within ten days of America and the merchant in New York seems to sit side by side with his partner in Liverpool and converse; the news of Europe yesterday is published in the issues of our morning papers. The Sultan of Turkey is dethroned to-day and his nephew in his place, and to-morrow morning the news is spread all over the United States, all over the world. The old log school-house is of the past, and in its stead has arisen the massive costly structure, ornate and beautiful,and the children of the lowly poor sit in palaces and study the rudiments of learning. The old log churches of rude interior and ruder exterior, with their rough hewn benches, not inviting sleep,have gone, and in their stead have risen thousands and thousands of stately structures with their tall spires pointing to the throne of that God that is worshipped within their walls, and the printing press scatters pages of literature like "leaves that strew the brooks of Vallumbrosa;" and heights of sublimity of which our fathers did not dare dream, have been reached by us. One hundred years from the Declaration of American Independence, in the same old city of brotherly love where it was first signed, are collected from the States the tokens of our achievements, the evidences of the nation's greatness, to which display other nations have brought their offerings. The nation's glory and strength may there be seen and something of the vastness of its resources as they are being developed. It is a grand display of the triumph of human genius, of the power of mind and bears testimony that man was made in the image of God and the defaced image is not yet lost.

These results are the effects of causes. There is a fountain from which they flow—a source from which they spring. Physical effects are produced by physical and moral causes combined; and surveying the effects in the vast progress of the past and the wonderful attainments of the present, we look for the vaster, grander causes (which produced them) those that like the fountain that affords a constant supply to its streams that they may flow on full, must always exist and be always operative, that they may produce continued results. Back of all physical causes, and of genius and intellectual strength, there lies a guiding principle of the human mind, just as necessary to the achievements of the past and to the progress of the future as these powers themselves. Two noble ships are upon the high seas; alike in size, color, beauty, and elegance of structure. But they do not move alike. The one moves majestically on straight in her course toward her destination. The other is driven to and fro, unsteady in her movement, swaying and driven by each bounding wave. Whence this difference? The helmsman stands in his place, on the one his hand holds firm its grasp upon the wheel. The other is rudder-broken and the hand of the pilot palsied, has loosed its hold upon the wheel and she floats aimlessly. A nation and people may possess natural resources, and powers physical and moral; all the elements of greatness, but they can never attain it without a directing, guiding principle. That principle is the moral sense —the conscience. That conscience will always be as the religion of the people, and the laws by which a people are governed will be as their conscience. Conscience is the mother of law. From the inborn sense of right arises the respect for the relation which exists between man and man, and man and God. So that regarding the rights of men, laws were framed to secure them. But the material growth and moral progress of any people depend upon the laws of the State. No government can secure the ends for which it is designed, the happiness of its people, without good laws, and these well executed. Far more than to our soil and climate and mineral wealth, forests and mountains of ore, were our growth, progress and prosperity due to all our laws, that secured to men their rights and liberties, and established the equality of all men before the law. This invited immigration; crushed and oppressed genius sought our shores and found room to grow and bring forth fruit. And the nation in this her new land free comparatively from the corrupting influences that overturn laws, bribe its non-enforcement, and secure legislation for special ends, moved steadily on apparently unconscious that in her easy course she was moving on toward increasing corruption, and multiplying difficulties and dangers to the public weal; and standing now on the nether shore of a second century of national existence, she cannot be indifferent to the preservation of the public morals, the public conscience. Nor can the people fail to see that the future must depend upon the preservation of the great moral causes which produced the present sublime results. With this in view, in this time that so loudly demands reform, the causes of corruption, and influences calculated to deaden the moral sense cannot be disregarded.

Among these influences we are to ask what rank secret oath-bound associations hold. Do they exert a corrupting influence? First, the influence upon the members of the fraternities themselves.

A correct conscience cannot be separated from the Christian religion, for it will err where there is want of knowledge of the true and right. The moral sense of the pagan justifies theft, because he is taught that under certain circumstances, performed with such adroitness as to secure escape from detection it is right. The law of the gods permits it. He worships the god of theft. The worshipers of the god of murder (and what vice and crime have not been deified?) feel quite at ease in presenting to him their murdered victims. Their god required it. Their infant offspring were not withheld. The Ganges and the Nile bore upon their bosoms countless infants offered to the river god. So conscience demanded. The Savior forewarned his disciples of a time coming when their murderers should reckon themselves the servers of God. Their moral sense would approve their crime and they should feel that they were doing right and were approved of God. On the contrary he who is taught the precepts of the inimitable code of morals given to Moses upon Mount Sinai in ten all-comprehensive precepts, the embodiment of all morality and of all wisdom, holds in supreme contempt the crime of theft, and shrinks from murder with ghastly horror as a crime forbidden and abhorred of God. I mean by being taught this law, more than merely knowing its existence and that its commands are facts, I mean taught it as coming from God's throne, and to regard the throne whence they come. It may be boldly declared that whatever weakens the sense of obligation to God, or the regard for the Christian religion and the sacred institutions of that religion is in its tendency destructive of sound morals and of sound conscience. Among the appointments of God is the oath. It is to be "to men an end of all strife." It must be lawfully administered and it has its sanction which gives it its force and efficiency. The prohibition of profane swearing puts a guard around the oath and gives a sacredness to it. There is in it a direct appeal to God. This appeal gives sacredness to it, gives it sanction and produces the fear of it. It places the apellant in God's hand to be judged by him if he prove false in his testimony. Hence the professed atheist may not take it. The direct appeal to God is the very pith and marrow, the sacredness, solemnity and obligation of the oath. The Ommiscient, the Omnipotent shall judge righteously, and the diverting of the mind from this to any inferior obligation lessens its sanctity and its effectiveness. In the oath as administered by the Masons there is an attempt to give sanction and sacredness to it, not from its appeal to God, but from the barbarousness of the penalty inflicted by the hand of man. The advance therefore in the degrees has its corresponding advance in the barbarousness of the infliction upon the offender. The secret being more profound and to be kept with greater vigilance must be guarded by the increase of the obligation. How shall they add to it? By heaping up man-inflicted penalties. In the degree of Entered Apprentice the penalty of the violation of the oath—or the penal sanction—is in these words: "Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours." In the higher or Master Mason's degree we have the higher penalty and still more barbarous infliction: "Binding myself under no less a penalty than to have my body severed in two in the midst and divided to the North and South, my bowels burnt to ashes in the centre and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, that there might not be the least track or trace of remembrance remaining among men and Masons of so vile and perjured a wretch as I should be, were I ever to be wilfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a Master Mason. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the performance of the same." Such sanction to an oath brings it down from the lofty position which it occupies among the institutions of God, and degrades it to a common thing. And while the minds of the members of the fraternities are filled with these things their conscience toward God is being weakened and deadened, and their regard for an oath is lowered. Let this form of oath be admitted to our courts, civil and ecclesiastical, and what will be the regard for it? What matters it to him who would make false statements that after the throat-cutting any of the other penalties should be inflicted? —what matters it to him whether the tide ebb and flow twice in twenty-four hours or whether the same occur ten or twelve times? And if one is to be cut in twain whether North and South or East and West they are quite done with him; and the burning of the bowels in the midst in these times of the advocacy of cremation, will give room for discussion whether it be a penalty or a tribute of respect to the memory. The multiplying of barbarous acts in the treatment of the offender's dead body will at first shock the sensibilities and then issue in contempt. How infinitely more impressive, solemn, grand, and how infinitely better adapted to answer the design of an oath and cultivate the moral sense is this: "All of which I do promise and swear as I shall answer to God at the great day." So said the Savior of men, "in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, "fear not him who can kill the body and after that hath no more that he can do, but fear him who after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, fear Him." To carry the oath so far out of its design and give a sanction so much beneath that original one cannot fail to lower the regard for the name and institutions of the Christian religion and correspondingly weaken the sense of moral obligation and defile the conscience.

The symbols and ceremonies of the Old Testament dispensation of grace, although abrogated, have still a connection with the new. To profane them or treat them with lightness or disrespectfully cannot fail to produce in the mind a diminished sense for them and for the being that instituted them. They were employed in a sacred service and they were honored as appointed of God. To treat them therefore in a sort of comico-serious, comico-religious way cannot fail to lower the idea of sacred institutions, consequently of the Divine Being, and consequently the sense of obligation to God, those ceremonies in the lodge which employ the sacred symbols of the former dispensation, and claim to have the veritable ark of the covenant of the Lord, so long the symbol of the Divine presence, and bear this about as in an act of religious service wholly appointed by themselves, with an air of sanctity that no one pretends is real. The former ceremonies are aped and sported with until the soul of the mimic is deadened to the sacredness of God's institutions. But it is not alone in the symbols of the old dispensation of grace in which there is such a blending of the sublime and once sacred with the unmeaning and silly; but in the use of the word of God and symbols of spiritual blessing, as cannot fail to corrupt the mind in regard to them and blunt the moral sense. Nothing can be plainer to the mind of a true Christian, than that the originator of those ceremonies had neither spiritual discernment of these things, nor veneration for the word itself, and his own perverted conception of them and disregard will be conveyed to others. If the children of our "sires and mothers" in their days of fun and frolic when they played so merrily the game of "Blind Man's Buff," and in these games mingled portions of Scripture, quotations from the prophets and the psalms, they would have been soundly drubbed for it. Our sires had felt that the moral sense of their offspring could not endure it. Yet strikingly like children's plays, in which things sacred are introduced, are the ceremonies of the lodge room. The candidate for admission to the lodge, after a variety of questions, is led to the centre of the lodge by the deacon and the two kneel and engage in prayer. After prayer the candidate is asked, "In whom do you put your trust?" He answers, "In God." The Master then takes him by the right hand and says, "Since you put your trust in God follow me and fear no danger," and leads him three times regularly around the lodge and halts at the Junior Warden in the South—as children first to pray and then to sing their song and run the rounds of their play.

In the furniture of the lodge are the Bible, the square and the compass, and from the questions and answers in relation to them we are led to wonder to which, in Masonry, the greatest importance is attached, or which is regarded as most instructive. In the Mark Master degree, the candidate for initiation, after the ceremony of initative blood-letting, is conducted around the lodge, dens, each gives a loud rap with his mallet, the Master in the meantime reads from the Scripture, and as he passes the Master, senior and junior war- Psalm cxviii. 22; and from the Gospel where it is quoted: "The stone which the builders rejected is become the head stone of the corner." To him who venerates the Scriptures and feels that the glory of the church, the everlasting salvation of men depend upon this grand triumph it is wounding to the conscience, shocking to every feeling of the sense of propriety to read this blessed Word in connection with performances so puerile. But still again, the candidate is presented with a stone in imitation of the fulfillment of the promise, "To him that evercometh will I give a white stone and in the stone a new name written which no man knows saving he that receiveth it." Upon this stone letters are engraved in the form of a circle, "H. T. W. S. S. T. K. S.;" and in sacrilegious mockery of the promise which believers prize as having a sacred spiritual import they give a stone with the initial letters which no one to whom it is not explained can understand, and not even the unwise need desire to know. It makes known this important matter to those who receive it: "Hiram Tyrian widow's son sent to King Solomon." These with the hundred other ceremonies such as the representation of the appearance of the Lord to Moses in the burning bush which is performed in the lodge, so bring down these sacred things to the level of common things that the moral sense of all who engage in them must be wounded by it. And when they enter the house of God and engage in religious worship, they engage as the lodge has educates them to it, in a heartless form, and to them the service must be meaningless. So uniformly s this the case that it is no uncommon remark that the regular attendant upon the lodge meeting will not long be a regular attendant upon the church service. These all lower the sense of the sacredness of Christian religion. They corrupt the conscience and disqualify for the duties of the church member and the civilian. That this is the effect is proven from the fact that Masonry grows worse as it grows higher in its degrees. In the first degrees the candidate is sworn to keep inviolate the secrets of his fellow as though they were his own, murder and treason excepted, but in the higher degrees murder and treason are not excepted. In the lower degrees the moral sense of the candidate has not become sufficiently blunted, he would shrink from it with holy horror. But when he has passed through these degrees he is prepared to accept all crimes not ever excepting murder and treason, and progressing still further until the degree of the Philosophical Lodge is reached in the Knights Adepts of the Eagle or Sun where we find that the requisitions of a good Mason are his throwing off his youthful prejudices or his religious convictions, renouncing his Christianity and owning the Christian religion "the serpent which Masons detest" (see Light on Masonry, p. 270-271). Step by step they advance till they reach the point of denying the religion of Christ, and embrace infidelity. Such the effect of their horrid practices upon themselves, and such the end of their evil associations, in which pagans, Jews, Christians are mingled in common company, and Paul's declaration is manifested true: "Evil communications corrupt good manners." That all do not fall into one common cess-pool of iniquity does not prove that dangers are not in the way. That Blondin walked his rope stretched over the Niagara and passed safely over does not make Niagara any the less a watery grave to him that falls in its flood, nor the experiment of Blonden any the less hazardous. Some escape, thousands are wrecked and ruined. An army such as that embraced in these associations, under the corrupting influences and being corrupted, embraces a large part of the population of the State and in itself creates a formidable evil; but it does not end here. Like leaven, it is diffusing itself and corrupting the whole mass.

The influence upon society.

They practice in society a so-called charity unworthy of the name. That which is bestowed upon any is not a free gift, but the return of that which has been deposited with them. It has been paid into the treasury in initiation fees and dues. He may receive a portion of this or none. The principle of relief associations is practiced to a degree under the name of charity. While vast sums of this contribution are appropriated to the building of costly temples and purchasing of that which ministers to present appetites and fancies, but a small part being left for charitable purposes and it deceives the public with the representation that it is a charitable institution. I have had chiefly in view the order of Freemasons, the mother of all the fraternities, through which she extends her power and her corruption.

I do not know by what tie these fraternities may be bound together, whether all the way down the brethren of the same trade as the Moulders Union, the Miners Union, &c., regard the law as applicable to Freemasonry, "Children obey your parents" or not, but there seems a bond between them, and a mutual sympathy, and they have become a power in the land. The number of associations formed from these and upon the same principle of a pledge to each other for mutual benefit is the evidence of their influence. That influence is this evil is shown in the fact of secrecy. It is the testimony of Him who "needed not that any should testify of man, for he knew what was in man," "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved; but he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." The testimony is positive and incontrovertible, and teaches us that deeds of darkness are deeds of evil. To hide them from the light is proof that they are evil, and those who enter these secret conclaves should not think the judgment severe when it is based upon such authority. And the evidence is further in this fact that in the first degrees of Masonry the pledge is to keep the secrets of a fellow-Mason as inviolate as their own "murder and treason excepted." What the meaning of such a specification of crimes and sin as not among the things not to be excepted? Or what means it that in the degree of Royal Arch Mason, murder and treason are not excepted? The end being evil the whole moral power of this vast army of members is exerted for the promotion of these evil purposes and their vast moral power is used to propagate their evil designs. Their parades and massing of their forces is evidence of their own ideas that the cunning and policy of the papacy may be aped with effect. Witness the grand pageant in Philadelphia on the 1st of June, when so many thousands of the Knights Templar marched through the streets. It was intended to invite followers, to induce others to seek them, but it rang out a note of warning to this nation, clear as the sound of the bell in Independece Hall tower. It warns of a great and growing power capable of wielding the fate of the nation, and aiming at its control.

With the progress and growth of Christianity is linked the observance of the Christian Sabbath. It is one of the grand and fundamental institutions of the Christian religion. The standing monument to that great truth of the resurrection of Jesus Christ upon which the Christian system rests. It cannot be dishonored without dishonoring the Christian religion. It cannot be turned aside from its legitimate use without dishonoring it; and public desecrations of the day familiarizing the public mind with it, weakens its influence, weakens the hold upon Christianity, or the hold of Christianity upon the people; and debauches the moral sense of the people. The moral sense of the people is shocked Sabbath after Sabbath by the processions of these associations, preceded by bands of music—funeral processions indeed, but we are not without evidence that the funerals have been reserved for this day in order to add to the grandeur of it. The religious sentiment of the people is shocked at it. Rome winks at it; but Protestant Christians only allow it because familiarized with it by the processions. The view of the day as a sacred day of rest can have no sympathy with it nor can the day be preserved as a sacred day while so observed. It is loosing its hold upon the American people and just where its hold is loosened Christianity is loosing its hold and the moral sense of the masses is being corrupted.

Shielding and protecting of criminals.

That the orders employ their influence and power in shielding criminals of their own order, even in cases where the crime is of the deepest character, cannot be called in question. It is a just inference from their initiatory oath. When exception is made of murder and treason the manifest inference is that one of the fraternity is bound to conceal the crimes of another, although the crime be against society, although it may have wronged another and the publishing of the crime might bring the criminal to justice and indemnify the wronged. It must not be told. The interests of the individual, and that one a criminal against society and the law, must be treated as paramount to the interests of society or the government. To such dignity does the fraternizing of these societies exalt us! And besides this so binding is their oath that it disanuuls all other obligations. Civil society cannot bind with an obligation tantamount to that of these fraternities. An Ecclesiastical court cannot bind by an equal obligation. What then is the position of a Freemason upon a jury empanelled for the trial of a brother Freemason, when that brother has given him the sign of distress? standing between two oaths, on the one hand perjury and on the other the same crime. He has appealed to the Most High God on the one hand to give a verdict according to the evidence and on the other hand he is bound to help his fellow in distress, to obey the signs given by him, to keep his secrets not excepting murder and treason, or excepting these at his pleasure, and he has imprecated upon himself the penalty which men may inflict of having his body cut in two to the North and South, and his bowels cremated, or he has drank wine from a human skull and imprecated upon his own head the guilt of all the sins of him whose skull is now his drinking cup. And we are not without evidence that there are those whose hands are defiled with blood, who are at liberty now, through the influence of these associations. Yet this does not appear as the work of a Mason for a Mason, but as the conviction of a juror as to the crime committed and persons are screened of whose criminality there is not room for a question. The view of crime is lessened and the moral sense blunted. Society is by this means being corrupted and crime is encouraged. Whence came that morbid pity for the criminal to-day so manifest? Whence but from the screening of the criminal; until there is awakened a pity for the criminal, no matter how revolting may have been his crime. Laws unenforced upon the statute book, especially criminal laws, lower the idea of the sanctity of law, so of moral obligation; and corrupt society. What then shall we say of the influence of those whose mission is to establish laws in opposition to the government, who are sworn to disobey the laws of the United States when these conflict with the private rules of the lodge? There is established a "regnum in regno," and such a conflict between the two as can result only in the destruction of the one or the other. Through the system of secret associations criminals are screened, the laws against crime rendered inoperative, the violater of law takes his place in society with the law abiding; no reward is given to virtue, no penalty inflicted upon vice, until the law is no longer feared and virtue no longer admired. Shield the criminal, honor him as though brave, and crime will soon cease to be hateful in the view of men.

The effect of the partiality of these associations is evil and demoralizing. They are organized with a view to the advantage of the membership mutual benefit. Hence the privileges and blessings and immunities intended for society are monopolized by these orders. Excellence of character, strength of intellect, freedom from crime, moral excellence will no longer be an advantage to one in seeking positions of usefulness and influence. It is not the man but the Mason that is rewarded. It is not the intellectual but the initiated. It is not the worthy but the worshipful; not the great man but the Grand Master; not the Christian but one of the craft. Membership in the association is made the ground of promotion and preference, while virtue and mental and moral qualifications are overlooked, and they are discouraged. Positions in the government are filled with members of the fraternities not with the best men of the nation, not with those best qualified to serve, and guard and promote the public interests, but those in favor with and belonging to the craft. The chief public offices are held to-day by the Masons. It would be a lamentable confession to make that they are the best men of the nation. But while this is the case, what reward is offered virtue or wisdom aside from those associations, in their character calculated to corrupt virtue and knowledge. The same is true in regard to different business is of the country. A reward is not offered for industry, honesty and skill, but those of the same fraternity must be protected. Among moulders, only those of the Moulder's Union can work in the same shop; there is an ostracising of all that do not belong to the fraternity. So with the miners. And they assume to decide what capitalists who have employed their capital in the manufactures shall do with it. What wages they can afford to pay, and what wages laborers can afford to take or shall be allowed to take; and by an assumption of authority they command that others shall not accept wages which they are themselves unwilling to accept, and they employ force to compel it. Witness the threatened riot in Ohio in the Massilon Mines, to quell which the Gov. of the State was compelled to call out the military. Such organizations for such ends and by such means discourage virtue and encourage vice, discourage skilled labor and cunning of hand, and encourage only the fraternities. While those who employ their capital in the manufactures suffer loss through the inability to employ skilled laborers. It is a tyranny at war with the great fundamental principle of our national independence, that "all men are created free and equal." This tyrany too, has found its way into the church of God and offers its honors, rewards, favors, not to those most loyal to Jesus Christ in her, but those most loyal to Masonry. To ministers of the Gospel, these sometimes say lend us your influence and we will lend you ours, and Christless as an organization, ask the church member and minister of the Gospel to give his aid and influence to the Christless institution and they will help the church of Christ. They build with the one hand and tear down with the other, and offer their help to the church of Christ; crying all the while, "Good Lord, good devil." They rule in the decisions of some church courts, we have reason to believe, and they there display their power to corrupt the church and through this society, with the hand of a tyrant. They hold sway and in both reward only as they are subject to them.

These associations have also their literature, and by means of this they are laboring to exalt their institutions and propagate their dogmas. And with this fundamental sentiment that the Christian religion is like all other religions and must bend in its essential elements to suit the manners and tastes and views of pagan, Jew and Mohammedan, what can you expect but a pagan literature, and the advocacy of that sentiment growing out of this that infidelity is a religion and paganism and Mohammedanism in a Christian country are on equality with Christianity. Witness the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bible in the schools in Cincinnati. Essentially anti-Christian, "for he that is not with me is against me," says Christ. All the force of these associations is bent to the promotion of these principles. It exists by this, and must in measure un-Christianize that it may Masonize its members. It must make men bad Christians since Christianity is defiled by the mixture with it of any other system, and whatever may be the demand of anti-Christianity it can be granted. In this however all agree there can be no mention of the name of Jesus Christ. The whole power of Masonry is therefore against the Christian religion. Against this it is in its nature destructive of good conscience, subversive of good morals and its work therefore is at the foundation of good government. If the Jesuits must be expelled from the Empires of the East for the peace of government, Masonry, with its fundamental principle, must be rooted out of the Western Republic, if it will stand. Its government fosters a spirit of tyranny in the minds of its leaders. Masonry exalts these to positions and Masonry must perish or liberty will die, equality, justice will die. We have planted here a corner stone, we have fixed here a centre of influence. God make it a centre of power from which shall go forth and spread abroad until the evil influences of secret oath-bound associations, so justly to be feared, shall be counteracted and destroyed; and church and state made free from their baleful influence, shall stand forth disenthralled; till all men shall have liberty instead of bondage, moral beauty instead of moral bands, light instead of darkness. Society rising above all these baleful influences shall appear in the beauty of holiness, government based upon the principles of a sound morality supported by a people in whom the light and the truth dwell, under the benignant smile of Him who did nothing secret but ever spoke openly to the world shall endure stable as the everlasting hills.

THE JACKSONVILLE CONVENTION.

The time for the assembling of the Illinois branch of our National Christian Association is approaching. Jacksonville is the place and the 6th of Sept. the time when the forces of this cause are to meet to review the labors of the past year, and council and derive means to prosecute the work in the year that is to come.

It has seemed to me, that though these meetings have heretofore been respectable in size, and still more so in intellectual strength and heart zeal, they have not been as well attended, considering the growing sentiment in the country against secret orders, and the value of mutual consultation and encouragement in all good enterprises, as they should be. Some of the friends of this cause do not, I fear, properly realize the wickedness and strength of the foe we have to encounter, and the necessity of union and earnestness amongst ourselves to ensue his everthrow. The men who stand in the front ranks should not do less, but there are many that can and should do more. What we need more than anything else to break up these organized evils, is the diffusion of light—light that will get behind screened windows and barred doors, behind inside and outside sentinels, and expose the childish twaddle, and damning wickedness of the orders. To this end our agents need to be better sustained; the Cynosure more widely circulated; and books and tracts, Masonic and Anti-masonic, scattered everywhere over the land. We need to meet in our national, state, and local conventions, to devise ways and means to accomplish this work. Let then every county in the State have one or more representatives at Jacksonville. Let the strong men come and bring the weak with them that they, too, may get marrow in their bones. In the name of the Lord ot hosts have we raised our banners and we may well say, "He that is for us is more than all them that be against us." The success of the past gives assurance of the complete triumph of the future, and it is to be devoutly hoped that before another quarter of a century has come and gone, this monster evil will be swept from the land, and we shall have a pure church and a free country—the praise of divine goodness and the glory of all lands.

THE CALIFORNIA COMMITTEE.

The committee appointed to organize a permanent movement against secret organization in the State of California, to be auxiliary to the National Christian Association, opposed to secret orders, comprises at the present the following persons:

Rev. John Black, Upper Lake, Lake Co., Chairman; Phil. Beck, Woodland, Yolo Co., Secretary and Treasurer; Rev. N. W. Harrow, Upper Lake, Lake Co.; Rev. A. Musselman, Sacramento City; Rev. J. W. Harrow, Tulare City, Tulare Co.; R. Williams, Woodbridge, San Joaquin Co.; B. T. Richards, Gridley, Butte Co.; I. B. Watts, Modesto, Stanislaus Co,; G. S. Lock, Lockford, San Joaquin Co.; R. Metcalf. Lockford, San Joaquin Co.; J. W, Stetson, Ceres, Stanislaus Co.; James Kennedy, Los Gatos, Santa Clara Co.; G. W. Canon, College City, Colusa Co.; John Abel, Colusa, Colusa Co.; W. Haskins, Woodville, Tulare Co.; Rev. W. D. Bishop, Mariners' Church, San Francisco; Geo. Wood, Kingston, Fresno Co.; L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, San Benito Co.; J. Leach, Kelseyville, Lake Co.; Eld. Mac Matthews, Lower Lake, Lake Co.; Rev. B. B. Allen, Visalia, Tulare Co.

The late meeting of the Committee was held at Sacramento, May 25th, and each member was requested to organize, or help to organize local associations, in order to be able to send delegates to a future meeting; to distribute anti-secrecy literature; to solicit subscriptions for the Cynosure, and funds and subscriptions for the lecture fund, and report all to the Secretary.

At the Sacramento meeting the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That Freemasonry and her kin are a deception, a cheat and a fraud; her morality, immorality; her benevolence, selfishness; and her religion, idolatry, or devil-worship; foe to Christianity and all righteous rule, and in her the good find one of their most wily enemies.

That our hope against her is in God, to whom we will continually pray, and on whose arm rely for success.

That in the Christian Cynosure we find a true exponent of Anti-masonic reform, and a bold defender of right principle upon all subjects; that we will support and use our most ardent endeavors to give it the circulation it merits.

That we rejoice and thank God for such men as Mr. Carpenter, and will ask God in our closets and elsewhere, to bless him and hismunificent donation, to the good of the cause it is designed to promate; for in doing this it will bless the world."

FROM THE ILLINOIS AGENT.

MEETINGS AT LOW POINT, STREATOR, AND WENONA.

Streator, Ill., July 14, '76.

Dear Bro. K.—It was my privilege on Monday, July 10th, to address a fair audience in the public hall at Low Point. The night was dark and rainy, but the interest awakened by Mr. Ronayne's lectures at Washburn, (five miles distant) was widely aud deeply felt, and the people stopped not for mud or rain.

Masonry, as usual, exhibited itself in such a way as to show its true character. The correctness of my statements being denied, I proposed a very simple test. I said that if any member of the lodge would step out and speak aloud the word Mah- hah-bone, then I would admit that they had been misrepresented, since I affirmed that no one dare do it. It was a simple but very effective test. They simply muttered their wrath, but refused to speak the awful word.

On the evening of the 11th I spoke to a fair audience in the Cumberland Presbyterian church in Wenona. Excellent attention was paid, and a good impression was produced. No denial was made of any of my statements (though opportunity was offered) until after the congregation was dismissed. Then it was affirmed that I had lied; but one of the pastors, who is a seceding Mason, at once said, "No; I have been there myself and I know brother Hinman told the truth." May the Lord reward him for his fidelity and courage. It may cost him his pulpit.

From Wenona I came to this place to attend the Holiness Convention which has been in progress since the evening of the 10th, in the U. B. church, and is conducted by Revs. Brooks and Kent of the Western Holiness Association. The meetings have been deeply interesting, but I wish to speak of them as related to our reform. Not a great deal was said on the subject of secretism, but there was entire freedom to speak on that subject; there was no such sensitiveness as we ordinarily see in religious meetings which members of such societies are expected to attend. Several brethren testified that the Lord had saved them from Freemasonry, and that they could not go to the lodge after they had obtained full salvation.

The teaching too of these beloved brethren, is thoroughly consistent and faithful; for while they never go out of the way to speak of secret societies, they always speak of them as inconsistent with a holy life. Bro. Brooks in a street meeting, told some good people that secret societies came between them and God.

Yours for Christ,

H. H. Hinman.

OUR CENTENNIAL LETTER.

Ill-health and Responsibility—Representatives from various Orders—Visits of Friends—Our Stand has a Notice.

July 6th, at evening, 1876.

My Dear Bro. Cook:—I am very sorry to cause you so much anxiety, but it is a matter I cannot control. The work has crowded upon me, nd I have ano way to avoid doing it but to leave; and if I do that, knowing as I do, that it is there for me, the worry is as bad as the work, and wears as much as the work itself; except when I get so unwell and infirm that I am obliged to dismiss it, or sink under it. Last Sabbath I was laid upon my bed most of the day, but so far recovered on Monday that I attended to the business, but was down again yesterday and did not leave the house till late in the morning, when Bro. Mackie and I walked out. To-day I have been closely invested by comers and goers, and have given out, I think, twice as many tracts as on any two of my best days' works. I am glad you sent me that fresh supply by the young man from Wheaton. If they go off as fast for a few days as to-day I shall need the promised supply as soon as they get here.

I felt so much better this afternoon that for this and the fact you feel so anxious and the further reason, that the work increases and men and women are growing in anxiety and courage to learn and speak out what they learn, that I was induced to satisfy your mind and my own also by sending you a telegram, that I would stay a little longer, thinking that you might be better suited with that than with one that I was coming directly home. I do not stay regretfully, because it seems to be the mind of our Father in heaven.

You know I told you I should put the books into the hands of Bro. Stevenson's foreman. He and Bro. Stevenson think without doubt they can be sold during the season. I let Bro. Mackie have between twenty and thirty dollars worth.

Now an incident or two more. A man of good and candid bearing, said to me a few days since that he had two brothers w ho were Masons, who had left Freemasonry and spoke of it as a bad institution, and gave me his name and that of one of his brothers, saying that he called Masonry a humbug and useless.

A thirty-three degree Mason, (a clergyman) told my friend and Bro. Hubbard that "Ronayne had better look out for himself; he knew of him."

Intimating of course that there were plottings of mischief against him. The same man after having the oaths and penalties placed before him unwittingly admitted they were correct and that he had taken them.

Another Odd-fellow to-day owned that Odd-fellowship was exposed after saying if any man did expose it, he was a perjured man. A man who is a Mason, Odd-fellow, Good Templar and Son of Temperance told me to-day. "He never found any thing in them that was satisfactory." What were they then? Why, of course unsatisfactory! And then of course a swindle, because they promise that they shall be satisfactory.

[In a previous letter Elder Freeman writes:]

Bro. Geo. W. Clark called a few days ago and gave me words of cheer. He, as you know, is wholesouled in this work.

Bro. David Boyd of Bellefountaine, Ohio, called to-day to cheer me, and left a dollar with me for the tract fund. If I could see many of these people who call at their homes I could get orders for the Cynosure in large numbers.

I forgot to state that our bookstand received the following notice in the American Book-Seller, which basely misrepresents, as usual, the acts of the opponents of secretism: "Here the visitor will come to a little table holding the publications of Ezra A. Cook & Co., of Chicago. Books and tracts opposed to secret societies. An attendant is busy from morning to night distributing tracts written to prove that Masonry is all that is bad, and that all the good people of history were bitterly opposed to it."

Bad as Masonry is, we have never limited, and these tracts do not limit the devil's resources for mischief and evil, to Masonry. Though it is true, that it is scarcely possible to find any organized wickedness, but there may be seen in it some of the elements of Freemasonry.

How Masons convict one another of lying! I have probably had a hundred statements from as many different Masons which have been contradicted by as many other Masons. Here is the last edition of this kind. A Mason told me yesterday that he was initiated with his usual dress on and as far as he knew or had seen this was the universal practice. A. D. FREEMAN.

THAT LOST CYNOSURE.

DEAR CYMOSURE:—Allow me to tell you the company you sometimes chance to get into when away from home on your weekly errands of mercy and love. Last week you visited us at the usual time, Friday at 2½ P. M. The weather being excessively warm, we had seated ourself in front of our residence in a cool and shady place to study our sermon for the following Sunday morning, when suddenly your last issue was placed before us. This spoiled our study hour and turned our attention to your honest testimony against the many deistic secret orders that are cursing our land and age. We were most agreeably surprised on seeing "Masonry at a Glance," once more sent out, and could not suppress the wish that it may appear in every issue for at least six months to come.

While musing in our mind as to the effect of these life-like scenes must have upon Masons, a member of the craft, one of that despised race which cried out; "Crucify Him" * * "His blood be on us and on our children forever," by chance came near where we were seated and the following coloquy ensued:

Pointing out "Masonry at a Glance" we remarked: "Here is a picture which has just come to hand —could you explain it to me?" Taking the paper into his hand he carefully scrutinized all the scenes without muttering a word in repiy to our question. Calling his attention to the Hiram Abiff murder and prayer over his dead body, we said: "It looks rough to be knocked down in that way with a maul." He was silent as death. We noticed his eyes firmly fixed upon the scene while an involuntary smile played upon his countenance. He seemed not only utterly unable to speak but so transfixed by some magic power in the scene as to be unable to move. He reminded us of an ardent Mason of this city, who, whil we were reading to him from Morgan's disclosures the oath of the Master Mason's degree, fell into a swoon, and was for some time wholly helpless to the terror of all present. But turning several pages he found the title, "Christian Cynosure," in modest but bold letters. This seemed to get him into the clear and enable him to articulate. With a discomfited look he said, "See here, let me have this paper till to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock, when I will return it in good order."

"But I have just received it and have not read it myself."

"Well," he replied, "I would like to have it." With misgivings as to the safety of our paper in the hands of a foresworn man we said: "I don't want to lose this copy."

He replied: "If you will let me have it I will bring it to you to-morrow morning without fail."

"Then with this assurance I will trust you with my paper. Take it along. Study it and be sure, when you return it, to explain to me the meaning of these scenes."

Slowly walking away he said: "I'll bring this back to you in good order,to-morrow morning." "Well, don't forget it." He replied: "I won't;" and was soon out of sight.

A by-stander remarked: "That Cynosure will be taken directly to the saloons, and then to the lodge and you will never see it again." Another said, "That may be, but still I think he will return it as he has always been regarded as a man of his word."

Several days have elapsed since the above interview and neither the Mason nor Cynosure has put in an appearance. The former we may see again, for we heard of him yesterday, but we utterly dispair of ever seeing the latter. May it carry dismay into the enemy's camp and throw light into that dark den of anti-Christ. Yes, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, may it not only open the blind eyes and soften the hard heart of that poor son of Abraham, but others also of the dark craft, whom Satan has made to believe a lie that they may be damned.

The story of the "lost Cynosure" is now told, and while we take the blame of it upon ourself and promise more care next time, we kindly ask you to send us another copy that we may have the pleasure of seeing what the craft here have been reading concerning themselves during the past week. LIMA.

OUR MAIL.

A. C. Eno, Clay Center, Clay Co., Kan., writes:

"We prize the Cynosure highly, and love the cause it advocates, as we believe it is inseparably connected with the cause of Christianity. We love it as the cause of right. May the blessing of God be upon it ever. It must triumph."

A. W. Curtis, Coldwater, Mich., writes:

"I am constrained to renew my subscription that I may note the result of the Presidential campaign in which I feel a lively interest, and as I am now in my eighthieth year it will probably be the last in which I shall participate. I therefore eagerly court this privilege of voting once more for a President who is free from the contaminations and fetters of secrecy. I rejoice in sweet anticipation of that happy day when our nation shall be redeemed and saved from its blighting and corrupting influences. May God in infinite mercy hasten that day."

A. G. McKeown ,Douds, Van Buren Co., Ia., writes:

"Times are close here. Farm work is at a standstill on account of wet weather. . . Truly God is showing himself displeased with us as a people on account of our departure from and forgetfulness of him. I wish the N. C. A. abundant success and pray for God's blessing upon its efforts."

D. E. Edrington, Creston, Ogle Co., Ill., writes:

"May God help this reform until the last secret society is banished from the church and entire country."

L. Sperry, Waupun, Fondulac Co., Wis., writes:

"I thought I made a mistake when I voted for Clay instead of Burney. Now, if I ever vote again I propose to vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick and fight it out on that line if it takes a lifetime."

Jacob Markle, Maquoketa, Jackson Co., Ia., writes:

"I was talking to an Odd-fellow and trying to persuade him to take the Cynosure, but he refused on the ground that his society was a better religion than the churches. The Saviour says, 'Without me ye can do nothing.' I pray 'O God, revive thy work,' and we shall reap in due reason if we faint not."

Wm. Wishart, Ontario, Richland Co., O., writes:

"Don't remove my name from your list until Masonry and other kindred orders are put down."

Mrs. E. E. H. Burnside, Earlville, Madison Co., N. Y., writes:

"Your excellent paper has furnished more readings for our missionary and temperance meetings, than any other, besides giving us a large amount of indisputable evidence against that hydra-headed monster, secretism. On Saturday last our citizens were entertained (?) by one of the largest Masonic exhibitions ever witnessed in this vicinity the occasion being the funeral of William Jones shot by Brady. The effect has been to strengthen the Anti element and make it more easy to broach the subject."

Hannah Love, Ada, Kent Co., Mich., writes:

"I do not approve of secret societies and mean to labor against them in my own family at least."

A friend writes:

"We want every man of us to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Let us not back down from our nominees, but vote for them irrespective of what may have been our political views formerly. I was raised by an anti-secret father and was drawn into Masonry by some of my young associates who claimed that it was a progressive science, and an honorable and charitable institution, I consented to be cable-towed once, twice, thrice. Am a third degree Mason. I am in the midst of secrecy, and can see the evil it is doing in the church. Now is the day of salvation. Now is the time to strike for our country, for God and for liberty."

L. D. Bishop, Cainesville, Harrison Co., Mo., writes:

"I would like to have some tickets printed and sent to me before the election, for I think I can get a few votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick. I would like to have a few lectures in this part of the country if it could be arranged."

Is there a lecturer in Missouri who can help this brother? Several orders for tickets have been received and we hope that others will send on for them stating how many they desire.

M. M. Booth, Hopewell Center, Ontario Co., N. Y., writes:

"Masonry is a child of the devil and full of all subtlety and mischief,and those who serve it are of their father the devil. If the father is a liar and loves to be, will he not be likely to teach his children lies? God's will is revealed, but in no part of it is Masonry to be found in letter or spirit. It has been hatched in the pit and has gone forth a firey, flying serpent. O man beware, whosoe'er thou art, lest thou mourn at the last and say, 'O how I have hated instruction!'"

Eld. Isaac Jackson, Harrison, Cumberland Co., Me., writes:

"There is one thing I would like to have come before the public; that is, how an M. E. minister took the Royal Arch degree at Bridgeton, five miles from here. The lodge was about to let him down after the pot of manna and the book of the law, when the rope broke and he fell down to the bottom. They brought him out and it was thought he would not recover. It was seven or eight weeks before he got about again. They told his wife if he did not get well they would show her the place where he fell; if he lived she could not know. . . I expect this fall will be a harvest. I have canvassed the whole country around and when money comes again I shall get subscribers. Here is a great field of labor."

J. F. Galloway, Columbus,Miss., writes:

"I want to aid the good cause all I can."

LESSON FOR AUGUST 6.—SOLOMON'S PROSPERITY.

SCRIPTURES.—1 Kings x. 1-10.

1 And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions.

2 And she came to Jerusalem with a very great train, with camels that bare spices and very much gold, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

3 And Solomon told her all her questions: there was not anything hid from the king, which he told her not.

4 And when the queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon's wisdom, and the house that he had built,

5 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel, and his cup-bearers, and his ascent by which he went up into the house of the Lord;, there was no more spirit in her.

6 And she said to the king, It was a true report that I heard in my own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom.

7 Howbeit, I believed not the words, until I came, and my eyes had seen it: and behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

8 Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom.

9 Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel: because the Lord loved Israel forever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and justice.

10 And she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these, which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

GOLDEN TEXT.—She came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.—Matt. xii. 42.

LESSON NOTES.—(1.) Concerning the name of the Lord: Solomon's fame was therefore, not simply that of a wealthy and wise king, but of a religious man. (2.) With a very great train: A great caravan of men and camels and beasts of burden, laden with the products of her country. All that was in her heart: The hard questions spoken of in the first verse. (3.) Told her all her questions: Threw all the light he could upon the subjects of her inquiry, and doubtless removed much of her perplexity. If Solomon could thus help a burdened soul, how much more can Jesus, whose wisdom is so much greater. (5.) The meat of his table: The rarity and extent of this, and the means for preparing it. The sitting of his servants: The order and efficiency of his liveried servants. Attendance of his ministers: The wonderful system and dress of the members of his court. His ascent by which he went up: The porch with its two magnificent pillars—a marvel of art and beauty—or an arched way from the palace to the temple. See 2 Kings xvi. 18. No more spirit in her: Utterly overwhelmed with amazement. (8) Happy are thy men: True for King Solomon's followers; how much more true for Christ's followers. See Matt. v. 1-13. (9.) Blessed be the Lord thy God: Jewish writers say that the queen was converted to the true God by Solomon's wisdom, and that this is her confession of faith. Certainly Solomon must have honored God or she would not have thus given God the glory.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1876.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD.

Our readers had in last week's Cynosure the brief notice that this great man died in Troy, N. Y., at the residence of his son-in-law, July 11th inst. His biography must be carefully and accurately written and circulated as one of the classics of our cause.

Neither his denomination of which he was a prominent member during all his public life, nor indeed any ordinary man of any denomination, can be trusted to write the life of David Bernard. Will Elders Barlow, Waite, Freeman and others consult personally or by correspondence, and suggest some writer who can do justice to Bernard and his era. Our materials are at present too scant even for a respectable obituary. We shall of course give additions from time to time.

DAVID BERNARD was a popular young Baptist preacher when the Morgan era opened. In person he was a tall and what would be called a fine man. And as to his character John Quincy Adams, who during his long life probably eulogized fewer men than almost any other public man, speaks thus of him:

"To that book [Bernard on Masonry] and its author permit me to offer the tribute of unfeigned respect. Elder David Bernard was a minister of the Genesee Baptist Association in the State of New York. He was a man of good repute and of blameless life and conversation. Like many others he was ensnared into the taking of fifteen degrees of Masonry, and was the Intimate Secretary of the Lodge of Perfection. He was one of the first seceders from the order, and from that time underwent every possible persecution from Masons and the frequent danger of his life.

"To David Bernard, perhaps more than to any other man, the world is indebted for the revelation of the execrable mysteries of Masonry; nor could he as a minister of the word of God have performed a service more suitable to his sacred functions.

"From the time when I first perused Elder Bernard's book I became convinced that it was impossible for me to discharge my duties as a citizen to my country by knowing nothing about it. . .

"I saw a code of Masonic legislation adapted to prostrate every principle of equal justice, and to corrupt every sentiment of virtuous feeling in the soul of him who bound his allegiance to it. I saw the practice of common honesty, kindness of Christian benevolence, and even abstinence from atrocious crimes, limited exclusively by lawless oaths and barbarous penalties, to the brotherhood of the craft. I saw slander organized into a secret wide-spread and affiliated agency, fixing its invisible fangs into the hearts of its victims, sheltered by the darkness of the lodge-room and armed with the never-ceasing penalties of death."
J. Q. Adam's Letters, pp. 230-1-2.

Such were some of the lessons, if we may trust this great, cool-minded statesman, for which the world is indebted to the man who has just left us. He would have been murdered a thousand times did not the lodge copy the wisdom of popery which never burns heretics when she will lose more than she will gain by it.

The Baptist denomination from its rise in this country has been more democratic, nearer the people than other evangelical sects. Under the influence of Bernard it became essentially and to a vast extent, literally Anti-masonic. And though the return shock of the lodge has stunned it; though thousands have succumbed and gone under the returning wave, though the good elders Stearns and Pease and Colver were awed or amazed into silence for years; though every Baptist church in New York city but one (and that perhaps since) rescinded their resolutions and took the accursed pest back to their bosom; though the last Baptist paper gave way and its able and excellent editor, Dr. Nathan Brown has been ostracized by sending him to foreign missions,—Bernard has stood like a rock amid the retreating waves.

No sooner did he learn of the movement inaugurated in 1868, eight years ago, but he put himself in communication with it. A stroke of paralysis twenty years before had partially deprived him of locomotion and of speech, and according to the analogies of that disease should years ago have deprived him of life. But he seemed incapable of death while he had work to do. He wrote additional recollections of the popular earthquake of American history which overturned the lodges. His tall, venerable form appeared on the stage in Shakespeare Hall, Syracuse, along with Gerrit Smith and Samuel D. Greene, who stood there before us like men of a past generation sent back to warn us of the damning crimes and desolating nature of the lodge. In Worcester, Mass., two years later, and three years later still at Syracuse Bernard's venerable form stood again erect among us, and we marked no change but the increased unearthly brightness of his countenance. He seemed to defy age, death, palsy, and whatever chills and silences ordinary mortals. He spoke, he prayed, he testified, he wrote, published and plead with his countrymen, until at length the fire of God in his bosom has consumed him and he has passed to the next world, as flame goes out when the fuel is decomposed.

"Thou hast fallen in thine armor.
Thou beloved of the Lord;
With thy last breath crying 'Onward,'
And thy hand upon thy sword."

Of the Syracuse trio, Smith and Bernard have left us, and Greene alone remains of the three. Thrice venerable men! Sent into this lower world of ordinary mortals, ye have withstood the overflowing scourge of error and iniquity which bore away the multitude, and having lived longer and wiser than others, two of you have passed to that world where adherence to principle ceases to be singular, because fact and right are the same thing.

ALL HAIL TO THE "IOWA FREEMAN."

This new paper has just reached us. It is published weekly at Mason City, Cerro Gordo county by J. H. Vandever, for the Iowa Freeman Publishing Company.

We have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with brother Vandever, but he puts himself square against secretism thus:

"The object of the Freeman will be to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, especially Freemasonry, also to oppose war and intemperance. Secretism will have the first claim upon our time and energies, and we shall endeavor to treat the subject in such a calm and judicious manner as to win the respect of all, who, with honesty and candor may see proper to investigate it through our columns."

This bill of fare well lived up to will make the Freeman a valuable accession to our cause, especially as the sheet is otherwise respectable and is rich in local items.

Our new brother will forgive us for the hint that in this his first number we miss all reference to our ticket, and that he does not say whether he votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick, or Hayes or Tilden. Doubtless in the hurry of a new office and issuing his first number, he has not yet had time to run up his political flag or spread all his canvas. When he does so the Cynosure will give him, as it will all local anti-secret papers, its hearty God-speed. At all events we rejoice in the issue of the Freeman and hail it as a token and harbinger. We should not even have noticed the absence of our flag at the head of his editorial column but for the well-remembered fact, that Anti-masonry of old went into a general election with the Whigs, and was strangled by the Masons of that party so that it never came out alive. We must not be twice strangled by the same party bow-string. If our anti-secrecy cannot stand the present national election, remaining true to ourselves and our cause, we shall never live to see another national election.

ANOTHER LIGHT.—Our friend W. A. Wallace is up and out again with his paper; this time under the name "Advocate of Christian Reforms," issued in New Concord, Ohio. Few more hearty haters of the American leprosy live than Mr. Wallace, whose clear, earnest utterances at Oberlin we well remember. He reminds us of the ancient hero, son of Jupiter and Terra (Earth) who when knocked down in the fight, always fell on his mother's bosom who strengthened him and he arose and renewed the fight. So friend Wallace seems hard to kill, and his earnestness deserves success.

Our doctrine is that we must have State lecturers and State newspapers. In the old fight, which sunk two thousand lodges so that they dared not show a rag of canvas above water, scarce any presses in the whole United States took Anti-masonic ground; New ones had to be started by the cause until it became general. As in our late war slavery stole the guns and forts, and we had to retake or make new ones; so the devil never lets go of a paper on which he has once got his claws.

We must cast new guns in this war and stand by them. But we must never forget that the Cynosure must have ten thousand subscribers before the year is out, not by forced loans, but by steady, strong, healthy increase. Cool weather is coming to make active friends.

ELDER FREEMAN.—Our Centennial Agent will be missed from his stand at the Exposition for a time. On account of greatly enfeebled health and the excessive heat at Philadelphia he felt compelled to return home. Bro. Freeman looks much enfeebled, but hopes with rest and quiet at home to soon recuperate. It is not yet determined whether he shall return or some one else take the place. It is too important place to be left long without a worker in it, and the Directors Board at their late meeting instructed the General Agent to immediately raise a fund sufficient to defray the necessary expenses of some capable man at this point. As soon as the severely hot weather abates in Philadelphia we hope to note that the tracts are again being distributed at the Centennial Exposition.

JUSTICE: — LICENSED PROSTITUTION.—A late Cynosure quoted from the Advance, an editorial on licensed fornication in St. Louis, in which were these words:—"Let the experiment proceed until we shall see the best it has to offer," etc. That was the Advance before Gen. Howard took it. We regret that the author of the above vile sentiment is still associate editor of the Advance. General Howard's ideas are given below from Advance, July 6;

"A committee of the New York Legislature has recommended the licensing of prostitution in New York City. Preliminary steps have been taken in the same direction in Washington. We are pleased to see that the proposition in both instances is awakening public attention. For our own part it would seem to be in comparison a tame evil to license the letting loose of hyenas within limited areas in the most populous parts of either city. It would, in our view, be as rational to propose for our National Capital the licensing of mad dogs, instead of requiring them to be shot at sight. Why legalize in any sense an unmixed and unmitigated evil? Besides the direct encouragement that would be given to vice, such a measure is an act of toleration which puts the evil in a false light before the public. Instead of creating and extending a sentiment of uncompromising opposition which shall tend directly and constantly to an exterminating warfare upon this insidious and most perilous social vice, this official recognition gives to it to many a seeming respectability. We are glad to note that delegates from the "British, Continental and General Federation for the Abolition of Government Regulations of Prostitution" are in this country, and have already addressed some public meetings upon this subject. When such measures are officially suggested, it is time that not only discussion, but counter-action should be speedily set on foot."

—Past Master Edmond Ronayne returned on Friday evening from Plainfield, Ill., where he delivered a course of lectures and worked the three degrees of the "ancient craft" in the Baptist church to unusually large audiences. One very marked feature of these meetings was that ladies all turned out to witness the public exposition, being doubtless anxions to learn how their husbands, brothers, and especially their ministers, were made Freemasons. He is convinced that a mighty work has been accomplished in that beautiful little town, and that it will be some time before a man shall be initiated in Plainfield Lodge No. 536. He desires to thank all the friends there for kindnesses received and hopes that the good work thus begun shall be vigorously pushed forward by an increased list of Cynosure subscribers.

—Rev. W. S. Spooner of Kearney Junction, Buffalo county, Nebraska, was appointed by the last Nebraska Conference of the United Brethren church to correspond with friends in that State in regard to advancing the interests of the reform. He has received encouraging words from a number of Christian laborers in the State and wishes to hear from all.

—Bro. Hinman after his meetings at Streator and Wenona started for Springerton, White county in the southern part of the State, but was delayed by a railroad accident at Flora. The delay was providential for the Agent made arrangements for future lectures in that new field and sold a quantity of books.

—Elder Freeman, in his letter, notices the mention of our Publisher's Centennial stand as of Masonic character. Another notice from the Publisher's Weekly is more fair-toned:

"Ezra A. Cook & Co., Chicago, publishers of the Christian Cynosure, a weekly reform paper especially directed against secret societies, and of various pamphlets and leaflets of the same aim, exhibit their publications in the back center section, and Mr. A. D. Freeman is usually in attendance to distribute leaflets, etc., to visitors."

The following has been issued from the P. O. Department as the latest change in the postal laws:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

SEC. 15. That transient newspapers and magazines, regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation at nominal rates, and all printed matter of the Third Class, except unsealed circulars, shall be admitted to and be transmitted in the mails, at the rate of one cent for every two ounces, or fractional part thereof; and one cent for each two additional ounces or fractional part thereof; and the sender of any article of the Third Class of mail matter may write his or her name or address therein, or on the outside thereof, with the word "From" above or preceding the same, or may write, briefly, or print on any package, the number and names of the articles enclosed. Publishers of newspapers and periodicals may print on the wrappers of newspapers or magazines sent from the office of publication to regnlar subscribers, the time to which subscription therefor has been paid; and addresses upon postal cards and unsealed circulars may be either written or printed, or affixed thereto, at the option of the sender.

On unsealed circulars, and all mailable matter of the Third Class, other than that designated in the foregoing Section, postage will be charged as heretofore,—one cent for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Postmaster General.

Religious Intelligence.

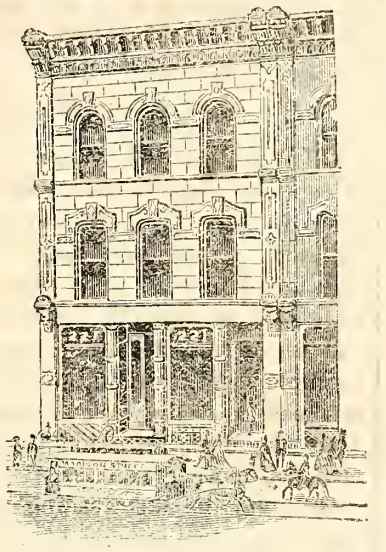
—Rev. W. I. Phillips, a graduate of Wheaton in 1873 and of the last class in the Chicago Seminary, will be remembered by many friends in the northern part of Illinois, for his tolporteuring mission in connection with our reform with Mr. J. L. Stratton in 1872. Bro. Phillips has lately received a call to the Congregational church of College Springs, Iowa, whose pastorate was made vacant a year or more ago by the death of the beloved and faithful D. R. Barker. Bro. Phillips was sent by his church as delegate to the late National Convention in Chicago and returns to it with a "help-meet" by his side, having married Miss Mary D. Bissell of Wheaton, a graduate of the same class, a young lady widely known and esteemed for her intelligence and piety.

—The week beginning August 3d, has been appointed a week of prayer in the Southern Methodist church.

—Rev. H. R. Revels, has been elected President of Alcorn University, Mississippi, and has accepted the position. Mr. Revels is the former colored U. S. Senator from Louisiana. He has been preaching in connection with the M. E. church since leaving Congress.

—The Congregational Church in Wilton, Conn., celebrated its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary, June 22d. A large number of natives and former residents of the town returned to participate in the festivities.

—There are now twelve teachers and two hundred and ninety-seven pupils in the Protestant schools of Naples. One of the preachers, Ragliante, was formerly a famous Catholic preacher, Padre Gabriele.



—Archbishop Ledochowski, the Bishop of Gnesen and Posen, banished for insubordination to the German government, has written a letter from Rome to the clergy of his diocese, in which he informs them that he will administer its affairs through secret delegates. Are any of the affairs of the Romish churches in America carried on in the same way?

FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE.

We have several hundred copies of June 22d, containing this popular illustration of the old handmaid. We send them at three cents each post paid, or two cents each by express, you to pay the charges.

MIND UNCLE SAM.

We often receive postal cards from our readers on which we have to pay a fine of five cents, because they disobey Uncle Sam and write the date or something besides the address on the front side. One man caused us three such fines in a single week. Please don't do it.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St, Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

J. W. Wood,

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

The First Sunrise.

There was no sun, but there was light,
The bonds of darkness rending:
There was no earth, but shores of night
With seas of day were blending;
And o'er the world, without a sound,
In grand, eternal silence bound,
The dim-lit flood extending.

God spake the word: up rose the earth,
The waters round it clinging;
And with glad wonder at its birth
The highest heavens were ringing:
Through all the world a sound went out,
The sons of God for joy did shout,
The morning stars were singing.

There fell a silence from on high,
And hushed the wondrous story:
God spake; and sunrise drenched the sky,
And smote the mountains hoary:
Then burst from heaven a mighty song;
The sons of God, so bright and strong,
Gave unto him the glory!

THE ATONEMENT.

The only place of meeting between God and the sinner is the cross of Jesus. The only place where God can receive an offering that shall be acceptable in his sight, is the place where the sinner recognizes the atonement alone. Oh, it is because of that atonement that saints in all ages—some before Christ, looking forward to it in faith—multitudes since Christ looking upon it in faith—have been able to "rejoice in Jesus Christ, and have no confidence in the flesh." God always sees the and the tears of the Magdalene are dried. He sees the blood, blood. He sees the blood, and Simon is triumphant in Satan's sifting time, and walks the yielding sea with faith unfailing. He sees the blood, and Paul triumphs in the refiner's fire, and bears the thorn in the flesh without murmuring, and feels that his keenest agony is his best earnest of heaven. He sees the blood, and John wrapped around as with an asbestos garment, comes out of the boiling oil unhurt and glad. He sees the blood, and the martyr Stephen breaks away from his murderers to pillow his bleeding head upon the Lord's breast. He sees the blood, and the dying thief from the jaws of damnation leaps up to a harp and a crown. God sees the blood and the sigh of the thoughtful and of the contrite is registered, and the prayer of the penitent is heard, and painstaking endeavor is recorded, and the faith is counted for righteousness and the struggle after purity is marked, and the affliction is sanctified, and there is light at eventide; and death, the last enemy, is destroyed, and the trumpet sounds, and the graves open, and the angels welcome, and eternity enfolds through its everlasting years, the grandeur of its beatific vision. And all this, because this moment and every moment, God looks and sees the blood. Brethren, it is because of the blood, and because of the sight of the blood in heaven, that we are this moment out of hell. Oh, many a time, many a time, think you not from the scenes of oppression, and from the place where the demon of war sits and howls, from the deck of a slave ship, from the barracoon, from the sultry streets of the slave metropolis, from all the places of demonical oppression and wrong, from the place where the theft and lust and murder prowl—think you not that a cry has gone up many a time—a cry loud and strong—for vengeance against the oppressor? Ay, and the Judge, it may be, with his eye bright and piercing and quick, has had the sword in hand, and the sword has been brandished for destruction: and then he has glanced at the man at his right hand, and the bared and brandished weapon has gone back again to its scabbard, and the sinner has been spared.—Rev. W. Morley Punshon.

Patterning after Mother.

Oliver Crosby was a youth sixteen or eighteen years of age. He was the youngest of a large family of children. From very early life he manifested unusual sensibility and tenderness on the subject of religion, and the friend whom he made his counselor, and to whom he ever unbosomed his feelings on this subject with the utmost freedom, was his own dear mother.

One day he was reading some works on education, and his mother was sitting near him. At length he stopped, and addressing himself to her, said:

"Mother, you do not know how much you have been watched. When I was small I used to watch you in everything you did, so as to see what it was right for me to do. If I ever wanted to do anything that I thought might be wrong, I used to devise every plan to find out what you thought of it; and if you approved, I always felt safe in doing it. I never thought of going to father. I used to think that he had to see about supporting the family, and that you had everything to do about the soul; so I used to pattern after you."

"Why, my son," said the astonished mother, "what did you think when you saw me do things that were wrong."

"I knew," replied the son, "that you used to say that you were a sinner, like other people; but I used to think that everything was right that you did. I could not believe that mother did anything that was wrong."

The effect of these remarks on the feelings of that mother was of course almost overwhelming. She was ready to give herself up to bitter weeping when she found how great her influence over her children had been, and how little she had realized it. "Had I only known," she said, "that I was observed in this way, how differently I should have felt, especially when indulging in feelings that were wrong!" And yet there are few mothers whose feelings were more uniform, and whose influence was more salutary, or who have witnessed greater blessings on their children.

It is a most solemn truth that in most cases, children do pattern after their parents, and especially after their mother. Do parents generally realize this? Do they think that they are watched in all their words and actions, in all their intercourse with each other and the world, and in all their conduct toward their children? Do they remember that even what is wrong in them will be seen by the watchful eyes of their children, and be regarded and copied as proper and right? How can a parent think of this subject and not, like this mother, be overwhelmed, and ready to exclaim: "Who is sufficient for these things?" But there are most precious promises to encourage the parent. "My grace," says the Savior, "is sufficient for thee." "As thy day, so shall thy strength be." "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."—Congregationalist.

HOW TO BE HANDSOME.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a good face and attracts you by good looks, even before a word has been spoken. And we see all sorts of devices in men and women to improve their good looks—paints and washes, and all kinds of cosmetics, including a plentiful anointing with dirty hair oil.

Now all cannot have good features. They are as God made them; but almost any one can look as well, especially with good health. It is hard to give rules in a very short space, but in brief these will do:

Keep clean—wash freely and universally with warm water. All the skin wants is leave to act freely, and it will take care of itself. Its thousands of air holes must not be closed.

Eat regularly and sleep enough. The stomach can no more work all the time, night and day, than a horse; it must have regular work and regular sleep.

Good teeth are a help to good looks. Brush them with a soft brush, especially at night. Go to bed with clean teeth. Of course, to have white teeth, it is needful to let tobacco alone. Every woman knows that. And wash for the teeth should be very simple. Acids may whiten the teeth, but they take off the enamel and injure them.

Sleep in a cool room, in pure air. No one can have a clear skin who breathes bad air. But more than all, wake up mind and soul.

When the mind is awake, the dull, sleepy look passes away from the eyes. I do not know that the brain expands, but it seems to. Think, read—not trashy novels, but books that have something in them. Talk with people that know something; hear lectures and learn by them.

This is one good of preaching. A man thinks and works and tells us the result, and if we listen and hear and understand, the mind and soul are waked up.

Men say they can't afford books, and sometimes they don't even pay for their newspapers. In that case it does them little good, they feel so mean while they are reading them.

But men can afford what they really choose. If all the money spent in self-indulgence, in hurtful indulgence, was spent in books, for self-improvement, we should see a change. Men would grow handsome, and women, too. The soul would shine out through the eyes. We were not meant to be mere animals. Let us have books and read them, and lectures and hear them, and sermons and heed them.

A PIECE OF QUAKER STRATEGY.

In Scribner's for February, in his "New York in the Revolution," Mr. John F. Mines gives the following account of the way Putnam escaped from Howe when the British captured the city in 1776.

Neither soldier nor fugitive knew how narrow had been the escape of Putnam's army that day. When Sir William Howe, accompanied by Clinton Trion, had landed at Kip's Bay with the main body of the British army, they struck across the Middle Road, intending to make their camp on the heights of Inclenburg, midway between New York and Harlem. They reached the road at a point just opposite where Putnam was stealing along, under cover of the woods that skirted the Hudson, to rejoin Washington. There was a house near by, from whose upper windows they might easily have discovered the dust created by the rapid march of the "rebels," and from its cupola the gleam of bayonets would have been plainly visible. The Americans were not distant, indeed, but there was another and more insidious foe near at hand. Close to the Middle Road, at a point now designated by the corporation as Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh street, stood the unpretentious but exceedingly comfortable mansion of Robert Murray, a Quaker merchant of approved loyalty to the Crown, as well as of large wealth. Fortunately the shrewd merchant could not control the feelings of his household and his wife and daughters were ardent patriots. When Lord Howe and his staff reached the edge of the Quaker's gardens they were enraptured to find Mrs. Murray and her beautiful daughters ready to greet them with a warm welcome. The parties had once met in more peaceful days.

"William," said the fair Quaker matron, "will thee alight and refresh thyself at our house?"

"I thank you, Mrs. Murray," said the pleasure-loving commander, "but I must catch that rascally Yankee, Putnam."

The Yankee general was not to be caught this time, if woman's wit could save him, even if the the truth must be tortured into shape that should deceive in order to save life. Very demurely the lady rejoined, in that plain language of hers which always carries with it such emphasis of truth:

"Didst thou not hear that Putnam had gone? It is late to try to catch him. Thee had better came in and dine."

The invitation was seconded by the brightest smiles of the daughters, and Howe wavered. Promising to pursue the hated Yankees after he had dined, the British commander alighted and entered the house, where the fascinations of his charming hostesses made him forget for hours the object of his expedition. Putnam meantime was flying up the Bloomingdale road, never daring to draw breath until he caught sight of Washington's tents. Thacher, in his "Military Journal," writes that it became a common saying among the American officers that Mrs. Murray had saved Putnam's division.

PATIENT WORTH.

How full of meaning is the fact that we have nothing told us of the life of our Lord between the twelfth and thirtieth years. What a testimony against all our striving and snatching at hasty results—our impatience, our desire to glitter before the world—against the plucking of the unripe fruit of the mind, and the turning of that into a season of stunted and premature harvest, which should have been a season of patient sowing, of earliest culture, and silent ripening of the powers!—Trench.

THE SABBATH.

The ruin of multitudes has begun with a desecration of the Sabbath. They were in the sanctuary but a part of the day—then not at all—then read novels and political papers at home—then rode out, or spent the day in some saloon or refectory in company with the unprincipled and dissipated,—then drank, gamed, and reveled—then leaped over the bounds of honesty, defrauded, or stole,—and then— but you know the rest. And this is the downward career of thousands—these the steps by which they descended from virtue, respectability and comfort, to corruption, disgrace and destruction. "But for the violation of the Sabbath," confessed the pirate Gibbs, "I might have been a good and happy man."

Severity may be useful to some tempers; it somewhat resembles a file, disagreeable in its operations, but hard metal would be the brighter for it.

Children's Corner.

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

"Little by little," the torrent said,
As it swept along its narrow bed,
Chafing in wrath and pride,
"Little by little," and "day by day,"
And with every wave it bore away
A grain of sand from the banks which lay
Like granite walls on either side.

It came again, and the rushing tide
Covered the valley far and wide,
For the mighty banks were gone.
A grain at a time they were swept away;
And now the fields and meadows lay
Under the waves, for the work was done.

"Little by little," the tempter said,
As a dark and cunning snare he spread
For the young unwary feet;
"Little by little," and "day by day,"
I'll tempt the careless soul astray,
Into the broad and flowery way,
Until the ruin is made complete.

"Little by little," sure and slow,
We fashion our future of bliss or woe
As the present passes away.
Our feet are climbing the stairway bright,
Up to the region of endless light,
Or gliding downward into the night,
"Little by little," and "day by day."

THE LITTLE DOOR-KEEPER.

"Let's play clap out," cried Julie; "I'll be door-keeper."

"No, I," "I," "I," chorused several voices.

"I'll count up and see who," said Bell Green, with authority. Bell was one of the older girls from the back seat, and no one ventured to dispute with her. So she began—

"Eary. ary, ickery, un,
Phillisy, phollosy. Nicholas, John,
Quever, quaver, English knaver, Strincklum, strankum, out;"

and her finger pointed to Julie, so her chance was gon e the very first thing.

"I don't care!" said Julie angrily flinging herself out of the line, "I proposed the game and its not fair to count up. You are the meanest girls I ever saw, so there!" and she walked out of the yard shutting the gate after her very hard. Straight to Aunt Amy she went with her story.

"I wish my dear little Julie could be a door-keeper all the day long," said Auntie gently.

"There I knew you would think they were hateful to me," cried Julie: then catching sight of the expression on Aunt Amy's face, she added in a different tone, "O dear, I know there's a verse coming. I never did see anybody so full of the Bible as you are, Auntie."

"I was just thinking of David's prayer." she said, "'Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips.'"

"There she comes," said Myra Wells, a few minutes later; and she called out, "Here, Julie, you may have my place, I don't care."

"No, thank you," she answered pleasantly, "I have found some other door-keeping to do."

And so through that day, and many days to come, whenever she was angry, she kept the door of her lips shut so carefully that the wicked, impatient words could not get out, and all the girls wondered to see her grown so gentle and lovable. And best of all, I think the gates, too, have lifted up their heads, and the King of Glory has came in.—Sophia E. Eastman.

CHILDRENS' SINGING.

On one occasion, says a Scotch evangelist, two little ones, about six and seven years of age, were taught the hymn, "I feel like singing," and the singing of it at home so aroused the ire of the father that he forbade them; but the mother having been awakened to concern, he felt himself so isolated in feeling that he said he would leave the house unless hymns and religion were banished. His wife just replied, "Christ has come into this house, and he is far stronger than Satan." After a few nights he determined to go to the meeting and see what was going on. There the Spirit of God laid hold on him. That very night he staid to the second meeting, went home to bed, but not to rest. About one in the morning light dawned upon his troubled soul, so that he called out, "Mary, Mary, I feel like singing." In short the result is that that family are now a united and happy family, going on their way rejoicing. After this we determined to have children's meetings wherever we go; and everywhere we have found the same blessed effects follow.

A CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

Mrs. Jane Gray Swisshelm writes as follows to the Pittsburgh Commercial: A lady met me this morning, saying, "Did you see the receipt for curing hydrophobia in yesterday's Commercial?" I had not seen it. "Well," she continued, "it is just the cure I wanted you to write about two or three years ago; the old Chester valley cure. It never was known to fail, and was used on hundreds of cases in the eastern part of the State. I remember hearing of it as long as I can remember anything. I have told people, and told and talked, and no one would mind me! I tried to get you to write a letter about it, and now you must write. for people will not believe. They will read and forget all about it."

I remember perfectly her anxiety that I should write to the public and proclaim that elcampane and sweet milk are the specific for hydrophobia, and my purpose to repeat the account she gave me of it, but do not remember why I did not do so. That I may atone for my negligence I now repeat what she so long ago told me, and what she now urges me to make as public as possible.

In her old home in Chester county, Penn., lived a German named Jacob Emery, who used to be sent for, far and wide, when any one had been bitten by a rabid animal. He went to his patient, carrying something understood to be a root which he himself dug in the woods. He milked a pint of milk fresh from the cow, put his roots into it, boiled it, gave it to the patient, fasting; made him fast after taking it; gave a second and third dose on alternate days, and never failed in effecting a cure. In some way which she has forgotten, his secret transpired, and the root was known to be elcampane. The story current in the country, was that an old German made the discovery in the days of Penn, and applied to the Pennsylvania Legislature for a grant of $300 for making his secret public. His offer was treated with contempt, and he resolved that his knowledge should die with him; but a drunken son knew it, wrote out the receipt, making a number of copies, and tried to sell them at a dollar each. One of them was offered to my informant's grandfather, who laughed at the vender of important medical knowledge. He only succeeded in selling two, one of these to the man who made such effective use of it. So well did he establish the local reputation of his specific, that in his neighborhood folks were not afraid of mad dogs.

TO SAVE THE NEARLY DROWNED.

1. Lose no time. Carry out these directions on the spot:

2. Remove the froth and mucus from the mouth and nostrils.

3. Hold the body—for a few seconds only—with the head hanging down, so that the water may run out of the lungs and windpipe.

4. Loosen all tight articles of clothing about the neck and chest.

5. See that the tongue is pulled forward if it falls back into the throat. By taking hold of it with a handkerchief it will not slip.

6. If the breathing has ceased, or nearly so, it must be stimulated by pressure of the chest with the hands, in imitation of the natural breathing; forcibly expelling the air from the lungs; and allowing it to re-enter and expand them by the elasticity of the ribs. Remember that this is the most important step of all.

To do it readily, lay the person on his back, with a cushion, pillow or some such substance under his shoulders; then press with the flat of the hands over the lower part of the breast bone and the upper part of the abdomen, keeping up a regular repetition and relaxation of pressure of twenty pounds for a child, while a pressure of thirty pounds may be applied with safety to a grown person.

7. Rub the limbs with the hands or with dry cloths constantly, to aid the circulation and keep the body warm.

8. As soon as the person can swallow, give a table-spoonful of spirits in hot water, or some warm coffee or tea.

9. Work deliberately. Do not give up too quickly. Success has rewarded the efforts of hours.

WE DRIVE HORSES TO EXCESS.—By driving to excess we mean that horses are pulled and hauled, jerked and twitched too much with the reins. There is too much guiding with the lines. Concerning this subject, the Prairie Farmer says (in truth) that the "most vicious and inexcusable style of driving is the manner which so many drivers adopt, to wit: wrapping the lines around their hands and pulling the horse backward with all their might and main, so that the horse, in point of fact, feels the weight back of him, with his mouth, and not with his breast and shoulders. This they do under the impression that such a dead pull is needed in order to 'steady' the horse.

"The fact is, with rare exceptions, there should never be any pull upon the horse at all. A steady pressure is allowable, probably advisable; but anything beyond this has no justification in nature or reason. For nature suggests the utmost freedom of the action of the head, body and limbs, in order that the animal may attain the highest possible rate of speed. In speeding a horse the lines need seldom be grasped in both hands when the road is straight and free from obstructions. The true way to drive is to let the horse drive himself, the driver doing little but directing him and giving him that confidence which a horse gets in himself only when he feels that a guide and friend is back of him."

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicographer, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

The Oaths and Penalties of Thirty-three Degrees of Freemasonry Compiled by Franklin Paine, Sen., a Seceding Master Mason.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1876,
BY FRANKLIN PAINE, SEN.,
In the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Note.—The words which have been expunged from these oaths since the Exposition of Capt. Wm. Morgan are put in brackets, and those words which have been substituted for others of like meaning are in italic with the old words in parenthesis and italic.

I. OBLIGATION ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.

I ———, of my own free will and accord, in * the presence of Almighty God and this Worshipful Lodge of [Free and Accepted Masons] erected to him and dedicated to the Holy Saints John. (dedicated to God and held forth to the holy order of St. John), do hereby and here on most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear that I will always hail, ever conceal, and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts, or points of the hidden (part or parts, art or arts, point or points of the secret rts and) mysteries of ancient Freemasonry, which have been heretofore may at this ime, or shall at any future period be communicated to me as such, (I have received, am about to receive, or may hereafter be instructed in,) to any person or persons [in the known world] † whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother Mason, or within [the body of] a regularly (juse and lawfully) eonstituted lodge of Masons, (such) and neither (not) unto him nor [unto] them until [whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only whom I shall find so to be] by (after) strict trial, [and] due examination, or legal (lawful) information ‡I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself.

I furthermore (furthermore do I) § solemnly promise and swear that I will not write, print, 1 paint, stamp, stain, cut, hew, earve, mark, (indent, paint,) or engrave them (it) 2 or cause the same to be done upon (on) anything movable or immovable [under the whole canopy of heaven] capable of receiving the least impression of a word, syllable, letter, or character whereby (whereby or whereon the least letter, figure character, mark, stain, shadow, or resemblance of) the same may beeome legible or intelligible to myself or to any [other] person under the whole canopy of heaven (in the known world) and (whereby) the seerets of Freemasonry (Masonry) may be thereby unlawfully obtained through my unworthiness. To all of this (which) I [do] most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear 3 with a firm and steadfast resolution to keep and perform the same without any (the least) equivocation, mental reservation, or secret (self) evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having (to have) my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by its (the) roots, and [my body] buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours, 4 should I ever knowingly or wilfully violate this my solemn oath or obligation as an Entered Apprentice Mason. So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

II. OBLIGATION, FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE.

Taking Fellow Craft Oath.

I———, of my own free-will and aecord, in the presence of Almighty God and this Worshipful lodge [of Fellow Craft Masons] erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saints John (dedicated to God and held forth to the holy order of St. John), do hereby and hereon (here the Master places his right hand on that of the candidate) most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear [in addition to my former obligation] that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts or points of the Fellow Craft degree to any person or persons whomsoever (that I will not give the degree of a Fellow Craft Mason to any one of an inferior degree, nor to any other being in the known world) except it be to a true and lawful brother [or brethren] Fellow Craft, [Masons] or within [the lodge of just and] regularly (lawfully) constituted lodge of Fellow Crafts; (such) and neither (not) unto him nor [unto] thom [whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only whom I shall find so to be] until by (after) strict trial [and] due examination, or legal (lawful) information 4 I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the sameas I am myself.

[Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will not wrong this lodge, nor a brother of this degree to the value of two eents knowingly, myself, nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it.] I Furthermore solemnly promise and swear that I will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules, and regulations of the Fellow Craft degree so far as the same shall come to my knowledge. (Furthermore, do I promise and swear that I will support the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of the United States and of the Grand lodge of this State under which this lodge is held, and conform to all the by-laws, rules and regulations of this or any other lodge of which I may at any time hereafter become a member, as far as in my power.)

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, 5 that I will answer and obey all due (regular) signs and summons sent to me from a lodge of Fellow Crafts or given to me by a brother of this degree, (given, handed, sent, or thrown to me by the hand of a brother Fellow Craft Mason, or from the body of a just and lawfully constituted lodge of such, provided that it be) within the length of my cable-tow, [or square and angle of my work.]

Furthermore, that I will aid and assist all distressed worthy brother Fellow Crafts, they applying to me as such, so far as their necessities may require and my ability permit without material injury to myself. (Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will be aiding and assisting all poor and penniless brethren Fellow Crafts, their widows and orphans, wheresoever disposed round the globe, they applying to me as such, as far as in my power, without injuring myself or family.)

* Furthermore, that I will not cheat, wrong or defraud a lodge of Fellow Crafts nor a brother of this degree knowingly nor supplant him in any of his laudable undertakings.

To all of this (which) I [do] most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear † with a firm and steadfast resolution to keep and perform the same, without any equivocation (the least hesitation) mental reservation or secret (self) evasion of mind in me whatever, binding myself under no less penalty than that of having (to have) my left breast torn open, [and] my heart [and vitals] plucked out (taken from thence) and [thrown over my left shoulder and carried into the valley of Jehosaphat] and given (there to become) as a prey to [wild] beasts of the field and the fowls (vultures) of the air should I ever knowingly or willingly violate this (if ever I should prove wilfully guilty of violating any part of this) my solemn oath and (or) obligation as (of) a Fellow Craft Mason, so help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performanee of the same.

III. OBLIGATION MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.

Taking Master Mason's Oath.

I,———, of my own free-will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this Worshipful lodge [of Master Masons] erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saints John, (dedicated to God and held for the holy order of St. John,) do hereby and hereon (the Master at these words places his right hand upon those of the candidate most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear: [in addition to my former obligations.]

That I will always hail, ever conseal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts or points of the Master Mason's degree to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother Master Mason. or within a regularly constituted lodge of Master Masons, and neither unto him nor them until by strict trial, due examination or legal information, I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself. (That I will not give the degree of a Master Mason to any of an inferior degree, nor to any other being in the known world, except it be to a true and lawful brother or brethren Master Masons, within the body of a just and lawfully constituted lodge of such; and not unto him nor them whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only whom I shall find so to be, after strict trial and due examination, or lawful information received.)

‡ [Furthermore, do I promise aud swear, that I will not give the Master's word whieh I shall hereafter receive, neither in the lodge nor out of it, except it be on the five points of fellowship, and then not above my breath.]

[Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not give the grand hailing sign of distress except I am in real distress, or for the benefit of the Craft when at work; and should I ever see that sign given or the word accompanying it, and the person who gave it appearing to be in distress I will fly to his relief at the risk of my life, should there be a greater probability of saving his life than losing my own.

[Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not wrong this lodge, nor a brother of this degree to the value of one cent, knowingly, myself, nor suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it.]

[Furthermore, do I promise aud swear, that I will not be at the initiating, passing and raising a candidate at one communication, without a regular dispensatiou from the Grand Lodge for the same.]

8 I furthermore promise and swear, that I will conform to and abide by all the laws, rules aud regulations of the Master Mason's degree, and of the lodge of which I shall hereafter become a member, and that I will ever maintain and support the constitution, laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge under which the same shall be holden so far as the same shall come to my knowledge.

* This word "the" is not in the oath as given by Morgan.

† This clause "with a stern and steadfast" etc., is not here used by Morgan.

‡ The substance of these four paragraphs from Morgan's Exposition is given further on in the oath.

8 Most of the substance of these four paragraphs ending with "myself or family," is given in various parts of the oath in Morgan's Exposition, as will be seen.

Furthermore, that I will answer and obey all due signs and summons sent to me from a lodge of Master Masons or given to me by a brother of this degree, if within the length of my cable-tow.

Furthermore, that I will keep the secrets of a worthy brother Master Mason as inviolable as my own when communicated to and received by me as such, murder and treason excepted and them only at my own option.

Furthermore, that I will aid and assist all worthy distressed brother Master Masons, their widows and orphans, they applying to me as such, so far as their necessities may require and my ability permit without material injury to myself or family.

Furthermore, that I will not sit in a lodge of clandestine Masons, nor converse upon the secrets of Freemasonry with a clandestine-made Mason nor with one who is under the sentence of suspension or expulsion to my knowledge while under such sentence.

(Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will not be at the initiating, passing or raising a candidate in a clandestine lodge, I knowing it to be such.)

Furthermore, that I will not assist in or be present at the initiating, passing or raising of a woman, an old man in dotage, a young man under age, an atheist, a madman or a fool, I knowing them to be such.

(Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not be at the initiating of an old man in dotage, a young man in nonage, an Atheist, irreligious libertine, idiot, mad-man, hermaphrodite or woman.)

* Furthermore' that I will not cheat, wrong or defraud a lodge of Master Masons nor a brother of this degree knowingly, nor supplant him in any of his laudable undertakings but will give him due and timely notice that he may ward off approaching danger, if in my power.

(Furthermore, do I promise and swear that I will not speak evil of a brother Master Mason, neither behind his back, nor before his face, but will apprise him of approaching danger, if in my power.)

† Furthermore, that I will not knowingly strike a brother Master Mason nor otherwise do him personal violence in anger except it be in the necessary defense of my person, family or property.

Furthermore, [do I promise and swear,] that I will not have illicit carnal intercourse with (violate the chastity of ¤) Master Mason's wife, mother, sister, or daughter, I knowing them to be such, nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it.

5 Furthermore, that I will not give the Grand Hailing sign of distress of a Master Mason except in real distress, in case of the most iminent danger, within a regularly constituted lodge of Master Masons, or in some secure place for Masonic instruction: and should I see the sign given or hear the words accompanying it, I will immediately repair to the relief of the person so giving it, should there be a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own.

Furthermore, that I will not give the Grand Masonic word in any other manner or form than that in which I shall hereafter receive it and then only in low breath.

[Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will support the constitution of the Grand Lodge of the State of———, under which this lodge is held, and conform to all the by-laws, rules and regulations of this, or any other lodge of which I may at any time hereafter become a member.

[Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will obey all regular signs, summonses or tokens, given, handed, sent or thrown to me from the hand of a brother Master Mason, or from the body of a just and lawfully constituted lodge of such, provided it be within the length of my cable-tow.]

[Furthermore do I promise and swear, that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted; and they left to my own election.]

6 [Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will go on a Master Mason's errand whenever required, even should I have to go bare-foot and bare-headed, if within the length of my cable-tow.

[Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will always remember a brother Master Mason, when on my knees, offering up my devotions to Almighty God.]

[Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will be aiding and assisting all poor, indigent Master Masons, their wives and orphans, wheresoever disposed around the globe, as far as in my power, without injuring myself or family materially.]

[Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that if any part of my solemn oath or obligation be omitted at this time, that I will hold myself amenable thereto, whenever informed.]

To all of this (which) I most 7 solemnly and sincerely promise and swear with a firm and steadfast resolution (fixed and steady purpose of mind in me) to keep and perform the same 7without any equivocation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having (to have) my body severed in twain (two) [in the midst and divided to the north and south] my bowels 7 taken from thence and burned to ashes [in the center] and the ashes scattered to (before) the four winds of heaven, so that no more trace or remembrance may be had (that there might not be the least track or trace of remembrance remain among men or Masons) of so vile and perjured a wretch as I, should I ever knowingly or willingly violate this my solemn obligation as a Master Mason (should be were I ever to prove wilfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a Master Mason.) So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

* The substance of the first part of this paragraph to the word "knowingly" will be seen on previous page.

† This paragraph is not used by Morgan.

5 The substance of these two paragraphs has previously been quoted from Morgan.

6 These two paragraphs from Morgan's Exposition are not found in the modern work.

IV. OBLIGATION MARK MASTER'S DEGREE.

I, ——— of my own free will and accord, in presence of Almighty God, and this Right Worshipful Lodge of Mark Master Masons, do hereby and hereon, in addition to my former obligations, most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will not give the degree of a Mark Master Mason to any one of an inferior degree, nor to any other person in the known world, except it be to a true and lawful brother, or brethren of this degree; and not unto him or them, whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only, whom I shall find so to be, after strict trial and due examination, or lawful information given:

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will support the constitution of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States of America, also the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of this State, under which this lodge is held, and conform to all the by-laws, rules, and regulations of this or any other lodge of Mark Master Masons, of which I may at any time hereafter become a member:

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will obey all the regular signs and summons given, handed, sent, or thrown to me from the hand of a brother Mark Master Mason, or from the body of a just and legally constituted lodge of such, provided it be within the length of my cable-tow:

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not wrong this lodge, or a brother of this degree, to the value of his wages, (or one penny) myself, knowingly, nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it:

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not sell, swap, barter, or exchange my mark which I shall hereafter choose, nor send it a second time to pledge until it is lawfully redeemed from the first:

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will receive a brother's mark when offered to me requesting a favor, and grant him his request if in my power; and if it is not in my power to grant his request, I will return his mark with the value thereof, which is half a shekel of silver, or a quarter of a dollar. To all of which I do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a fixed and steady purpose of mind in me, to keep and perform the same, binding myself under no less penalty, than to have my right ear smote off, that I may forever be unable to hear the word, and my right hand chopped off, as the penalty of an imposter, if I should ever prove wilfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath, or obligation, of a Mark Msster Mason. So help me God, and make me steadfast to keep and perform the same. "Detach your hand and kiss the book."

V. OBLIGATION PAST MASTER'S DEGREE.

I, ———, of my own free will and accord, in presence of Almighty God, and this Worshipful Lodge of Past Master Masons, do hereby and hereon, most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, in addition to my former obligations, that I will not give the degree of Past Master Mason, or any of the secrets pertaining thereto, to any one of an inferior degree, nor to any person in the known world; except it be to a true and lawful brother or brethren, Past Master Masons, or within the lawfully body of a just and constituted lodge of such; and not unto him or them whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only, whom I shall find so to be after strict trial and examination, or lawful information.

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will obey all regular signs and summons, sent, thrown, handed, or given from the hand of a brother of this degree, or from the body of a just and lawfully constituted lodge of Past Masters, provided it be within the length of my cable-tow.

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will support the constitution of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States of America, also that of the Grand Chapter of the State of———, under which this lodge is held, and conform to all the by-laws, rules, and regulations, of this or any other lodge, of which I may at any time hereafter become a member, so far as in my power.

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not assist, or be present at the conferring of this degree upon any person, who has not, to the best of my knowledge and belief regularly received the degree of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Master Mason and Mark Master, or been elected Master of a regular lodge of Master Masons.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will aid and assist all poor and indigent Past Master Masons, their widows and orphans, wherever dispersed round the globe, they applying to me as such and I finding them worthy, so far as in my power, without material injury to myself or family.

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that the secrets of a brother of this degree, delivered to me in charge as such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as they were in his own, before communicated to me; murder and treason excepted, and those left to my own election.

Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not wrong this lodge, nor a brother of this degree, to the value of one cent, knowingly, myself, nor suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it.

* Most of the substance of these four paragraphs ending with "myself or family" are given in various parts of the oath in Morgan's Exposition, as will be seen.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argumt. 425 pagenes,
Price, $1.35.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty. and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages o Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

James Auten, Galion, Ohio, brings in a club of five for a year. Edmond Ronayne, one for six months. Several others send in one, two, or three new names. One earnest worker who secured in his neighborhood forty-five or more subscriptions for a year last fall, writes:

"It will soon be time to sell off books and get more subscribers for the Cynosure. I try and not let an opportunity pass to do good, and to communicate." We hope all our readers can say and feel "our Cynosure," and that each one will resolve to use all justifiable efforts to make the subscription list of the paper number before the close of the Centennial year.

To say nothing of the debt, now over $2,000, which we are trying to carry on the Cynosure, are the friends of this paper willing to allow it to remain with an average circulation of four thousand or less copies? The united efforts of its readers would quickly multiply such a circulation by four. We have been enabled to secure new type for it, and are constantly doing what we can to increase its value. How many who read this column will give a long, strong pull towards a list of ten thousand subscribers this fall and winter?

Does your subscription expire in July? Please renew at once, thus saving any delay about receiving the August papers. Several whose subscriptions expire in August have already renewed. We thank them for their promptness, and hope others will imitate it.

Who will help next week's report?

We have put the engraving of Signing the Declaration at the low price of fifty cents or commission on Cynosure subscriptions, not for the sake of making money out of them, (selling pictures is not our business) but for the purpose of showing our good will to our friends by giving them the advantage of the low rates at which we can purchase the engravings by the quantity.

C. D. Coppock, Quarry, Iowa, writes:

"The pictures you sent me of the Signing of the Declaration of Independence came to hand all right. I think it is a very good picture for the price; all that have seen it admire it very much."

In connection with the return of silver coin to general use, and the adverse criticisms thereon, it is of interest to notice the action of the German government within a few days deferring the change of its circulating medium from silver to gold. This second thought was brought about by the certainty of an immense loss from the sale of its silver at a great depreciation, while gold would be purchased at a corresponding advance. A result of this change of policy has been to raise the quotations of silver in London from 47 to 51 pence sterling per ounce, or from 94 cents to $1.02 in gold. The fluctuations in value of our silver coinage will be a question to be settled at some time in the near future. Last week Wednesday the "trade dollar," silver, was worth 86½ cents, having advanced within a fortnight from 80¼ cents, at the same time the gold value of two half dollars or four quarters was but 79¼ cents, nearly ten cents less than "greenbacks." An international congress on currency values might suggest a remedy for this fluctuation.

A combination of partyism and Freemasonry has saddled upon the country an impeachment trial likely to be barren of results in proportion to its enormous cost. After wrestling over the question of jurisdiction with enough waste of statesmanship to have settled the Turko-Servian war, the Senate entered upon a long trial. The testimony was soon through; the well-remembered C. P. Marsh, the fugitive Freemason whose testimony started this huge and rickety machine, making his story less satisfactory than before, if possible. The counsel on either side are now straining at the unprofitable task of elevating this trial into the rank of its prestige. Mons parturiunt——the Senate threatens to stand by its former vote on the jurisdiction of the case, and so will fail of a vote to impeach; and at least it could but put a dignity upon a second rate politician whose conscience had lost the power to recognize a bribe in the multitude of gifts. This trial has prolonged Congress to an unusual degree, has cost the country millions of money, has been a political higgle from first to last, and has served mainly to break down the dignity of impeachment trials. It will be advisable to change the law restricting them to a narrower circle of officers or crimes, and handing such persons as Belknap over to a judge and jury.

The policy of Pres. Grant in surrounding himself with men untried or untrustworthy in reputation and public affairs, of whom Belenap was a conspicuous example, is painfully evident from the testimony given last week before a House committee by Bluford Wilson, the solicitor of the Treasury under Bristow, and manager of the whiskey trials. The struggle with the whiskey ring, backed by the company of politicians who surrounded the President and to whom he gave his confidence, will stand justly in the history of the country, an attack on government thieves remarkable for its management and success, but the part taken in it by the President cannot add to his enviable fame.

The Grand Master of English Masons is not a princely example of virtue or good breeding as most people know, yet it would be supposed that his bad propensities would be repressed while acting as the representative of an enlightened and Christian nation during his late journey to India and return. A letter from a female missionary in Egypt speaks thus, however, of his visit to that country:

"There has been a good deal of excitement in Egypt lately. The Prince of Wales and a Russian Prince kept Cairo in a blaze for a week or two. The former did everything in his power to make the name of an Englishman despicable, and it was with a sigh of relief that respectable people listened to the reports of the guns which announced his departure. 'Long may God spare us Queen Victoria!' said the English people, and well they might.'"

Song of 1876.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

[Written for the Fourth of July celebration at the Academy of Music, New York.]

Wakeu, voice of the Land's Devotion!
Spirit of freedom, awaken all!
Ring ye shores to the Song of Ocean,
Rivers answer, and mountains call!
The golden day has come:
Let every tongue be dumb
That sounded its malice or murmured its fears.
She hath won her story;
She wears her glory:
We crown her the land of a hundred years!

Out of darkness and toil and danger
Into the light of victory's day—
Help to the weak and home to the stranger.
Freedom to all, she hath held her way!
Now Europe's orphans rest
Upon her mother breast.
The voices of nations are heard in the cheers
That shall cast upon her
New love and honor,
And crown her the Queen of a hundred years.

North and South, we are met as brothers:
East and West, we are wedded as one!
Right of each shall secure our mother's—
Child of each is her faithful son.
We give thee heart and hand,
Our glorious native land!
For battle has tried thee and time endears;
We will write thy story,
And keep thy glory
As pure as of old for a thousand years!

Thaddeus Stevens on the Evils of Freemasonry.

EXTRACTS FROM A REPORT TO THE LEGISLATURE OF PENNSYLVANIA, JUNE 13TH, 1830.

The committee to whom was referred the petitions of citizens of this commonwealth praying for an investigation into the evils of Freemasonry and other secret societies, report that many considerations conspired to impress upon them the great importance of the inquiry with which they were charged. The number of petitions referred to them was very great, signed by a large number of the most honest, intelligent and guiltless of our citizens. They contain charges against the institution of Freemasonry and other secret societies, of the most alarming character, which, if true, could not fail to render them dangerous to every free government, subversive of all equal rights, social order, morality and religion. The committee issued subpoenas for about one hundred witnesses, embracing men of all ranks in society and of every grade of Masonry within the commonwealth. Among the number were all the present, and many of the past officers of the Grand Lodge, who were required to produce the books, papers and records of the Grand Lodge over which they presided, that the testimony by which the institution was to be adjudged, might not be supposed to proceed from unskilful or perjured lips. Several District Deputy Post Grand Masters were summoned among whom were Geo. Wolf, Geo. M. Dallas and T. Hartley Crawford, Esq. A few only of the witnesses yielded obedience to the law, and thereby evinced that they deemed their civil, superior to their Masonic obligations. But the testimony procured is highly important, and establishes the following propositions, to wit:

1st. That the revelations of Freemasonry made by Bernard, Morgan, Allyn and other seceding Masons, are genuine expositions of the forms, ceremonies, oaths and obligations of Freemasonry as practiced and administered in Pennsylvania, as well as the rest of the civilized world.

2nd. The initiatory and other ceremonies of the several degrees are proven to accord most literally with the description of them given in Bernard's Light on Masonry, and Allyn's Ritual. (The committee then describe the ceremonies from these works.)

Many of these ceremonies which we have not space to notice, are of a most horrid and blasphemous character; many of them to a casual observer, appear to be merely childish, ridiculous, and foolish; but they are far from deserving that character. They are founded on the deepest knowledge of the human heart. Pride and shame operate more powerfully than conscience. A Mason might disclose the villainy of the order and justify himself by pleading the unlawful and demoralizing character of the oaths. But he would with much more difficulty be persuaded to exhibit himself to the public, naked, hood-winked, with a rope around his neck, cuffed, beat, and bruised by his fellow members.

It was proved that in Pennsylvania, crime has been concealed under Masonic obligations; that the abduction of Wm. Morgan was Masonically communicated to the lodges of this State; that Masonic appeals have been made to influence judicial tribunals; that frequent applications have been made through the medium of lodges and otherwise, for aid and support of brother Masons who were candidates for office; that Masons belonging to a party known to be in the minority, had been elected to office by the aid of Masonic votes of the opposing party. But although valuable testimony has been obtained by the committee which clearly establishes the oaths, obligations, and ceremonies of these secret societies; yet much which was desirable and which the committee expected to receive was withheld by the contumacious and rebellious conduct of the Masonic institution, which arrayed itself in opposition to the constituted authorities of the commonwealth, bid defiance to, and trampled upon the laws, and finally proved itself sufficiently strong, and the House of Representatives sufficiently weak,to escape with impunity.

The testimony of the officers and the production of the records of the Grand Lodge, were of the most importance to vindicate the purity of the institution if it were really pure, and conclusively to prove its guilt if it be involved in iniquity. The committee were willing to rest the truth of all the allegations against it upon its own records, kept by its own officers.

They believe that they contain undeniable evidence of its deep depravity. That there was written the plain history of its participation in the foul murder of Morgan in the sums of money voted by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, to defend his murderers.

Masons of high standing from every quarter of the State were subpoened and required to be sworn "to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" concerning the institution to which they belonged. They were distinctly informed that they would be required to give no evidence that would criminate themselves. The House of Representatives, by a large majority, ordered them to be attached for refusing to be sworn; yet they obstinately repeated such refusal in the face of the House.

How fearfully criminal or disgraceful must have been the facts which truth would have disclosed, when to conceal them they thus braved the authority of the law, incurred the risk of legal penalties and covered themselves with suspicion, odium, and the indignation of honest men! They sought to protect themselves from testifying under the plea that they were not bound to criminate or disgrace themselves. This plea was an admission that every act of Masonry was criminal or disgraceful, else they might have given some evidence without self-crimination.

[The foregoing report of Thaddeus Stevens to the Legislature of Pennsylvania is given as reported by Alfred Craigh, P. M. Lodge 164, P. H. P, Chapter 150, P. T. J. G. M. Council No, 1, P. G. C. Jaques De Molay Encampment of K. T. & M. No. 2, in a work entitled, "History of Masonry and Anti-masonry in Pensylvania." This report besides this establishes two other points to wit:

1st. That Masonry regards the oath of secrecy as paramount to all civil obligations, and

2nd. That the Masonic obligation of secrecy is inconsistent with Christian candor and truthfulness.

Yours for truth and virtue,

H. H. Hinman.]

The Promise of National Longevity.

[From the Oration of Wm. M. Evarts at Independence Hall, Phila., on the 4th of July, 1876.]

The spirit of the nation is at the highest—its triumph over the inborn, inbred perils of the Constitution has chased away all fears, justified all hopes, and with universal joy we greet this day. We have not proved unworthy of a great ancestry; we have had the virtue to uphold what they so wisely, so firmly established. With these proud possessions of the past, with powers matured, with principles settled, with habits formed, the nation passes as it were from preparatory growth to responsible development of character, and the steady performance of duty. What labors await it, what trials shall attend it, what triumphs for human nature, what glory for itself, are prepared for this people in the coming century, we may not assume to foretell. "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth forever," and we reverently hope that these our constituted liberties shall be maintained to the unending line of our posterity, and so long as the earth itself shall endure.

In the great procession of nations, in the great march of humanity, we hold our place. Peace is our duty, peace is our policy. In its arts, its labors, and its victories, then we find scope for all our energies, rewards for all our ambitions,renown enough for all our love and fame. In the august presence of so many nations, which by their representatives, have done us the honor to be witnesses of our commemorative joy and gratulation, and in sight of the collected evidences of the greatness of their own civilization with which they grace our celebration, we may well confess how much we fall short, how much we have to make up, in the emulative competitions of the times. Yet, even in this presence, and with a just deference to the age, the power, the greatness of the other nations of the earth, we do not fear to appeal to the opinion of mankind whether, as we point to our land, our people, and our laws, the contemplation should not inspire us with a lover's enthusiasm for our country.

Time makes no pauses in his march. Even while I speak the last hour of the receding is replaced by the first hour of the coming century, and reverence for the past gives way to the joys and hopes, the activities and the responsibilities of the future. A hundred years hence the piety of that generation will recall the ancestral glory which we celebrate,and crown it with the plaudits of a vast population which no man can number. By the mere circumstance of this periodicity our generation will be in the minds, in the hearts, on the lips of our countrymen at the next Centennial commemoration in comparison with their own character and condition, and with the great founders of the nation. What shall they say of us? How shall they estimate the part we bear in the unbroken line of the nation's progress? And so on, in the long reach of time, forever and forever, our place in the secular roll of the nation's progress? And so on,observation and criticism. Under this double trust, then from the past and for the future, let us take heed to our ways, and while it is called to-day,resolve that the great heritage we have received shall be handed down through the long line of advancing generations, the home of liberty, the abode of justice, the stronghold of faith among men, "which holds the moral elements of the world together," and of faith in God, which binds that world to his throne.

WANTED! WANTED!! WANTED!!!

300,000 more.

The above often drew attention during the late conflict between the loyal North and disloyal South. The record connected with that expression of want, that call for help may be tersely stated. The country is endangered, her government assailed, her rights trampled upon, her principles imperiled; to deliver the country, protect her government, defend her rights, and secure from overthrow, the principles on which her institutions are founded, men are wanted. Some, many have responded to her appeals, but more are wanted,—"300,000 more."

The tardy answering of th t call, the resistance of the draft m ade to supply that want,—who can forget the aid it rendered to the enemy? Who can doubt that while the meeting of that demand brought victory, to have long refused to respond, would have brought fatal disaster, and defeat.

Looking out upon our country today, even in the pride and glory of this Centennial year, who can fail to see a like pressing need of men. "A time like this demands brave men."

O the urgency of the call! How importunately it comes to us from every quarter! Men. wanted; not creatures, or things, but men. Men, saved from the bondage of sin and service of Satan, rescued from unholy alliance with all that "worketh abomination;" men as free in the exercise of their manhood as God is in the supremacy of his God-head. Such men are wanted to-day; more and more of them. In the light of the facts shining out upon us in the present of our nation's history, may we not say again

OUR COUNTRY IS IN DANGER.

The men (many of them) who, by vox populi, have become the custodians of the rights and principles which form at once the foundation and superstructure of our government are preying upon these rights, and seeking (if not openly, yet certainly;) to destroy those principles. Party intrigue, political corruption, bribery, and personal ambition; these are the evils, not fancied, but actual, by which we are threatened. The Beast long uneasy in its lair, is seeking both shelter and dominion under the religious toleration of our land; while the image (secretism) worshiped by the "cable-towed" masses, with Christless prayers, and dark orgies assumes control of pulpit, press, and rostrum; and holds in hand the liberty of the people.

We look about us for measures by which to save our land from the doom threatened it; and we see conventions, conferences, and assemblies, sitting as "Committee on ways and means" to reach this same end; but passing by them, with their "resolutions," we learn from the Divine Master of assemblies that the only successful way to overthrow sin is to promote holiness; while to cast down error, we must build up truth; or in other words, the right, in principle and in practice,must be assayed in opposition to the wrong.

To use this God-appointed measure, men are needed, men who know and love the right, are willing in life to become its embodiment, and in death, its martyrs. Such men we need. We believe there are men enough in the land, who perceive the difference between the right and the wrong to purify church and state, if they would only be true to their judgments and consciences. What we need is not so much a knowledge of right principles, we have this, but men of fidelity who dare and will stand by these prineiples. Too many among us if not "two sonled," (see James i. 8.) are at least like certain idol images which face both ways; ready to turn with the tide.

If those who believe that secretism is a sin, would but stir up their faith till it became active and operative, and then dare to advance and stand by that faith, it would not be long before this evil would be unknown in the church of God. So with other prevailing sins. Again, if those who believe in the prineiples of the "American Party," would but vote as they believe, what a power would be exerted even now.

O men and brethren, this reform movement is of God, and must go on. God calls upon you and I in our personal individuality, with many, with few, or alone, to stand in defense of his truth and his cause; if we do it, well; if we do it not, his truth shall still prevail and triumph; leaving us accursed because we came not up to his help.

O at such a time as this, to be a man, is indeed "but little lower than the angels;" if we but use the power of our manhood for Christ.

Fidei Defensor.

Canton, Wis..

"I have loved the habitation of thy house," said David; and in making this declaration, he expressed the feelings of every true Christian. The sanctuary of God is loved by every real child of God. He has a seat there—is found in it every Sabbath, —worships the Lord in the beauty of holiness, receives with meekness the engrafted word which is able to save the soul, and sanctified by the truth and the spirit of God, is having drawn upon him the lineaments of Christ, becoming meet for the heavenly Jerusalem, of which St. John tells us, that the "Lord God and the Lamb are the temple," Rev. xxi. 22.

THE NINTH NATIONAL CONVENTION.

ADDRESSES OF WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 21st.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, the second day of the convention and third sitting of the body, addresses were made by Rev. L. N. Stratton, Linus Chittenden, Esq., Rev. J. M. Snyder, C. T. Webb and Caleb Gray. The first has already been reported, the others follow herewith.

THE MAN DEGRADED.

At the close of Mr. Stratton's address Linus Chittenden of Crystal Lake, Ill., was called for, and on being introduced said that he was not a talking man, but Pres. Blanchard had found him out as a seceding Mason and got him over to Wheaton to tell the story of the initiation in public. On one occasion he had refrained from giving his testimony and his conscience afterward upbraided him for the neglect of a seeming duty. He had resolved ever since to lose no opportunity again of bearing witness against the lodge. His health had been poor all the season and pecuniary losses severe, but he felt that he must come here to this Convention in spite of all hindrances. He said a great objection in his mind to the order of Freemasonry, of which he had been a member, was the effect upon the man himself; it made men lose all self-respect. How this is done. A man goes to a lodge, gives up his clothes, gets a halter around his neck, sells himself, body and soul to the lodge and gives them twenty-five dollars to take him in. Thus led like a blind mule to water, his regard for himself, his dignity as a respectable man is gone and he is made ready for bad actions. Another way to lose one's self-respect is to take money from a person without giving a fair equivalent. No merchant who cares for his business reputation will do it. But in the lodge, the Worshipful Master, the deacons, wardens, tyler take your money, and what do they give back in return? The privilege of wearing the devil's padlock all the rest of your life. When a candidate enters the lodge he is taught to say that no selfish or mercenary motive had induced him to join the lodge, which is almost invariably a lie and a man who tells a falsehood loses his self-respect. Then the lodge humiliates him again by demanding something he has not—some metallic substance. The swearing to stand by a brother under most fearful penalties takes away his self-respect again. When men practice the Royal Arch ceremonies with the "burning bush," where is their self-respect? How can men preserve their self-respect when with the Knight Templars they play night after night with coffins and dead men's bones.

Freemasonry is in this respect the enemy of every one who is duped by it, for it takes away from him what is better to him than property, the honor which every man should have for his own conscience and integrity of action.

THE VICTORY OF REFORM.

Rev. J. M. Snyder of Wheaton, Ill., responded to an invitation to speak with an earnest and eloquent speech of nearly half an hour. He said he was called on unexpectedly; but the deep interest he felt in the cause would not suffer him to be silent at such a time as this. He had entered the anti-slavery struggle when a young man, when his locks were auburn, and had lived to walk in triumph over Southern battle-fields, and to return from the dreadful plains of war while white flags waved welcome home. He hoped yet to live to see this reform, though now weak and despised, receive a like ovation. Success does not always depend on the fact that we may fail to see it right in view before us; it does not depend upon the fact that our enemies are bold and confident. The elements of success must be in our reform. If they are in it no power in earth or hell can prevail to prevent a victory. All good angels are with us,—all powers of truth. God himself is fighting for us. The forces are now well organized for the overthrow of this iniquity. Our workers now and then may fall at our side and be buried from our sight, but God will in his own time raise up some Grant, some Luther of the future. God has him and will bring him forward at the right time. All the powers of truth and goodness are with us. We are empowered by the undergirding strength of the Almighty. Twenty-five years will do more to settle the question of victory than a vote of this convention. The corner-stones laid by Freemasons in Chicago and Rockford may lay for a time, but though the forces of the lodge are more mysterious than those of slavery, the same all conquering power shall prevail against it. The question is not to be settled to-day. We are yet discussing, questioning, getting these problems before the people through our lecturers and literature. We want men for this work who have the truth in them not only, but have eternal wear in them. The ultimate decision is not the prejudices of men. It is only a question of time when wrong will die. If its grave is not already dug, God knows when it will be; and the child is already born who will lead its funeral procession.

I believe that Freemasonry is paganism boiled down. You can go into any heathen country on the face of God's earth and find just as good morals as are taught in Masonic lodges. The morals of the lodge are the morals of heathenism. But the Eternal Christ is the stone cut out of the mountain without hands and rolled through the nations.

There is some good among all cliques. Thieves, Molly Maguires, pirates—all stick to one another. I do not propose to call Masons thieves; but their principle of so-called "brotherly love" is of the same nature and is backed up by similar oaths as brigands require. There is no evil in the earth but can find some good clothes to dress up in. I have many friends among the lodge men, and I am not opposed to them personally; but am opposed to their principles. And I hope that my open acts and private purposes may have the effect of keeping my sons out of secret combinations. I do not believe there is any more danger of their entering the lodge than of their committing suicide. By similar home influences, and by public teaching, multitudes will be kept out of the lodge until the entire masses will be leavened by the truth of Christianity. And when Jesus Christ comes to reign on earth and is crowned Lord of all, then the questions of the world will be settled. And Freemasonry, now opposed to Christ, because it is his rival, must be swept away before Christ can reign supreme. The question is not whether the bread is made of flour or not, but whether it contains poison or not. I object to secretism because though it has the appearance of a good loaf yet it has poison in it. It is poisoned by party favoritism. No such thing should be tolerated in a country like ours. It is the apple of discord. It is poisoned by the idolatrous element. The name of Christ is excluded from the lodge room except by toleration. Masonry will have to get out of the way before Jesus Christ can reign universally. These advocates of Christ, and of righteous civil government, do not plead the unpopular side of this question just for the fun of it. It is not particularly funny to contend with your fellow citizens; there is nothing very especially edifying to be an object of derision on the street, or to hear one whisper to another of you, as you take a seat in the cars, "I would give fifty dollars to have that man killed." It is not particularly nice to make one's self odious in the sight of nine-tenths of community. They may yet kill a few more. This cause needs, it may be, a few martyrs. Lovejoy was shot at Alton, and Brown hung near Harper's Ferry. They may kill Ronayne—I think they will. [Sensation.] I haven't a doubt of it, sir. [Ronayne mirthfully, "That is not particularly edifying."] So, Mr. Chairman, I am here, not because other men are, or because they are not, but because this question, applied to the standard of my conscience tells me that it is right. Conscience must be the grand arbiter of duty.

One point remains to be settled. When the time comes to crown Christ Lord of all, all difficulties, all wrongs, all questions of politics, of labor, of society and morals,—all the questions of the world must cease their clamor before him. And Masonry has got to get out of the way before Christ is crowned.

A WIFE'S QUESTIONS.

C. T. Webb, Esq., formerly of Iowa but now a resident of Springfield, Ill., and a seceding Master Mason, was then called for to relate an experience of great interest, well illustrating the ridiculous positions the Mason is often forced to occupy for his craft. The narrative of Mr. Webb's lodge experience was told in a simple, frank way that had a double effect on the listeners.

Some eight or nine years ago, he said, I was persuaded by a Methodist Episcopal presiding elder of Upper Iowa conference to join the lodge. I presented my name, was accepted and took the first degree. I did not feel perfectly easy under the new connection, though not fixing my mind on anything in particular as being very wrong. The disgrace of the thing, to which I subjected my person, troubled me a good deal. Besides taking my clothing from me they even cut off the buttons from my flannel under-shirt because they were iron. During the disgraceful performance he consoled himself with the thought that he could stand it if they could. The rope was around his neck to hold him though he thought himself rather an inoffensive person, and his clothing was nearly all taken off, he didn't know why, but he supposed they did. After he had taken the obligation, he asked some of the brethren what they meant by it and was answered, "O, nothing!" He was so ashamed of the first night's work that he concluded to have no more to do with the order, but the same presiding elder and others would not let me off so but persuaded me to go on; so I took the third degree. That capped everything. When I was told that I had got to stand up for brother Masons, murder and treason not excepted, I bolted. I felt that I was not doing right. I found that I had got there but could hardly tell how, nor could I tell how to get away. When he was made Hiram Abiff it was in very cold weather and the uncomfortable condition of a candidate was fully realized, and he wanted them to hurry up. After they had gone through the farce of burying him they tried to raise him from the grave by the first, or Entered Apprentice grip, and then by the second grip and their hands slipped off both times with the supposed rotten flesh and some of them said, "He stinketh;" he was so mad he had a mind to jump to his feet and attack them. But soon such a feeling of horror took possession of his soul. What, thought he, if God should come to me in my folly and take me into eternity! What would be my awful state then for engaging in such follies! But finally as these thoughts rushed through his mind the Master pulled him up and whispered Mah-hah-bone in his ear. In the midst of all this folly conviction had struck deeply into his heart, and he said, I promised the Lord if he would forgive me I never would return to the lodge. I never did. [Hearty applause.] But the crisis had not yet come. He did not come out and expose the lodge. He agreed that if they would let him alone he would let them alone. I had got my hand in the bear's mouth and though I must get it out the best way I could. But he felt that he was backsliding in heart, yet God's Spirit followed him. At a revival meeting he was called upon to pray for sinners bowing at the anxious seat. He attempted to do so, but the heavens seemed as brass. The revival had come to a stand still. Masonry was hugged to the bosom of the Church. He arose before a full house and confessed that he had been duped into the society of the worst men in town, and he felt it a duty now to come out from among them and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing. And as he did so the Lord again received him. A great and precious revival followed.

About two years after this I got hold of a copy of the Cynosure and took it home where my wife read it through. She found some statements from the Morgan book that described the initiation and when I came home she asked me plainly, "Did you do that?" I remembered my Masonic jewel, a silent tongue, and said nothing. She questioned me some more but I said nothing. Soon after she got a paper which had a description of the Master Mason's initiation and was amazed and horrified at the obligation and ceremony. Again she asked me, referring to the foolish ceremony, "Is it possible you did that, Charles?" I said nothing. [Laughter.] "Dare you deny that you didn't do that?" Still I said nothing, I was so ashamed. "You did go through that. You daren't deny it!" And I had to go out of the house for shame that I dare not speak to my wife. [Great laughter.] He then made upon his mind to denounce Masonry. The lodge made every effort to persecute him by law-suits and other ways taking advantage of a time when his finances were low. But he beat them in the courts, and was willing now and always to tell the whole story.

A VOICE FROM THE PACIFIC SHORE.

At the close of this remarkable narrative, Mr. Caleb Gray of Halsey, Oregon, was called out and spoke of the condition of the reform on that Western slope. He said that soon after the settlement of the territory the legislature incorporated many lodges throughout Oregon in all the leading towns. This action gave the secret orders a good start and they have not neglected to improve it, to the great disadvantage of the best interests of the country. He was raised in a church that refused fellowship with the lodge and he upheld that testimony in earnest. He could not look upon the spread of these orders with any degree of satisfaction. He had been raised down in Fulton county, Ill., where David Brownlee was killed many years ago, as he believed and many others by the Freemasons. When slightly intoxicated Brownlee told some of the Masonic secrets and the Masons had threatened him with the penalty of his obligation. One morning his horse came home with an empty saddle and he was found some days afterwards, by the neighbors who turned out to hunt for him, with his throat cut from ear to ear and his tongue torn out of his mouth. He was intimately acquainted with a neighbor who sat on the coroner's jury who confirmed his belief that the murder was committed by the Masonic lodge. He spoke of a discussion in which he had been engaged in the neighborhood of his home, which had been the means of arousing considerable investigation into the principles of Masonry, and believed we only need to keep talking, working and praying and the lodges would all go down.

—At a late meeting of the Presbyterian ministers of this city, while discussing the subject of "ministerial etiquette" the reasonable conclusion of the body was that sharing "religious services with Freemasons or other secret societies" at funerals was especially questionable. But such a conclusion would hardly be warranted except by recognizing the idolatrous nature of the lodge.

CHICAGO MASONIC CHARITY.

MR. RONAYNE REPLIES TO THE TRIBUNE.

WENONA, ILL, JULY 27TH, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Yesterday's mail brought us the Tribune of the same morning in which you have doubtless read that celebrated article on "Masonic charity". A Dr. Rich of this place, a newly raised M. M. thought he had a "mighty" good thing and was more than jubilant on the streets, flourishing his Tribune and shouting that if he had'nt something there to convince me of wilful and deliberate lying why then he'd swallow a dose of his own pills and so give the undertaker a job. Bro. Morrison of Palatine and myself went quietly to work and hunted up a copy of the Tribune, read it, and laid it safely away to be used in the evening as a text furnished by Masonic magnanimity, or as one would say "a rod to thrash themselves." I opened my proceedings last night by reading that Tribune artiele, and then laying it aside read the authentic "Blessed Charity" report from which I proved that every statement but one in said Tribune paragraph was a gross, deliberate, wilful, Masonic lie. The amount received is correctly stated but that is the only truthful statement in the whole paragraph. There were $90,634.50 received both in cash and supplies, and almost every letter sent to the Board and containing a donation had the following express command conveyed to the President and his executive officers. I quote from "Final Report of Masonic Board of" Relief page 7: "In nearly all letters accompanying the donations the instructions as to the disposition thereof were explicit and it may be worthy of note, that these letters, coming as they did from so many different parts of the Continent should contain language almost identical, viz:—that the donations were intended 'for the relief of worthy Master Masons, their widows and orphans, who were sufferers by the fire of the eighth and ninth of October, 1871.'"

"The italics and inverted comma's are D. C. Cregier's.

Now let us see how Bro. Cregier and his henchman, Harry Duval, carried out these plain, positive instructions. I now quote from page 11, Final Report. "There has been disbursed thirty thousand six hundred and thirty one dollars and thirty seven cents for the relief of three thousand one hundred and forty five needy brethren, widows andchildren." You will observe that this sum was disbursed as actual relief to the sufferers by the fire, $30,631.37 out of $90,634.50, leaving a balance of $60,003.13. Now then, the question is what was done with this money? How was this $60,000 disposed of? Was it expended in accordance with the express command of the donors as quoted from page 7 of this "Final Report," &c? Let us now turn to page 16 and 17 of this "Final Report." On page 16 I read as follows: "To the eighteen lodges burned out we have set apart the sum of twenty thousand two hundred and sixty-seven dollars, being an average of eleven hundred and twenty-five dollars and ninety-four cents to each lodge." Now I would ask by what authority did "we" set apart these $20,267 to lodges "burned out"? Where is the command, or even the permission of the donors for so doing? But supposing that D. C. Cregier and his immaculate secretary had any semblance of authority for this unwarranted proceeding, what pretext can be furnished for the following specimen brick of Masonic benevolence? I quote from the "Final Report," &c., page 17:

"To the non-burned out lodges under the views heretofore expressed we have awarded just one-half of the per capita to those lodges having same grade or membership as determined for burned out lodges, which amounts to five thousand three hundred and one dollars, or an average of four hundred and seven dollars and seventy-seven cents to each lodge."

Putting the items donated as per Report above quoted into one sum we have:

Disbursed as actual relief,	$30,631.37.
Donated to lodges burned out for lodge purposes,	20,267.00.
Donated to lodges not burned out	5,301.00
Making a total of disbursements,	$ 56,199.37.

Whereas, the Tribune article states that the disbursements were $67,414.04. It must also be remembered that the money given to lodges was donated to them as lodges, without any warrant of authority whatsoever for so doing, but in direct violation of the express commands of the donors as stated on page 7. And although this sum of $67,414.04 is mentioned in the Report page as being distributed, yet the various appropriations as actually made flatly contradict these figures, and the printed record only accounts for the distribution of $56,199.37 of which sum $25,568 were given to lodges wherewith to buy carpets, jewels, working tools and other gew-gaws necessary for a "regular and well-governed lodge," and let it be remembered that of this sum $5.301, were given to lodges "that," as W. Master Holcomb expressed it, "never smelled smoke."

But let us read our Report a little more. On page 9, I read; "We have therefore thought proper to set apart six thousand dollars for such a Board"—that is a Board of relief. What authority had our imperious Grand Mast.. for doing such a thing? Did any letter from any o nor contain a single line permitting such a course? Not one. This sum was afterwards increased to $6,500.

Now having disposed of $20,267 to burned out lodges, and $5,301 to non-burned out lodges, and having set apart $6,500 for the establishment of of a Board of Masonic Relief to assist bummers and dead beats who are as plenty as blackberries where there is a chance to make a dollar "on the square," there was or at least there ought to be still left the sum of $27,935.13; in fact there was more than this because I have not here counted in the interest nor the value of stock on hand. But how much does Bro. Cregier say was left after thus dividing the spoils? Hear him on page 20: "But notwithstanding we find in our hands a surplus of twenty thousand dollars which under the circumstances we naturally conceive belongs to those who sent it, or rather to those whom they represent." Now will some one tell us what became of the $7935.13 which in spite of all their nice figuring still remained over and above this reckless and unwarranted squandering of the comparatively miserable sum sent by the Masonic world for the relief of their suffering brothers?

The following from page 25 of this remarkable "Final Report," &c., may seem to throw some light on this question. I still quote Cregier's report to the Masonic Board on June 24th, 1872:—"Our Secretary (Harry Duvall) and Superintendent (Jas. Morrison,) have given their whole time to this work, and have performed their duties in a satisfactory manner. Upon the former the bulk of the work has been imposed. I would therefore recommend that $200 be paid Bro. Duvall as extra remuneration. To Bro. Morrison our Superintendent, the sum of $100." Poor Morrison was not so much of a favorite with "the great I am" as Duvall, and hence he only got one-half the number of loaves and fishes. But who authorized Cregier to pay Duvall $200 and Harrison $100 "extra remuneration?" These men were paid a regular salary as may be seen from page 94 to 103 of this same "Final Report," &c. I open at random page 98:

Jan 15th. J. Morrison—labor acc't, services,		$ 50.00
H. Duvall,	Acct. Services,	50.00
N. H. Davenport,	" "	39.00
Wm. Peters,	" "	39.00
John P. Ferns,	" "	26.00

These sums are for two weeks work for each pap-sucker, as may be seen from the following on page 99:

Feb. 1st.	J. Morrison—Labor Acct.		$50.00
" "	H. Duvall,	" "	50.00
" "	N. H. Davenport,	" "	39.00
" "	Wm. Peters,	" "	39.00
" "	J. P. Ferns,	" "	26.00

Now then these men being already paid good wages for their services, I would like to know by what authority Cregier set apart for two of them—both favorites, only one superlatively so—the sum of $300, of the money sent to him for an entirely different purpose.

But perhaps it is not very well known that Bro. Cregier issued two reports both of which are to be found in this celebrated "Blessed Charity" or "Final Report." This however is the case. The Masonic Board convened for the last time on June 24th, 1872, eight months and fifteen days after the great fire, and to that assembled Board the Grand Master, D. C. Cregier, read the report from which the above quotations are taken, and which he addressed "to the officers and members of the Masonic Board of Relief." I want to call attention to the fact that in this report he states that "there has been disbursed $30,631.37 among 3,145 needy brothers, &c., giving to each one an average of $9.74, from Oct. 9th, 1871, to June 24th, 1872. What a vast benevolence! What a munificent charity! nine dollars and seventy-four cents to keep the wolf from the door for a period of eight months and fifteen days. But Bro. Cregier issued a "Special Report" to the Masonic fraternity throughout the United States, Canada, and else where see page 30 "Final Report &c. In this "Special Report" he accounts for receipts and disbursements as follows. I quote verbatum from page 32:

"The total cash receipts from all sources which have been deposited with Treasurer is.....$68,556.00
In hands of brethren at various locations subject to order of Treas.....9,696.43

Total cash,.....78,252.43
Estimated value of supplies received, 5,136.63

Total am't, cash and supplies,.....83,389.06
Total am't, cash expenditures to date, 19,257.79
Estimated value of supplies distributed, 4,136.63
Total cash and supplies received, $83,389.06
Total cash supplies distributed, 23,394.42

Now I want to know which of these two reports from the same pen is correct? The one states positively that $30,631.37 was distributed while the other just as positively asserts that only $23,394.42 were distributed both in cash and supplies. It will be seen that here there is a discrepancy of $7,236.95, and comparing this with the distribution above quoted from Cregier's report to the Masonic Board, it will at once be seen that over $7,000 at least is hidden away somewhere and entirely unaccounted for in any of the reports while if the Special Report is correct the entire deficiency would be $15,172.08.

But it will be said, "You, sir, was a member of that Board. Did you sanction this high-handed and wholesale system of favoritism? Are you not as guilty as any, being a party to such doings?" I only speak for myself and do it briefly, quoting from page 26 in reference to Cregier's Report to the Masonic Board, June 24, 1876. He says, "The foregoing report was received and on motion all the recommendations and suggestions therein contained were adopted with one dissenting vote."

This "dissenting vote" was mine, and hence I am entirely free from the odium that will ever attach itself to Cregier's mismanagement of the relief fund at the time of Chicago's great fire.

I shall now hasten on to notice the other falsehood in the Tribune's late article. It is in reference to the officers and members of the Board. The Tribune says:—

"The officers of the Board were: President, DeWitt C. Cregier; Vice President, H. F. Holcomb; Treasurer, Wiley M. Egan; Recording Secretary, Geo. K. Hazlett; Corresponding Secretary, Ed. J. Hill; and other members, Geo. R. McClellan, D. J. Avery, T. T. Gurney, C. H. Brennan, Walter A. Stevens, G. C. Smith, and C. G. Franks."

Let us now compare this with the "Final Report" itself. On page 6, I read as follows:

"On the 24th of October changes and additions were made in both officers and members, and continued until the final adjournment as follows:

M. W. DeWitt C. Cregier, 271, President.
R. W. H. F. Holcomb, 141, Vice-President.

Thus it will be observed that in the Tribune article, written by whom it may, there is but one correct statement and that in relation to the amount received. Every other statement is false, as is abundantly proved by the "Final Report" of the Masonic Board and as every Masonic lodge in the city of Chicago well knows.

In concluding this letter I would simply ask why did the German Masonic lodges of Chicago hold indignation meetings after the final adjournment of the Board? And secondly, why did not D. C. Cregier run for a third term as Grand Master, as he intended to do? Answer to both questions: Because of the shameful, disgraceful manner in which both Cregier and his henchman, Duvall, managed the few paltry dollars sent to Chicago for distribution among the Masons. I have said nothing in this letter about store contracts to R. H. Mason, and what percentage was derived therefrom, nor about other contracts for groceries, clothing, boots and shoes, etc., and how the commissions were received and divided. That may appear hereafter. For the present I submit the above statement and challenge truthful contradiction. E. RONAYNE.

A GREAT WORK OPENING IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

SPRINGERTON, White Co., Ill.
July 24th, 1876.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—After giving two lectures and one sermon in Newtown, Livingston county, where twenty-five years ago I commenced to preach, I came to Altamont, Effingham county, where I found friends and made arrangements for future work; and from thence into Egypt, which term applies to all of the State south of the C. & M. R. R. Springerton is a pleasant village on the Springfield and S. E. R. R., in a heavily timbered country, which has for the past two years suffered greatly from excess of rain. It has two churches, the Christian and "The Church of the Latter Day Saints," who repudiate Brigham Young and polygamy, but acknowledge Joseph Smith. I was met at the station by our faithful friend Dr. James Springer, who took me to his pleasant home, where I have since enjoyed the hospitalities of his household.

The evening of the 20th was dark and rainy, but the Christian church was well filled, and they listened attentively for more than two hours. The evenings of the 21st and 22nd were pleasant but extremely warm, but the house was full and many around the door and windows. All seemed interested, a decided majority received the truth with gladness, and a few were made very angry; but on the whole there was good order and everything indicated that the community was self-respectful and courteous. The last evening was devoted mainly to a discussion of the relations of Masonry to civil government and political parties; and our platform and candidates were heartily approved.

Yesterday, Sabbath, I preached twice in the Christian church, and trust that the Lord did and will bless his truth. This whole region of southern Illinois is white for the harvest. Probably in no part of the State is the way so fully opened for the prosecution of the anti-secret reform, and I am happy to announce the name of Dr. Jas. Springer of Springerton, as an able and conscientious lecturer, who will respond to all calls in this part of the State. You will please put his name on the list of lecturers, and I hope that at our approaching State meeting we may make provision for a canvass of all this part of the State.

From here I go north to Effingham, LaSalle, and Will counties, and thence homeward.

Yours for the Lord,
H. H HINMAN.

THE GOOD WORK AT PLAINFIELD, ILL.

PLAINFIELD, Ill., July 22, 1876.

Isa. lxii., Ez. iii. and xxxiii. "Nevertheless if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it, if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul." These words are forcibly brought to mind by the events of the past week.

The evenings of July 18th, 19th and 20th we were favored with the presence of Mr. E. Ronayne of Keystone Lodge, Chicago, who worked the first three degrees of Masonry, a degree each night, to a thoughtful congregation.

If prayer is the soul's sincere desire, the burden of a sigh, then many a prayer must have entered the ear of the Most High, that a father, husband, brother or son might escape this snare of the fowler, and the rather walk in the light as Christ is in the light.

We should have felt ashamed as all Masons should feel, were it not that this was only a true open demonstration of what many a man among our acquaintances at oft-repeated times, after his initiation, passes through under cover of darkness and secrecy, pretending there is nothing connected therewith to conflict with his duty to his God, his country, his neighbor, his family or himself. And although we had for years been studying the spirit of this institution and heard and read various coroborating expositions of it by those who felt it to be their duty to enlighten the people, yet it was like hearing and reading of the Centennial Exposition. We have the description of the vast work, the extent of the grounds, the number and description of the buildings with their varions compartments, the different nations represented, with the emblems of each, and the distinguished dignitaries present; but to retain the most lasting impressions of its greatness and workings we must see it. Even so in this case, and Mr. Ronayne from occupying important positions in the lodge demonstrates it so thoroughly, taking the Bible on one side and Masonry on the other, showing the discrepancies between them from the building of Solomon's temple to the declaration of remission of sins through the blood of Christ alone, that one not at all conversant with Holy Writ can see their disagreement; and if we felt disgust before that Christians should affiliate with that which tends to cripple the church, we are now nearly horrified that these men will try to serve two masters, Baal and God, in this land of Gospel light.

The blow has been dealt with precision and success. The officers comprised several churchmen from our midst, a deacon taking the sublime degree of Master Mason being raised Hiram-like, after the flesh clave from his bones. It seems as if Masonry had been indicted and found guilty. No one that heard it can hope to prove its falsity, for there was an opportunity given for that while the speaker was here, and the fraternity should rejoice that they can now so easily emerge from their bondage and should do so without fear of Masonic law into the freedom of the nineteenth century.

We hope every one, but especially the young people who gave their attention to the lecture, will study diligently the Scriptures and follow Christ's command to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them," and seek unto Him who is the way, the truth and the life; and may the Lord raise up a greater number who shall dare to own his cause, nor blush to speak his name.

Respectfully yours, COM.

Samuel Hale Makes Dust of "Brick" Pomeroy.

After Mr. Ronayne's visit to Medina county, Ohio, the Medina Democrat thought to demolish him with a specimen "brick" from a seedy copperhead sheet in this city, but the missile is reduced to powder by Mr. Hale's letter and damages nothing but the eyes and appearance of those who tried to use it. The article and reply are here given:

Every reader of the Democrat will remember the Anti-masonic meetings that were held at Phœnix Hall last winter, and the interest taken in them by the citizens of Medina and vicinity. High Constable Samuel Hale, the Grand Master of the lodge which Ronayne instituted, will have to rise and explain why this is thus, or step down and out. The following article, taken from Pomeroy's Democrat, shows up Ronayne in a bad light;

"Edward Ronayne, Past Master Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago." is the way some fraud bills and announces himself to the public as a lecturer against Masonry. There is such a Masonic lodge as the above, meeting at 62 North Clark St., Chicago, but there never was a person named Edward Ronayne or Romayne a member of that body as officer or private. Some of these days when we meet that fellow we will pay for a ticket to his lecture to hear a Past Master tell what he knows about Masonry, and after we have paid him money to hear him as such officer, will arrest him for obtaining money under false pretenses, and if he does not prove himself to be what he represents himself to be will see him immured in jail. A person can advertise himself to be the father of George Washington and tell any number of lies, but if a person pays money to such a person on the strength of such advertisements and is deceived, he has his remedy at law.

Masons do not care how much swindlers swindle others, they cannot swindle us. No good Mason will do that which he promises not to do. If the one who promises lies to those to whom the promise was made, he will lie to those to whom he made no promises. The man who divulges the secrets of Masonry must appear before his audience naked even to his soul, and till a person thus stands before his audience he is a fraud.

Masons are not deceived by such pretenders as the one who issues the bill our correspondent sends. He is not a Mason who sends it or he would not take the trouble to bother us with such stuff. If outsiders can fool outsiders that is their business, not ours.

A Masonic Dodge.

Mr. Editor:—In your issue of June 15th you publish an editorial from Pomeroy's Democrat, which you say "shows Ronayne in a bad light," and call on "High Constable Samuel Hale, Grand Master of Ronayne lodge to explain, or step down and out." Not wishing to do the latter I will attempt the former.

Brick's extract asserts that there was never a "person named Edward Ronayne belonging to Keystone lodge, 639, Chicago." In this extract Brick asserts the truth, evidently for the purpose of conveying an untruth.

The dodge is in the name. Past Master Ronayne's first name is Edmond, not Edward. Brick also says "Masons do not care how much swindlers swindle others, they cannot swindle us (Masons)."

What need we care how much Masons deceive themselves by stuffing their old clothes with straw: they cannot deceive us. That ruse was played out near fifty years ago, perhaps before Brick shed his pantalets. Yours upon the square,

Samuel Hale.

Grand Master of Phœnix Lodge, 999, Medina, Ohio.

Our Centennial Letter.

Home—Railway Smashup on the Way—The Terrible Heat at Philadelphia—Christian Encouragement—God against Secretism—More Confidence needed—The Lodge weak—The Cynosure Banner marked from afar.

To the readers of the Christian Cynosure:—I am home again in Downers Grove, Ill., after an absence of nearly two and one half months spent in tract distribution, and advertising our "National Christian Association," and its organ, the "Christian Cynosure" at the Centennial in Philadelphia. I left this, my pet work, very reluctantly, as I would leave alone a very dear child. I passed through while there very severe ordeals, and yet I never for one moment regretted being there, because my Lord was manifestly with me, doing a great work, pouring light into the darkness of secrecy, and breaking the fetters of the bound. I could see the darkness give way, and flee before the light, and the broken fetters fall from the enslaved.

I left when failing health and strength admonished me that I could do no more till recruited; or if attempted it might be wholly disastrous to health if not to life. Many people, probably much younger and stronger than I, yielded to the intense heat and fell dead, some of whom were said to have died of heat, and some of sun stroke. It was not deemed safe for me to remain longer both because of the heat and my frail condition. Forgive me this allusion.

Well, I left on the morning of the thirteenth of July, and came through Pittsburgh, Allegheny city &c., to Loudenville. Just below Allegheny city, there had been a heavy rain, which brought rubbish from the hills and covered the track so that we were obliged to have the track cleared which detained us but a short time. But among the Loudon hills about 12 o'clock at night our train was thrown from the track by the debris brought from the hills, by a similar rain an hour before. Our engine was very badly broken, and iron scattered all around, and it and the tender made a complete wreck. The ties shoved along into piles; the rails bent up into various shapes, the trucks from all the coaches, but one piled with ties and rails, and our coaches shot over these piles bounding along very much to our discomfort. Here we remained from 12 at night till 7 a. m. before relief came from Crestline. The whole disaster did not occupy more than a half minute, and perhaps not that. Some one cried out as soon as we had come to a stand still: "All right only off the track, no great harm done," and at the same time a cry for help was heard, and instantly an employee on the train emerged into the darkness with lantern in hand, and found the engineer with his head just out of the mud and water, (for our disaster occurred between two banks of a deep cut where mud and water had accumulated to the depth of some 15 or 18 inches as it seemed from the appearance of those who waded in to examine the extent of our wreck.) The engineer, fireman, and baggage master were badly injured, but it was thought not fatally. Some few others but slightly. It was a wonderful preservation of life in such a crash. It seemed to me that God put his hand right down there between us and danger, and rebuked danger, and it fled.

This detention brought our train into Chicago some 14 hours later than its regular time. I think I never witnessed so little scare in time of danger. Very few seemed at all agitated. There was one woman cried out like a woman, and perhaps a man might have done the same had he been where she was. She was sitting in the back seat near where the platforms below and projections over head came crashing together and bringing the two doors together as one, and crashing in the windows, timbers breaking, and glass rattling like hail around her, and she only screamed like a woman. Well, I think it was universally acknowledged to be one of the most merciful disasters we had ever witnessed. We were very glad it was no worse; and I think some hearts were very thankful for so marked and wonderful escape.

Of the heat in Philadelphia I might further state, it was so intense that careful men walked in the streets under unbrellas with hat in hand; horses dropped dead in the streets in great numbers, and in Camden, in New Jersey, just across the Delaware from Philadelphia, 140 soldiers in their encampment dropped in one day and evening; how many were dead I did not learn. How my feeble old frame endured it I am unable to say, except by special interposition of a kind Providence. This I believe, and to him give thanks. He has been with me through it all, and given me joy in his presence and his love has made my heart to sing with gladness.

O how, too, it has cheered my heart to know there were so many loving Christian hearts moved by the Spirit of God, praying for me! O how I shall cherish the sweet remembrance of it, with thankfulness till memory fails, if that can be! But dear friends and brethren, "let us work while the day lasts." We have as yet done little more than throw out our skirmishing lines. The great battle is yet to be fought. But victory is certain, because the God of battles is our leader; and he hates iniquity, and will trample it under his feet. If the Lord will I will speak again. A. D. Freeman.

[In a letter sent from Philadelphia, July 7th, but delayed in the mails, Elder Freeman writes:]

If we gather up the folds of God's garments of salvation around about us, we may well "fear no evil." O how I wish all Christians would at once take this stand; and fearlessly make the attack on sworn secrecy! The beginning of the end would surely have come. When secretists get the impression that God is with us and against them, with very few exceptions they are awe-stricken and blanche. I have a case of this kind that occurred to-day. A man, I should think near sixty, affirmed that a certain part of the oath of the seventh degree which I repeated, he had never taken, and yet said he was a Royal Arch Mason. I said to him, "I am pained to hear you say that, for it is certainly a part of the oath of the Royal Arch degree, and you say you have not taken that part." I said further, "I am an old man and going to die soon and so are you, and we shall meet this denial you make. I am sorry." His countenance fell he looked daunted, and I have no doubt wished he had not said it. He had previously given me distinctly to understand that he had little or no interest in the fraternity; joined when young, and for many years had not had anything to do with them, and just about this juncture another Mason came up, who, though not an earnest Mason, held this man in fear and prepared him to make the denial he did. They were both afraid of each other, which suggests this thought, that if all the Masons who knew themselves to be displeased with the order knew as well the feelings of all others who are dissatisfied, our work would be very much of it done. And if this were true of those outside, as much more would be done, and if these two classes understood each other in these things, there would be but little more to be done. For the comparatively few that would be left, knowing these facts would be so weakened in confidence in their imagined great strength, that they would sue for peace and favor. Now this case is only one among a great many that have occurred here with only some variation. Now one fact more. If the press and pulpit only understood what weakness they have to deal with in opposing sworn secrecy, they would be in the front ranks of opposers. The truth is, their strength lies in the fearfulness of these out and inside, arising from menaces and bluster. They are men, and cowards, or they would be willing to compete with and take their chances with men on a common footing. But not so. They have not confidence in their own ability, and therefore cowards, and so enter into a conspiracy against mankind, and then call themselves benevolent to keep their own courage up and deceive those outside like the boy who tried to whistle his courage up, while passing the grave-yard, and so deceive himself and others about the courage he had not got. The work goes on; people have heard of our book case hundreds of miles away, and when they come here they seek the Cynosure, and tract and book case. Yesterday or to-day a man from Boston came here and told me he had been hunting for my place till he had found it. I asked him how he knew anything of it. He said a friend of his had been here and learned about our work, the Cynosure, tracts and books, and when he got home told him of them, and he wanted to talk with me, but there are so many that I can generally have but few words with any one. The matter is pretty well advertized, and yet there is vastly more to be done than has been. Well, let us praise God for what he has done and move on fearlessly.

CORNER-STONE LAYING ORDERED FROM WASHINGTON.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 6, 1876.

EDS. CYNOSURE;—On the 4th inst. the modern pagan society of Free and Accepted Masons laid the corner stone of the new United States Post-office building at Covington, Ky., sprinkling as usual the pagan elements of corn, wine, and oil sacred to Bacchus and Ceres.

The Knights of Pythias and Odd-fellows expected to participate in the honor (?) but their masters the Masons, took good care that they were not mentioned in the government invitation to participate, which was forwarded from Washington. This so cut and chagrined the Knights of Pythias and Odd-fellows that they refused to have anything to do with the affair, and so did not turn out. Will these outside secret societies never learn what miserable cat-paw associations they are? How little they are respected by their parent organization, the Masons? Can they never learn to emancipate themselves from their foolish delusion that they are respectable bodies or even secret ones, and come out manfully and help break up and destroy the greatest fraud and curse of the age—Freemasonry? This affair raises the question, have we a Masonic government at Washington? Matters certainly look very suspicious; and what non-Masons can expect to gain by the election of either Tilden or Hayes, who are both Freemasons, [Information thus far received at this office shows that neither of these gentlemen are Freemasons.—ED. CYNOSURE.] is something no man can find out. Certain it is that I shall not be caught in the trap of voting for either, and I hope no Anti-mason will.

Permit me to ask you, is there a Walker and Kirkpatrick electoral ticket for Ohio yet formed, and if not, why not? Is it not yet time? If formed what arrangements have been made for printing and distributing tickets? I ask for the reason, if I cannot get such a ticket to vote I shall not go near the polls. No Mason can have my vote.

I said the outside secret societies are not secret. This seems a paradox, and yet it is true. I met a Mason to-day who had never been initiated into the Knights of Pythias, and yet he knew all about the iron and rubber spikes, used in the third degree of that order to test the candidate's fortitude. He had never read any published expose of the matter, but was perfectly familiar with the ceremony. Now, how came he to know this? The answer is simple enough. Some brother Mason had been initiated therein and told his intimate Masonic friends, this gentleman among others all about it, and they then probably had a good laugh over the folly, and no doubt drank a wine imbibing toast thereafter to the memory of Hiram, the poor widow's true and worthy son! The truth of it is the Knights of Pythias and Odd-fellows are much bigger fools than the world's people, because knowing the doubtful propriety of the ground they tread, they might reasonably suspect the integrity of Masonic ground, but the great majority are so miserably simple they do not. They need light more urgently than anybody else, but will, from insensate John donkey stupidity, be about the last to receive it. You can answer this through your columns or otherwise as you may think proper.

OUR MAIL.

J. W. Lewis, New Bedford, Bureau Co., Ill., writes:

"All secret societies spring from the same root and partake of the same spirit, therefore I pronounce Ichabod upon them all."

J. R. Piepgras, Tomah, Monroe Co., Wis., writes:

"A lecturer is needed through this region badly. Secret society nests are all around."

Joseph A. Bent, Wheaton, Ill, writes:

"As I have opportunity I advise people to take your paper."

J. G. Stauffer, Milford Square, Buck Co., Pa., writes:

"I am a Pennsylvania German. This State is thickly settled with them. When the Morgan case was up they were most all strong Anti-mason men, and they have yet Anti masonic principles. They only need a little enlightenment. They ought to read an Anti-masonic paper—that would bring them out. The Pennsylvania Germans are not so greedy to go into a new thing as the English people, but if they once take hold of a thing that they think is really good, they stick to it like bulldogs. They are no beer-drinking people."

We think our readers will be interested in this description of some of the points in the German character; and we hope our friends in Pa., will do all they can to introduce the Cynosure among them. They seem to be of the stuff to make good reformers.

J. P. of James, Reed's Landing, WabashaCo., Minn., writes:

"I thank God the Cynosure still lives, and the cause of Anti-masonry is growing brighter."

A friend who sometimes grows impatient waiting for the wide circulation of the Cynosure, exclaims,

"Shall we ever live at this poor, dying rate!"

We ask all who rejoice that the Cynosure still lives to contribute their part towards putting it in a healthier condition; all except those who have already done more than their share. The citizens of the country are suffering for the want of the Cynosure, and the Cynosure suffers for want of the support of the citizens.

J. W. Thompson, Dadeville, Dade Co., Mo., writes:

"We cannot relish very 'strong meat' as yet, away here in southwest Missouri, but let me assure you the leaven is at work."

While we have always had an uncompromising hatred of the sin of slavery in whomsoever found, we have a sympathy and anxious solicitude for the true welfare of the Southern people, and joyfully emphasize every indication that truth is germinating in the once slavery-cursed States.

A friend from Andersonville, Ind., writes:

"I have taken the third degree in Masonry. I have been a close observer of the workings of the institution both inside the lodge room and outside, and have become impressed with the iniquity abounding in the midst thereof. While it does not build up the morals of the community, it tends to tear down Christianity and build up a system of idolatry more slavish and corrupting than any other institution with which our land is cursed; and every honorable man, and Christian especially, must abhor any fraternity or institution that would thus corrupt the morals and attempt to tear down that which is the most sacred to a Christian's heart: the right to worship God agreeably to his own conscience. These orders claim to be moral, yet their leading men by their actions prove it to be directly the opposite by their failing to ever attend religious worship, by Sabbath-breaking, profanity, licentiousness, and I may say almost every kind of vice. Feeling that it is not right to longer endure these galling bonds I am fully determined to break them and be free once more. I am young in years. My father is a leading Mason here. If I take a withdrawal card I would still feel bound by the obligations of a Mason. Am I right?"

By holding a withdrawal card a person acknowledges it to be his duty to remain faithful to the order; the card is an evidence of good standing.

Mrs. R. M. Webb, Springfield, Ill, writes:

"We are very hungry for some good Anti-masonic literature."

A. C. Moffatt, Albion, Iowa, writes:

"Since Mr. Stoddard was here Masonry is at a lower ebb, and Anti-masons speak out more freely."

Abraham Good, Martinville, Lancaster Co., Pa., writes:

"I always have been opposed to secret organizations. The Cynosure expresses my views exactly."

C. D. Hoyt, Mundy, Genesee Co., Mich., writes:

"We are building a church in which we can worship without being trammeled with secret societies. There is a considerable anti-secret sentiment here, but the people seem to be afraid of the huge monster, and it is hard to convince them that in this fear lies its own strength. Could we rally them at the polls they would find that the terrible giant was nothing but perfect weakness. I am an old foe; lived in the days of Morgan, and know more about it than Masons want I should tell, but I shall not hold my peace for bribes or threats."

Robert Berry, Carbondale, Pa., writes:

"I read your papers and then give them away. I have sent them into different States, counties and townships, and I read them to Masons and Odd-fellows."

C. R. Ellsworth, Illinois City, Ill., writes:

"This town is filled up with Masons and Odd-fellows and many who begin to oppose secrecy. Our Methodist church is composed chiefly of secret men, our U. B. church of anti-secret men."
